remove their present incompetent Democratic rulers. Until then the credit and good faith of the nation must be maintained. Already this Administration has borrowed $162,315,400. About one-third of this loan can not mature before ten years, and draws 5 per cent interest, while the remaining two-thirds draws 4 per cent interest and will not mature before thirty years. No man with abundant assets whose finances were only temporarily deranged would for one moment entertain a proposition to mortgage those assets for a period of thirty years at a high rate of interest merely for the purpose of meeting a temporary emergency. A short-time loan bearing low interest is what he would aim to secure simply as a matter of business. According to the morning papers, and judging from the amendments proposed by the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. BARTLETT], the Administration proposes, and no one doubts that the President now contemplates, making a large loan, probably $100,000,000, to run for a period of thirty years at 4 per cent interest. There is no man on this floor who believes it necessary to impose upon the American people this enormous interest charge of $120,000,000 to tide over the present emergency, and yet we all know it will be done unless we pass this bill and give the President authority to issue a five-year bond drawing only 3 per cent interest. A five-year loan, such as is authorized by this bill, will be as effective in meeting the emergency as a thirty-year loan would be.

By passing this bill, therefore, we afford the President an opportunity to save to the people in interest alone on the money he deems necessary and proposes to borrow the sum of $105,000,000. Surely no Republican can consistently vote against a proposition of that kind. Having passed a bill to increase our revenue, if we now pass the pending measure and thereby provide for the immediate necessity of the gold-redemption fund and for the daily deficiency in revenue, the Republican party will have discharged its duty to the country in so far as it is now possible for the representatives of that party in this House to accomplish that end. Then if the President wants the opportunity to make the contemplated loan on short time at a low rate he can, by the aid of his friends in the Senate, secure its passage as he secured the passage of another measure on a similar occasion. If he does not want it, or does not exert his influence to secure its passage, and issues a long-time, high-interest-bearing bond, the responsibility for such action rests on him and his party, not upon the Republicans of this House.

The fact that the bonds authorized by this bill are payable in coin can not in reason be urged against its passage. It will not effect their sale. The $162,315,400 of bonds already issued by this Administration are payable in coin. In fact, all bonds issued by the Government since the beginning of the war and now outstanding are payable in coin. To make this or future issue of bonds payable in gold would be construed by the world as an indication that the Government of the United States did not intend to pay its outstanding obligations in the best money of the world, and the result would be the depreciation of those obligations in the hands of the present holders. For the same reason the bonds should not be made payable in gold and silver, as suggested by some of the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber.

But, sir, the saving of $105,000,000 in interest is not the only merit this bill possesses. Under the act of 1875 the President has authority, through his Secretary, to issue and sell the bonds of the United States as he has done in the past, and he may select his law partner or any other friend as the purchaser of such bonds. No man will pretend to say that this is either just or right to the American people. Already, in expectation of another bond issue under secret contract to favorite individuals or syndicates, the agents of the Rothschilds, the Morgans, and the Belmonts are crowding the little offices of the great hotels of this city, waiting like vultures for an opportunity to again light upon their prey, as they did last spring. Is there a man on this floor who wishes to see the people of the United States again disgraced by the sale of their bonds to a malodorous foreign syndicate? Not one. And yet certain gentlemen on this side of the House propose to vote against the first section of this bill, which contains the following provision, to wit:

> Whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall offer any of the bonds authorized for sale by this act or by the resumption act of 1875, he shall advertise the same and authorize subscriptions therefor to be made at the Treasury Department and at the subtreasury and designated depositories of the United States.

This provision if adopted will most emphatically emphasize the difference between the policy of the Republican party in respect to the sale of Government bonds and the policy of the Democratic party in that respect, as practiced by Mr. Cleveland. A vote, therefore, against this section may be more correctly said to be an indorsement of Mr. Cleveland's policy of selling bonds by secret contract to foreign syndicates on long time at high rates of interest than a vote in its favor can be said to be a surrender to Mr. Cleveland and an indorsement of what we as a party have in the past condemned.

This provision will not only compel the Secretary of the Treasury to offer the bonds issued under this act to the American people, but it will also prevent the sale of any bonds, whether issued under this act or under the act of 1875, by private contract to a domestic or foreign syndicate, until the people have had an opportunity to purchase them.

There is another objection urged against the passage of this bill by members on this side that deserves attention. It is claimed that this measure, if it becomes a law, will authorize the retirement of greenbacks and therefore should not pass. In answer to this let me say that there is absolutely no foundation for a claim of this kind. The bill under consideration expressly provides that "nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal or modify an act entitled 'An act to forbid the further retirement of United States notes,' approved May 31, 1878." This proviso will continue in full force and effect the act which makes it unlawful for the Secretary of the Treasury or any official under him to cancel or retire any more of the United States legal-tender notes, and which also requires him when such notes are redeemed or received into the Treasury, under any law from any source whatever, to reissue and pay them out again, and thus keep them in circulation.

Another objection urged by some is that the people are opposed to issuing Government bonds in times of peace, and that to authorize their issue at such times is contrary to the policy of the Republican party. That the people disapprove of any increase of our public debt in times of peace is undoubtedly true. This sentiment is only natural; but when they know, as every man in this House does, that bonds will be issued in the near future, on the theory that it is necessary to replenish the gold reserve and maintain our public credit, then I say it is our duty to require such bonds to be issued on the most favorable terms possible, and afford to the people an opportunity to take them, if they so desire, instead of first tendering them to a foreign or domestic syndicate.

In reporting this measure the committee, therefore, have not violated the sentiment of the people referred to, nor have they transgressed the policy of the Republican party. It was in deference to that sentiment, as well as in deference to the individual judgment of the majority of the committee, that they reported a bill in line with the policy of the Republican party in the last House. The bill now under consideration is in form and substance almost identical with the bill presented by the present Speaker at the last session of the Fifty-third Congress and which received a vote of approval from every Republican in that House except two.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Has not that action of the Republican minority of that House been universally commended by the Republican press of the country?

Mr. TAWNEY. The action of the Republicans of the Fifty-third Congress in supporting that measure was not only universally commended by the Republican press, but approved by the people, and in every State in which an election has since been held the Republican party has been triumphantly victorious. [Applause on the Republican side.]

That measure was proposed, too, at a time when the conditions were exactly what they are to-day, a depleted gold reserve, a deficient revenue, and a proposed thirty-year bond issued at a high rate of interest. Proposing this measure, therefore, under these circumstances, will certainly meet with as much favor among the rank and file of the Republican party and will be received by the Republican press throughout the country in the same spirit in which it was received and commended at that time, and if it should become a law it will relieve a situation in our public finances which at the present time threatens more serious consequences to the people than they have yet experienced under the present Administration. That this is so, and to show to this House that the people are alive to the situation and recognize the importance of modifying, in effect, the existing authority of the Secretary of the Treasury in respect to the issue and sale of Government bonds, permit me to read from a letter received this morning, written by a constituent, Hon. C. S. Crandall, a merchant of Owatonna, Minn., and a man of excellent judgment, who is in touch with the people in his community. In this letter Mr. Crandall says:

> I want to ask you, and through you the Republican majority of the House, to legislate for the people for a time. I want your committee to bring in and urge the passage of a bill providing for a coin bond to be issued in denominations of $100, bearing interest at 3 per cent. Such bonds presented to the common people of this country through the agency of the national banks, would be taken about as fast as they could be offered by the people of small means. The money hoarded in the stockings of the country would find a place for investment in such a bond, and the patriotism of the people would be increased and assured by making them partners in business with the Government. We would not have to send gold abroad to pay either interest or principal, and foreign holders could not injure the credit of the country and precipitate panics by putting them on the market at a depreciated rate either when war was threatened here or otherwise. Such a loan would benefit the people by giving a place for investing small savings. It would be the most popular and the best way to get needed money for the Government. * * * Let me thank you and your colleagues for attending to business at this time in a patriotic way.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON], who are the special representatives of the Administration on this floor, have told us that the bonds to be authorized by this act could not be sold if they were offered as a popular loan, for the reason that there is no gold in the country with which the people could purchase them. In answer to this let me read from another letter just received from a constituent, Mr. C. F. Greening, a reliable merchant residing in the village of Grand Meadow, Minn., a man who is abundantly able to carry out any proposition to the Government or to a private individual which he might make. This gentleman says:

It is plainly evident that something must be done to keep the gold reserve up, and there are two ways to do it. Either tariff, to act at once, or another bond issue. If bonds, make them a short-time coin bond, in small denominations—say $10 and up, a popular loan, 2 per cent. interest, redeemable after two years, at the pleasure of the Government, and a legal tender for any amount. Sell them at par and give the poor people a chance to invest, as the French Government does. I want some $20,000 of them now, and could sell $50,000 in a week and furnish the gold for them. For God's sake, and the sake of the American people, do not let the syndicates have them. * * * "Them's my sentiments," briefly expressed.

Yours, for the war, either with a gun or a ballot.

If the little village of Grand Meadow can furnish $50,000 in gold in exchange for short-time low-interest-bearing bonds, it is safe to say that the State of Minnesota alone could furnish $50,000,000, or one-half the amount which the President contemplates borrowing for the purpose of maintaining the public credit.

This talk, therefore, about the people not being able to take a loan of their own Government and furnish the gold therefor is unjust and unpatriotic and deserves the severest reproach from the people who are thus misrepresented on this floor.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that in my judgment this bill should pass, because it will enable Mr. Cleveland to make the loan we are assured he intends to make for a period of five years instead of thirty, at 3 per cent interest instead of 4, and thereby save to the people about $105,000,000; because it will prevent the future sale of Government bonds to a syndicate of any kind and require the Secretary of the Treasury to first offer our bonds to our own people; because it will require him to keep the proceeds of the sale of bonds in the gold redemption fund and separate from the cash in the Treasury, to be applied to the redemption of the United States legal-tender notes, and to no other purpose; because it will enable the Secretary of the Treasury to immediately supply the daily deficiency in revenue caused by the free-trade legislation of the Fifty-third Congress, and, whether necessary or not, it will thereby assure "those apprehensive among our own people" of the financial soundness of their Government and "reassure the world" of our ability and determination to meet in any emergency every obligation we, as a nation, incur.

And, further, I believe we should pass this bill because it will again demonstrate to the world that the Republican party, born as it was out of the highest aspirations of a great people, is to-day, as it has always been, equal to any emergency the Government may be placed in, whether caused by disloyalty or by Democratic incompetency.

It therefore becomes us as the representatives of that party, and as the representatives of a great people, to discard our personal and political prejudices and bring to bear upon the vote we are about to cast our highest intelligence and the most sterling qualities of the most pure and lofty patriotism. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CRISP. I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, the bill which has been reported by the Committee on Ways and Means is intended to provide for the redemption of United States legal-tender notes and to supply a deficiency in our revenues. For one purpose it permits the sale of bonds, and for the other it authorizes the issuance of certificates of indebtedness; but for both purposes it increases our interest-bearing debt. Except for the special rule which prevents us, we would offer as a substitute for this measure a bill which we think would render it unnecessary to sell bonds to redeem these notes, and which would utilize our profit on the silver bullion now in the Treasury to meet any deficiency which might occur. No prudent man, in the management of his private affairs, would hesitate long in his choice between these two propositions. Certainly none of us, if acting for ourselves, would incur a debt to defray our ordinary expenses when we could employ assets which would otherwise remain idle; and as the representatives of the people it is our plain duty to use what we have instead of borrowing money and paying interest on it.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, the saving of interest is not the only, nor, perhaps, the greatest advantage in coining that silver. It would add $53,000,000 to the circulating medium of the country, thus giving some stimulus to commerce and industrial entreprise. Again, sir, it is a very sensible way—indeed, it is the most sensible way—to forever obliterate all trace of that evil policy which bought one metal to be stored as bullion and paid for it in the coin of another metal. The coinage of that silver is a logical sequence to the act repealing the law under which it was purchased. How else will we dispose of it, if we do not coin it? Shall it lie in the Treasury as a dead investment, or shall it be sold as a mere commodity in the open market, and thus still further depress the price of silver? Not a single word can be said in favor of selling it, or in favor of retaining it in idleness, while its use would prove a twofold good—economizing interest and enlarging the circulation.

The most uncompromising advocate of gold monometallism could consent to the passage of our substitute without in the slightest degree sacrificing his convictions. It does not involve the question of a standard; it does not attempt to restore silver to its former and proper privilege; it merely adds a certain amount of silver to what is already in circulation, and gradually converts the coin notes, which have been issued in payment for silver bullion, into certificates calling for silver dollars. We could concede the claim of our opponents that silver is a cheap money without injury to our case here, because the only point to be considered in passing on this question is the extent to which a discredited medium can be safely employed. No man who possesses any knowledge of the subject will pretend that this is susceptible of an exact definition or demonstration. The only infallible test is, that when it depreciates it is too abundant; but it is equally true that it can not be considered too abundant until it does begin to depreciate.

A great statesman—a leader of the Senate in the golden age of American statesmanship and a Senator who thought more profoundly and more clearly on financial questions than any of his contemporaries—recorded it as his belief that this Government could carry a paper circulation equal to twice its annual revenue without promising to redeem it in anything, by simply making it receivable for public dues. I am inclined, myself, to think that he was safely within the truth when expressing that opinion; but I fully realize that the question is too delicate in its nature and too far reaching in its consequences to justify us in blindly following the opinion of any man, however wise we may know him to have been. It is a question upon which Congress can not afford to try any rash experiment. But, sir, with the experience of this and other countries before us, we ought to find no insurmountable difficulty in judging how much of a less favored coin can be circulated on an equality with a more favored one. No conservative legislator would be willing to proceed contrary to this experience, but it would be an inexcusable timidity which would shrink from following a path that it points out as both safe and plain.

Looking first to our own country, it is found that we have to-day, in round numbers, four hundred and twenty-three millions in silver dollars and silver certificates. That they circulate on a perfect parity with gold no man has yet been bold enough to deny. For a time, it is true, the more ignorant advocates of a single standard asserted that this parity was maintained because the Government was pledged to redeem silver dollars and silver certificates in gold; but well-informed men, of course, have understood all the time that there is not the least semblance of an authority in the law for redeeming silver dollars in anything, or for redeeming silver certificates in anything but silver dollars. Perhaps the uninformed ones will agree with us when they learn that the Secretary of the Treasury himself supports this view and has declared in an official communication that the practice of his Department has conformed to the law in this particular. In response to a resolution of inquiry addressed to him by the Senate, Mr. Carlisle says:

The law providing for the redemption or exchange of silver certificates, which requires that such certificates shall be redeemed or exchanged, in kind, for standard silver dollars, has, so far as this Department has information, been strictly complied with by the Treasury of the United States and the various subtreasury offices, and no gold coin has been given in exchange for such certificates or standard silver dollars.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in the extract which I have just read, makes it perfectly plain that our silver circulation is not supported by gold, but that it supports itself.

Our adversaries rejoin, however, that even if it is true that four hundred and twenty-three millions of silver can be maintained at parity it does not follow that one hundred and seventy-seven millions more can be safely added to it. On this point we have no experience of our own to guide us, but the experience of a country similarly, though less favorably, situated is both valuable and instructive. France, with only 39,000,000 people, maintains a silver circulation equal to $650,000,000, every dollar of which is a full legal tender, and no dollar of which is redeemable in gold, and there is never the slightest disparity between their gold and silver coin. If the French Republic can circulate $650,000,000 worth of silver as a money of final payment at a ratio of 15½ to 1, certainly, with almost double her population, with four times her volume of business, and with more than twenty times her resources, we could circulate even a greater amount at a ratio of 16 to 1. And yet, sir, if every ounce of silver bullion in the Treasury were coined into silver dollars we would then have less than $602,000,000 as against $650,000,000 for France. With an almost unlimited demand in private business operations, with a tax demand, Federal, State, county, and municipal, exceeding annually $1,000,000,000, and with a silver circulation of less than $602,000,000, no economic force could be generated sufficient to separate the value of our gold and silver coins and keep them separated.

COIN NOTES.

But, Mr. Speaker, as indefensible as is the action of the majority in preferring to sell bonds rather than to use the seigniorage, even that is more defensible than their conduct in denying to us an opportunity to propose our method of dealing with the coin notes issued in the purchase of silver bullion, and at the same time refusing to propose any method themselves. There is not a line in the pending bill calculated to relieve the Treasury so far as the notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, are concerned. It grants additional authority to provide for redemption of United States notes (though the law in that respect is already ample enough), but it contains no provision whatever for redeeming what are known as the Sherman notes; and this, too, in the face of the fact that in the present condition of the Treasury every time the Secretary redeems one of them in gold he does so in palpable violation of the law. What I mean to say by this is, that there is no gold in the Treasury except that which has been received for bonds sold under the resumption act, and the gold thus acquired can not be lawfully applied to purposes other than those specified in that act. It seems to me that there ought to be no difference of opinion on this point. The act of January 14, 1875, commonly known as the resumption act, under which alone the Secretary claims the right to sell bonds, is perfectly explicit, both in its terms and in its intention. Its title properly and briefly describes it as "An act to resume specie payments," and it provides three methods of resumption.

It first requires the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be coined at the mints of the United States subsidiary silver coins with which to redeem and retire the fractional paper currency then in circulation. This section has been complied with and is now practically obsolete.

The second requirement was that the Secretary of the Treasury should redeem and retire United States legal-tender notes equal to 80 per cent of the circulating notes which should thereafter be issued to national banking associations until the legal-tender notes outstanding should be reduced to $300,000,000. This provision remained in force a little over three years and something more than $35,000,000 of these notes were canceled under it; but on the 31st of May, 1878, it was superseded by the act forbidding the further cancellation and retirement of those notes, and directing that when they passed into the Treasury they should be reissued.

The third requirement, and the only one which still continues in force, was that—

> On and after the 1st of January, 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem in coin the United States legal-tender notes then outstanding on their presentation for redemption at the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States in the city of New York, in sums not less than $50.

Having enjoined upon the Secretary of the Treasury this threefold duty, Congress next proceeded to supply him with the means of performing it, and incorporated in the same act this provision:

> And to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and provide for the redemption in this act authorized or required, he is authorized to use any surplus revenues, from time to time in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, and to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par, in coin, either of the descriptions of bonds described in the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt, with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions, to the extent necessary to carry this act into full effect, and to use the proceeds for the purposes aforesaid."

There is no ambiguity here and no doubtful phraseology to be construed. It is perfectly plain to every thinking man who wants to understand its meaning. The Secretary of the Treasury was required to pay certain debts, and to enable him to do so he was authorized to sell bonds in order to obtain the money with which to pay those particular debts, but no others. The law itself reads:

> In order to prepare and provide for the redemption in this act authorized or required—

And in express terms limits his right to sell bonds—

> To the extent necessary to carry this act into full effect.

Not only is he thus restricted in the sale of bonds, but after he has sold them the law only authorizes him—

> To use the proceeds thereof for the purposes aforesaid.

What were "the purposes aforesaid"? Clearly the purposes set forth in the act. It would not seem necessary to pursue this argument further than this mere statement of the law; and I would not venture to detain the House in doing so except for the fact that men in high position and distinguished for their great ability are maintaining a totally different construction of it. This being true, I might feel greater hesitation in asserting my view of the law if it were not, that the one which I now entertain is the one which has been heretofore entertained by Democratic and Republican leaders alike. As recently as the Fifty-second Congress the question was specially considered by the Judiciary Committee of the House, and while the majority and minority differed as to the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to exhaust the surplus revenues before resorting to the reserve fund, yet there was not the slightest disagreement on the point that under no circumstances could he use any part of the reserve fund for any purpose except to redeem the United States legal-tender notes. The majority report declares that—

> There is no limitation upon the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bonds for the purpose of redemption under this (the resumption) act, but the proceeds derived from such sales can not be used for any other than redemption purposes.

The minority report states, as the second of several conclusions—

> That the only fund actually provided (which is the reserve mentioned in the proviso of 1882) for the redemption of United States notes is the proceeds of bonds sold from time to time for redemption purposes, and that such proceeds may be used for that purpose, but for no other.

Pending the resolution upon which were submitted the reports from which I have just read, Mr. Foster, who was then Secretary of the Treasury, appeared before the Committee and presented a carefully prepared statement, in which he asserted—

> That the money derived from the sale of bonds is undoubtedly applicable only to the redemption of United States notes.

It thus appears, according to the unanimous opinion of all who have considered the question, including the immediate predecessor of the present Secretary of the Treasury, as well as according to the plain letter of the law, that the money received for bonds can only be paid out for greenbacks; and I assume that Secretary Carlisle himself holds this opinion. During the discussion of the Bland bill in 1878, Mr. Ewing of Ohio strongly opposed its passage on several grounds, one of which was that some Secretary of the Treasury would use the proceeds of bonds in buying silver bullion. Mr. Carlisle, then a member of this House, replied in an elaborate and somewhat celebrated speech, in which he took great pains to point out the fallacy of Mr. Ewing's position, and argued that the act authorizing the sale of bonds and the act requiring the purchase of silver bullion were not in pari materia, and the one could not be construed in connection with or as an amendment to the other. He asserted most positively that the act under which bonds could be sold expressly devoted their proceeds to the objects enumerated in it, and that under no fair construction could they be used for any other object. His very words were:

> As already stated, the resumption act provided for the creation and accumulation of a special fund for a special purpose—the redemption and retirement of the legal-tender currency—and whatever coin has been or may be procured under that act by the use of surplus revenues or by the issue and sale of bonds is dedicated to that one object.

ESTABLISHED POLICY ARGUMENT.

It is contended, however, that, inasmuch as the act of July 14, 1890, declares it to be the established policy of the United States to maintain the parity of the two metals, the Secretary of the Treasury has the right to sell bonds and to use the proceeds whenever he thinks it necessary to do so in order to preserve the equal value of our gold and silver coin. A more untenable and a more dangerous doctrine has never been advanced in the history of this country. Can a mere declaration of policy be construed into an authority to borrow money on the credit of the United States? That, sir, is a sovereign power. It is the second of those specifically enumerated in the Constitution, and conferred on Congress. It stands next in order, as it does in importance, to the great power to lay and collect taxes, and it can not be granted away as an inference or surrendered by an implication.

I do not doubt that it is the duty of this Government to keep each dollar which it has issued equal in value to every other dollar; but this, sir, is a duty the fulfillment of which devolves upon Congress, and not upon the Treasury Department. It is true that the so-called Sherman law makes the notes issued under it redeemable in coin and leaves it for the Secretary to determine whether it shall be gold or silver coin; but neither that law nor any other one invests him with the power to procure the coin for that purpose, and it is still left for Congress to supply him with it by taxation or otherwise. When this has been done, then so long as there remains any gold in the Treasury subject to a general appropriation I do not question the power of the Secretary to redeem these notes exclusively in gold, but he has no more right to divert the money belonging to a trust fund, or to sell bonds to pay this debt, than he has to pay any other debt of the United States.

Our Republican friends must traverse the record of their party before they can sanction the theory that an incidental declaration of a policy can be expanded into a power to encumber future generations by the sale of bonds. When our legal-tender notes were at a discount of 30 per cent Congress passed the act of March 18, that the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment in coin, or its equivalent, of all the obligations of the United States not bearing interest, known as United States notes.

1869, entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," in which it was written—

There was a formal, distinct, and unequivocal promise of the Government, coupled with a great disparity between our currency which was to be redeemed and the coin in which it was to be redeemed, but it never entered the brain of any living man to suppose that under that law the Secretary of the Treasury had the power to sell bonds. It was a promise which Congress had made and which Congress was expected to keep, but until Congress devised some suitable means the Treasury was powerless to act, and those notes continued at a discount for ten long years.

But, sir, the history of the Republican party is not more at variance with this claim than the utterances of the present Secretary of the Treasury. In the same speech from which I quoted a few moments ago, and while discussing the same phase of the same question, he announced this opinion:

This measure is not an amendment to the resumption act. It is entirely new and independent legislation upon a different subject and for a different purpose. The power of the Secretary of the Treasury to issue and sell bonds for any purpose whatever is neither diminished nor enlarged by it, and to say that he will attempt to substitute the obligation of the Government for a plain appropriation of money is simply to assert that he will deliberately violate his official oath and subject himself to impeachment and removal.

The Bland law, which was under discussion when Secretary Carlisle used this vigorous language, provided for the monthly purchase of not less than $2,000,000 nor more than $4,000,000 worth of silver, and appropriated "a sum sufficient to carry out that provision out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." The act of July 14, 1890, directed the Secretary of the Treasury to buy 4,500,000 ounces of silver each month, and to pay for the same in Treasury notes, and appropriated "a sum sufficient to carry into effect the provisions of that act out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." The principle of the two laws was the same, but there was this important difference in their detail—under the Bland law the silver was paid for with money already in the Treasury, while under the Sherman law it was paid for by the issuance of Treasury notes redeemable on demand in coin; but the appropriation to buy under one act and to redeem under the other was precisely the same, being "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." In other words, the appropriation for the redemption of the Sherman notes is identical with the appropriation for the purchase of silver under the Bland law, and if it is true, as Mr. Carlisle has so solemnly affirmed, that a Secretary of the Treasury would have deliberately violated his oath of office by using the money derived from the sale of bonds in buying silver under the Bland Act, he would be just as guilty if he used the proceeds of bonds to redeem the notes issued under the Sherman Act; for his authority in both instances is conferred in the same words.

Mr. Carlisle declares that the Government is obligated by good faith to redeem these notes in gold; but Mr. Carlisle has also declared that a Secretary of the Treasury who will treat the obligation of the Government as an authority to issue bonds, or to use the proceeds of bonds, "deliberately violates his official oath." I am aware, of course, that since he delivered the speech from which these quotations are taken the Secretary's economic views have undergone a change; but this question of law is independent of the question of policy, and a change in reference to one does not involve any modification as to the other. Secretary Carlisle may honestly believe that this Government ought to pay every one of its creditors in gold; but we have his own warrant for saying that in the present state of the law a Secretary of the Treasury who would use the gold received for bonds sold under the resumption act for any purposes other than those specified in that act "deliberately violates his official oath."

UNITED STATES NOTES.

Not only have we insisted, Mr. Speaker, that the seigniorage should be used instead of certificates of indebtedness to cover current deficiencies, and that the Treasury notes issued in the purchase of silver bullion should be converted as rapidly as possible into certificates representing silver dollars, but we believe it unnecessary to sell bonds for the redemption of the United States notes. Our friends on the other side admit that the sale of bonds can be avoided by redeeming these notes in silver; but they assert that whenever we refuse to pay gold to our note holders who demand it, our currency and our silver will instantly go to a discount. If this assertion were well founded, it might be conclusive; but it is not well founded. There is not in my mind the shadow of a doubt that the mere receivability of these notes would preserve their parity, and in expressing this opinion I express no sympathy with the pernicious doctrine of fiatism; for it is entirely consistent to affirm that the quality of legal tender in public dues can add an unlimited value to a limited volume of paper, and at the same time to deny that it can add even a limited value to an unlimited volume of the same kind of paper.

With only $346,000,000 of these notes in circulation, and with an annual demand on the part of the Federal Government against the taxpayers of the country of almost $500,000,000, it is utterly impossible that they should depreciate. These gentlemen seem to fear our proposition to redeem in silver much as a child fears the dark—not because they know there is any danger in it, but simply because they do not know enough about it to know whether it is dangerous or not. We do not fear it, because we do not think that the result is a matter of conjecture. We know what has been the result where our plan has been tried under less favorable circumstances, and we do not fear to test it under our more favorable circumstances. We know that the notes of the Bank of France are redeemable in coin, as our United States notes are, and that the option is with the bank there, as it is with the Treasury here, to pay in gold or silver coin as its convenience may suggest. We know, too, that the Bank of France never surrenders its option, and that in exercising it note holders are frequently refused gold and paid in silver; but notwithstanding this fact the credit of the Bank of France is superior to that of any similar institution on earth.

Twice within the last sixty years it has rescued the Bank of England from perilous situations. In the great panic of 1837, when the credit of the world was tottering, the Bank of France was able to spare to the Bank of England much needed assistance, and again in 1890, when the disastrous financial storm, originating in South America and sweeping across the seas to the four quarters of the globe, had wrecked in its mighty and resistless course the greatest private banking institution in the world, and was threatening to engulf all lands in bankruptcy and ruin, the Bank of France stayed the rising tide, and France herself passed unharmed through the terrible catastrophe. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, American Representatives will not doubt that this Government can easily sustain its credit under the same system which sustains and strengthens the credit of the Bank of France. Not only does the Bank of France protect its reserve against depletion, but I undertake to say there is not a well-managed bank in any civilized country on the earth which would encourage a run upon it by paying out one kind of money when it could terminate the run by paying out another kind. For two years there has been a persistent and systematic raid upon our Treasury, instituted and prosecuted for the sole purpose of compelling Congress to agree to the retirement of these notes.

That this is true the Treasury reports leave no room for doubt. From July 1, 1879, up to January 1, 1894, the Treasury had redeemed, in round numbers, $95,000,000 of United States notes, and from January 1, 1894, up to this time more than $247,000,000 have been redeemed. This statement of itself is sufficient to establish what I say, but it is not the whole proof. There are $346,681,016 of United States notes and $137,771,280 of Treasury notes issued under the Sherman Act; and though there are nearly half as many of the Sherman notes as of the United States notes outstanding, since January 1, 1894, only about $18,000,000 of Sherman notes and $247,000,000 of United States notes have been presented for redemption. During this fiscal year the redemptions have been over $69,000,000 of United States notes and less than $2,500,000 of Treasury notes. This discrimination is not accidental. It clearly discloses a concerted effort to force the retirement of the United States notes by first making Congress believe that they are distrusted, and then making the people believe that they can not be retained in circulation without frequent increases of the public debt. I have no respect for the patriotism or the honesty of men who will enter into a conspiracy of this kind, but it is certain that they have chosen very effective means to accomplish their end, and it is also certain that they will succeed, unless we can compel the redemption of these notes in silver. I repeat the statement for the sake of emphasizing it: Nothing is more certain than that either we must force the redemption of these notes in silver or else the advocates of a gold standard will ultimately force their retirement.

Gentlemen of the majority, your party might as well face this question and our party might as well face it. Indeed, all men of all parties might as well face it here and now, for they must do so sooner or later, and the longer it is postponed the more perplexing it will become. No intelligent man believes that the United States ought to become a gold banker for the world, and yet, sir, the dullest man can perceive that if we commit ourselves to the policy of redeeming our currency in gold alone we simply say to all of the nations of the earth that we will maintain a gold reserve from which they may draw at their pleasure. Whenever a silver-using country desires to establish a gold basis, or a gold-using country desires to replenish its stock, it can contract with the great banks of New York to furnish the amount which they require. The New York banks will then present our paper for redemption in gold which they will ship to their foreign correspondent. No country can endure this drain and no country but our own would attempt it.

Another and, as recent events have shown, a very serious danger is that when the great financial institutions of our trade centers combine to coerce the Government, the Treasury is utterly defenseless under its present policy. As an illustration, let us suppose that the bankers unite to compel an issue of bonds. They begin at once to exchange their currency for gold, and when the Treasury stock falls below what they are pleased to call the "danger line," they straightway appeal to the Secretary to "restore confidence" by strengthening the gold reserve. The Secretary then announces a sale of bonds, for which he exacts gold, and the bonds are taken by the bankers, who pay for them with the same gold which they have already taken from the Treasury for that very purpose. Thus when the transaction is closed our non-interest-bearing notes have been converted into interest-bearing bonds. These notes are then covered into the Treasury, and when paid out again are ready to repeat the operation. It is no answer to say that this illustration is unfair because it supposes a deliberate conspiracy on the part of certain citizens against their Government, for we all know that it supposes nothing more than what has actually transpired twice within the last three years and what is transpiring this very hour.

But in order to obviate this criticism let us go a step farther and take a case in which there is no combination or agreement. Let us suppose that the gold reserve has been depleted in the settlement of international balances, and that the Secretary has decided to repair it by a sale of bonds. Accordingly he advertises a proposal to sell fifty millions, for which he demands gold, and immediately the men who expect to become bidders for those bonds begin to present their currency for redemption, and while the Secretary is preparing to sell bonds to put gold into the Treasury, intending purchasers are taking gold out of it in order to buy his bonds. And so he might stand there, in endless repetition, receiving gold from the sale of bonds and paying it out in the redemption of currency. In this way our bonded debt could be increased indefinitely, or until the people, alarmed at its rapid and enormous growth, would consent to the retirement of all Government paper. Many men believe this is the real object of the policy which is now being pursued. As for my part, I am thoroughly persuaded that it is, and I think that the proof is such as to convince any reasonable mind. Mr. Manning, a Secretary of the Treasury under Mr. Cleveland's former Administration, urged upon Congress the redemption and cancellation of the greenbacks. Mr. Carlisle, the present Secretary of the Treasury, in his report of 1893, renewed that recommendation, though he was somewhat less direct about it. He then said:

> So long as the Government continues the unwise policy of keeping its own notes outstanding to circulate as currency and undertakes to provide for their redemption in coin on presentation it will be, in my opinion, essential for the Secretary of the Treasury to possess the means or to have the clear and undoubted authority to secure the means which may, from time to time, become necessary to enable him to meet such emergencies as the one which has recently occurred in our financial affairs.

No rational person understood Mr. Carlisle to mean that the Government ought not to redeem its paper on presentation. Everybody who knew anything knew that what he reprobated as an "unwise policy" was the Government keeping its own notes outstanding to circulate as currency; and this opinion was confirmed when in his annual report for 1894 he unqualifiedly advised the destruction of the greenbacks. The Secretary, however, advises us to do openly what the Republicans are attempting to accomplish by indirection; for it is certain that the effect of the pending bill will be to accumulate the United States notes in the Treasury, and thus withdraw them from circulation as completely as if they were canceled and destroyed. The Secretary proposes to get them into the Treasury and burn them up, while this bill will get them in and keep them there, and the one method as effectually retires them from circulation as the other.

Not only do I feel certain that this would be the effect of the pending bill, but I am constrained to believe that this is its purpose. Upon no other reasonable hypothesis can its authors explain that provision which empowers the Secretary of the Treasury to issue new evidences of debt to cover the difference between our receipts and expenditures. It could not have been intended as a mere precaution, because as such it was totally unnecessary. The Treasury statement issued this morning shows a balance, over and above the gold reserve, of $109,000,000; and no man on this floor supposes that the deficiencies of the next three years will absorb this surplus. This fact, considered in connection with the further fact that these United States notes when once redeemed can only be put back into circulation when required to satisfy appropriations, induces me to believe that the real object of empowering the Secretary to use certificates of indebtedness is to enable him to keep the redeemed United States notes in the Treasury, and thus evade the act of May 31, 1878, which forbids their cancellation and directs their reissue.

It is not my habit to impugn the motives of men, but I feel justified in saying that the Republican leaders have not been candid in their treatment of this question. For months they have bitterly denounced the President for selling bonds in time of peace, and now, although they have the power to do so, they refuse to reverse the policy which has necessitated the sale of bonds. Not only so, but they are actually inviting additional sales by making it easier and more convenient to sell. There is no man on that side of the Chamber who values his reputation for intelligence and candor who would be willing to record it as his deliberate opinion that the sale of bonds could have been avoided under a policy of exclusive gold payments. During the last two years gold has constituted but a fraction of the Government's ordinary collections, and yet, since January 1, 1894, more than $247,000,000 in gold have been paid out in redeeming greenbacks. It was simply an impossibility for these redemptions to have been made without selling bonds, and you deceive yourselves if you think you can deceive the country about it. The people well understand that these notes must be redeemed in silver; or they must be retired; or our bonded indebtedness must continue to be increased. You have refused to require their redemption in silver. You do not dare to retire them, and you therefore must share the responsibility for future bond sales.

Your plea that the Secretary of the Treasury already has the power to sell bonds, and that you are merely permitting him to sell bonds bearing a lower rate of interest, is either a mere subterfuge or else you are strangely ignorant about transactions of this character. If our securities had a fixed price, then undoubtedly it would be important to stipulate the lowest possible rate of interest, but it is well known that, assuming the securities to be good, the premium or the discount, as the case may be, is regulated by the interest which they bear. A Government bond calling for 5 per cent interest will fetch a considerable premium, while one calling for 3 per cent would probably fetch no premium at all, and the difference in the premium would about equalize the difference in the rate of interest. It is easily within the memory of us all that when the ten-year bonds bearing 5 per cent interest were sold the premium which they commanded reduced the interest to less than 3 per cent, while the 4 per cent bonds, which run for thirty years, commanded only such a premium as made the interest on them about 3¾ per cent, showing that our best trade was with the short-time and high-rate bonds.

Mr. Speaker, it is fortunate for the framers of this bill that it can never become a law. If it were tried, it would signally fail to accomplish the object at which they aim, and would add another to the long list of mistakes which have been made in dealing with this important question. And still, sir, their failure would bring its compensations. It would serve to further demonstrate to our constituents the insufficiency of a single monetary standard. It would help to convince them that we must re-lay the foundations of our financial system, building, as our fathers builded, upon both gold and silver, which together constitute the only basis broad enough and strong enough to support the vast superstructure of credit which the genius and enterprise of the American people will rear upon it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. MARSH].

[Mr. MARSH withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely regret that I am unable to accept the views of the gentlemen on this side of the House whose knowledge, experience, and judgment have justified their assignment upon the Committee on Ways and Means. In a matter of so much importance, affecting the financial integrity of the nation and every taxpayer therein, I am compelled to determine my action thereon in the forum of my own judgment and the court of my own conscience.

The limited time granted me by the courtesy of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] will hardly permit me to state my objections to the pending bill, much less to discuss the questions involved. The reserve fund created by the resumption act of 1875 for the purpose of maintaining the greenback has fallen below the danger line, and the President asks Congress to authorize him to issue and sell gold bonds in such quantity as shall enable him to cancel and retire the greenbacks. In keeping with this policy of the President, it has been charged upon the other side of the House that many if not all of the financial ills from which the country is now suffering are due to the creation and maintenance of the greenback currency. It is enough to answer that armies marched, that navies rode the sea, and that the integrity of the Union was preserved through the instrumentality of the greenbacks, and that twenty-five years of unexampled development and prosperity testify to the wisdom and courage of the Republican party in the enactment of the legal-tender greenback law. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I stand for the integrity of the greenback. The friends of this bill claim that its virtue consists in this: First, that it authorizes the issue of bonds bearing a lower rate of interest and running for a shorter time; second, that it compels the Secretary of the Treasury to advertise for bids instead of secretly contracting with some syndicate, and, third, that it prohibits the use of the proceeds of such bonds for any other purpose than the redemption of the greenbacks. They further claim that it prevents the retirement of the greenbacks so purchased. It may do so by implication, but I am one of those who believe that in expressed terms, and in words that can not be misunderstood, it should command the Secretary of the Treasury to so use such redeemed greenbacks that the people shall not be deprived of their use as a circulating medium. What have we to expect from an Administration hostile to the greenback currency? Again, there should be no occasion for the issue of an interest-bearing bond in time of peace. Our financial system is based upon such a revenue law as shall amply provide for the current expenses of the Government. The present deplorable condition is due to the financial policy which, beginning with the enactment of the so-called Wilson-Brice-Gorman bill, culminated in the disreputable sale of our bonds to the Wall street and English syndicate. I am unwilling by my voice or vote to add approval to any part or parcel of that financial policy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. CONNOLLY].

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Speaker, this bill is not to my liking. Had I been making it, instead of saying "in addition to the authority now conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury," I should have said "in lieu of the authority now conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury." [Applause.]

But, sir, in the progress of this debate, I have observed upon one side of this Chamber such a spirit manifested upon this important question as leads me to believe that if this side of the House had presented a bill enacting that for all future time the gold dollar, the greenback dollar, and the silver dollar should be at par and equal with each other, those gentlemen would have been just as ready to oppose that as they are to oppose this.

I do not forget what my friend from Missouri [Mr. BURTON] said about the greenback, a kind of money consecrated by the blood of the people of this great land. They love it still. But the greenback to-day is like the man who went down from Jerusalem to Jericho. It has fallen among thieves. [Laughter.] And as a Republican and a friend of that greenback, when the Secretary of the Treasury comes to me and to the people and says, "I want the authority to issue a lower rate bond to protect your Republican greenback and enable it to maintain its standard with the gold dollar," I think I am recreant to my trust, recreant to all the traditions of my party, if I refuse to give that power, to extend that helping hand.

But I am not willing to say, "You shall have it in a gold bond." I want to say that the bond that was good enough in 1875 to enable the Republican party of this country to make the greenback and the gold dollar stand equal, the one with the other, is good enough to-day, after thirty years of growth and prosperity under Republican rule have made the nation able to do it. It was able all the time until the last two years. No trouble was heard about the greenbacks, gold or silver. They were all equal. The people of this great land were content. No one sought to rob the Treasury. There was a reserve fund. I want to have that maintained. I want to have that consecrated greenback which my friend from Missouri [Mr. BURTON] and his people love; I want it to maintain its honor, its integrity, its respectability among the money of the world. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I shall, as a Republican, vote for this bill, although I believed at first I would not do it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, in presenting legislation to this House we must take the condition of affairs of the country as we find them. There is not a man in this House, nor a citizen in this broad land, who does not believe that it is important and necessary for the President and his Secretary of the Treasury to keep one hundred millions of gold reserve in the Treasury of the United States. We know that that reserve has already been reduced to less than sixty-five millions, and that in order to restore the one hundred millions the Administration is now contemplating the issuing of new bonds.

In this emergency we simply give him the power to issue a 3 per cent bond in addition to the authority of the Secretary to issue a 4 per cent bond running thirty years and a 5 per cent bond running ten years. We propose something in the pending bill that in my judgment will meet the approval of every Republican in the country. We provide that whether this proposed issue of bonds be 3 per cent, 4 per cent, or 5 per cent bonds, the sale of them can not be made in secret with a foreign syndicate. If this bill becomes law and the President issues any bonds for the purpose of maintaining the gold reserve, he must take the American people into his confidence, he must give to American capitalists an opportunity to bid for these bonds. There will be no more secret sales.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] this morning said that it was necessary to insert the word "gold" in the bond in order to float it in foreign countries. I say to him that the experience of this country since bonds were issued in February last shows that the position which was taken by the members of this House in the last Congress who opposed the issue of a gold bond was and is correct. Of the $62,400,000 of 4 per cent bonds that were sold to the Rothschilds-Morgan-Belmont syndicate, the majority of them have come back to America, and are held and owned in the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury in his last report to Congress says that the contract which required that one-half of the money received for the sale of the bonds should come from abroad was modified and the gold was taken from the vaults of capitalists in this country to replenish the Treasury instead of bringing it all from abroad.

Mr. Speaker, time has demonstrated that not only the patriotism of the country is sufficient, but that we have gold here enough to float any amount of coin bonds at 3 per cent instead of 4, and can maintain this reserve by an appeal to American patriotism instead of making a secret contract and employing the aid of a foreign syndicate. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a business proposition. The gold reserve of the Treasury to-day, according to the reports in the newspapers, after the withdrawals that will be made for this date for export, is less than $60,000,000. The President and the Secretary of the Treasury, according to the same report, are now engaged in negotiating a loan with a syndicate representing foreign capitalists to add $100,000,000 to the bonded indebtedness of this country. The only authority of law with which they are invested now to make this loan is contained in the act of 1875, under which they can issue no bonds at a lower rate of interest than 4 per cent, and these 4 per cent bonds to run for thirty years. We had an exhibition last winter of what the Secretary thought as to the price of those bonds, and it would appear from his long-delayed report, presented a few days ago to the House, that he still believes that a no more advantageous sale of these bonds could be made now than was made then, or, in other words, that we must pay a commission of $10,000,000 for every $60,000,000 of bonds which he offers for sale. This is the present emergency which is presented to this Republican House. The question is, how shall we deal with it? We have presented this bill, which only changes existing law in two particulars. First, it adds another description of bonds, a coin bond, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent and the bond payable in five years and due in fifteen years from date. In the second place, it prescribes that all bonds issued for the gold reserve shall be sold by the Secretary of the Treasury after advertisement and after they are offered to our own people. Some gentlemen have had fears——

Mr. LINNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAYNE. I will, if you will be very brief.

Mr. LINNEY. I will be very brief. Here, on page 21 of the President's message, it is stated that $155,000,000 in silver certificates were issued for the purchase of silver bullion, that are now an obligation of the Government. Why did not the Committee on Ways and Means provide for their redemption by the coinage of the silver bullion we have purchased?

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that can be done under existing law to-day. We are taking care of one thing at a time. We are looking out now for the gold reserve.

Mr. LINNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. We propose to see that every legal-tender note issued by the Government of the United States shall be redeemed in gold whenever it is presented to the United States to redeem. [Applause on the Republican side.] And after we get through with that we will take up the other questions as they come along.

Mr. LINNEY rose.

Mr. PAYNE. I have answered your question, and can not yield any more time.

Some gentlemen are afraid that this bill will tie up greenbacks. Have those gentlemen examined this bill? Have they examined the amendment that has been placed on this bill, or have not they sufficient intelligence, after reading the bill and reading the amendment, to know that we leave the law precisely where it has been since 1875, and that it is just as impossible to tie up a dollar of the greenbacks in the Treasury of the United States under this law as it was under the law of 1875?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. PAYNE. I can not yield to a question now.

Some gentlemen think the bill introduced by Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire, requiring certain importers to pay duties in gold, would cure the difficulty. But this bill is an idle and empty delusion. Suppose this bill were a law, and I owed the Government $1,000 in duties. I provide myself with $1,000 in greenbacks, as now, go to the subtreasury and demand gold for my greenbacks, and then pay the duties with the same gold. The Treasury would then have the same gold and also the $1,000 in greenbacks, precisely as it would have under the present law.

If a Secretary of the Treasury can tie up the greenbacks under this bill, he can tie them up under the existing law; for we have taken the pains, after having expressed in the first bill our purpose, to meet every objection, and the law itself expressly makes applicable the law of 1878 to this issue of bonds.

My friend from California [Mr. JOHNSON] yesterday, in that speech of his which seemed to evoke so much applause and laughter from our enemy on the other side of the Chamber, says this bill is "un-Republican;" and why? Because he says he stumped his district a year ago last fall and said the Republican party were forever opposed to issuing bonds in time of peace. Did he forget, or did his people forget, that in 1875 the Republican party enacted this law to issue bonds in time of peace; that in 1878 the Republican Administration borrowed $95,000,000, yes, $100,000,000, to create this reserve fund in time of peace, and that we have preserved on the statute book all the time this law of 1875 for the express purpose of borrowing money to make good this gold reserve, whether it is needed in time of peace or in time of war? I thought, as I listened to the gentleman's talk and heard the applause from the other side, "God forbid that he should ever write a Republican platform for me to stand upon." [Applause on the Republican side.] They say it is unnecessary, and still we have to-day this depletion of the Treasury. Still we have the Administration appealing to us for our aid; still we have this condition of the Treasury that must be met, and met at once.

Now, to-day we get another message from the White House. It comes in a roundabout way, in the form of an interview with the Secretary of the Treasury and his criticism upon the measure now being debated and about to be voted upon in the House of Representatives. The Secretary of the Treasury, who wants to retire the greenbacks, says he does not want this bill and he wants to see it defeated in this House. Why, sir, last February, when the question of a gold bond was before the House, and this bill substantially was offered in the form of a substitute by the gentleman from Maine, now our Speaker, the Republicans unitedly voted for that substitute, and it met the approval of the Cleveland Democrats on the other side of the Chamber. It would have passed this House by a majority vote if telephonic connection had been discontinued for a few minutes between this end of the Avenue and the other. The Administration did not want this bill and does not want it now.

Republican members get up here now and tell us that we are following in the wake of this Administration. Now, since you have found out where the Administration is, gentlemen, you who have proposed to vote against this measure and who now find that the Administration is against it, will you follow in the wake of the Administration? [Laughter and applause.]

They do not want this bill, and why? If they have not already negotiated another $100,000,000 loan, made in a secret corner, made without advertisement, made without offering a bond to the people of the United States, they are about to do it; and they want this House to vote down this measure, so that they can say to the people of the United States, "We have appealed to Congress and Congress gives us no relief, and so we are obliged to go on and pass out the money of the people of the United States to a foreign syndicate in order to float a loan." They want this measure defeated as a cover to this transaction, that they may put the responsibility on this Republican House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If this bill, with its limitations upon the Administration in the matters referred, should be voted down, may not that be claimed as being, to some extent, an approval of the system which has been pursued?

Mr. PAYNE. Why, sir, the Administration say they can not borrow money under the law as it now exists without paying this immense premium. They ask us for relief; and if we vote down the measure of relief offered here, we in so far approve what they say and make ourselves responsible for this outrageous swindle that the syndicates are imposing on the country.

The question has been asked—it was one that troubled the gentleman from Illinois—why not make these 3 per cent bonds a substitute for the bonds provided for in the law of 1875? Sir, we believe that 3 per cent bonds can be floated among the people of this country. The Secretary of the Treasury professes to believe that they can not be. We want the opportunity given for the people to subscribe. We believe there is a spirit of patriotism among the people of this country, and that notwithstanding the blight that has come upon business in the last few years, so that their savings have in many cases been withdrawn from the savings banks, we believe they still have money enough to take care of these loans of the Government. But suppose there should be a panic. Suppose that after we have confined the Administration to a simple 3 per cent bond they should not be able to float it. What would the Treasury Department do then if the provision for a 4 per cent or 5 per cent bond had been stricken out? Mr. Speaker, I want a law upon the statute book which will provide for this gold reserve under any emergency and in spite of any calamity which the Democratic Administration during the brief term of its continuance may inflict upon the country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, as has been well said, the greenback is the child of the Republican party. It was born out of the throes of the civil war; it was nurtured and cared for by that party. Finally, it was crowned by that party with a crown of gold. And in these days of peace—thirty years after the war—when the greenback has worn that crown so proudly that anywhere on the face of God's earth it is worth 100 cents on the dollar—when the greenback is worth its face value wherever the five-pound note of the Bank of England is worth its face value—the greenback, having reached this state of perfection and when it is going on to accomplish its mission, some hand is extended to take away that crown of gold and trail it in the dust. Republicans to-day are asked to vote against this bill, and thereby to approve a Democratic Administration that has brought such destruction and ruin upon the business of the country that it would seem they are obliged to deal with foreign syndicates at a more than 10 per cent shave in order to sell Government securities. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RUSSELL] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States has called upon Congress for aid. The call was no mere recommendation. It came in the form of a special message and came at an unusual time. It had the character of an imperative demand for relief. It bore all the punctuation marks of an Administration which was overcome with difficulties and weighted down with troubles grievous to bear. The Republican House of Representatives heeded the call of the President and promptly set to work to furnish the relief. It accepted the statement of the President that an emergency was upon the country, and it hastened to meet the emergency in the quickest and most practical manner possible. But the Republican House of Representatives stood positively and unequivocally on the position which the Republicans have all along held. It declared that the basis of all the difficulties which had beset this Administration in its financial career was the lack of sufficient revenue—a lack which the Administration itself produced by its unfortunate and un-American tariff policy.

The Ways and Means Committee maintained this position when the revenue bill was reported to the House. The Republican majority in the House emphasized that position when they with so great unanimity and enthusiasm passed the revenue bill two days ago. Thus the Republican House of Representatives, representing the great Republican party of this country, answered the appeal of the President so piteously made, and it occurs to me to-day that possibly the President is questioning with himself whether he was not too hasty and too submissive in his appeal. But it answered the Administration's call for relief by providing relief according to its own method and in the direct line of a Republican policy. It met the emergency in a practical way. These alternatives were presented: First, should we indulge in a big bluster about what we might do if we were possessed of complete power in both branches of Congress and in the Executive to carry out our revenue and tariff policies to their completion; second, should we promptly do business in a way which should furnish relief by an increased revenue obtained from customs duties on imported articles which a Democratic tariff had placed on the free list or reduced in tariff rate. Business is always better than bluster. An accomplishment to an extent which is possible and practical is often better than a profession which is impractical and impossible to carry out so promptly as to meet a certain condition.

Already the Republican press and the Republican masses are expressing approval of the prompt and businesslike way in which the Republican majority in this House in its action on Thursday met the emergency which the President had called to our attention. The Republican party has a wood pile of its own, and it has selected a pole from its own pile in extending relief to the sinking Administration. A fisherman hysterically floundering on a quagmire with his feet unsteady on the quivering underpinning of the marsh may not have so clear a conception of the proper method of his release from the situation which threatens to engulf him as some one standing on firm ground above the mire, who, for a long time, has been watching with interest and with solicitation the performances of the fisherman. So this Republican House of Representatives has extended relief in the form of additional revenue to this piscatorial Administration, and I want to say right here, the President and the Secretary of the Treasury to the contrary notwithstanding, that the prevalent belief in the country to-day is that the deficiency of revenue is the cause of our trouble. The laboring men, the business men, and the bankers outside of the Administration's syndicate hold that belief.

This Republican House of Representatives, having thus furnished the relief which, in its judgment, was first of all necessary, and having passed a revenue bill which insures revenue to meet our Treasury deficit, and as well brings benefit all along the line to American industry, might have stopped there. The Ways and Means Committee, however, thought proper to present to this Republican House of Representatives the bill which is now under discussion. It thought proper to do so for these two principal reasons. First, the passage of this measure would permit, or rather I should say would direct, the Secretary of the Treasury, in case of further bond issue made necessary by the failure or delay of our revenue measure, to place those bonds at a lower rate of interest and on shorter time than the authority of existing law now permits him to do. Can anyone object to such a provision? It is businesslike, economical, and in the interest of the people. Second, the bill under consideration directs that any future bond issues shall be so advertised and negotiated as to afford the opportunity to American citizens to invest in them as a popular loan. The failure by a Republican House to pass a measure with such a provision as this would in effect be an approval of the Administration's syndicate performances in the former issues of bonds.

I would have the country understand the political division which exists in the legislative and executive branches of the Government. I believe they understand the situation. Here is a Republican House of Representatives, strongly disposed to the enactment of a protective-tariff law which shall fully and equitably protect every branch of industry and every form of labor in these United States, and this Republican House of Representatives is impatiently waiting the time when the enactment of such a law shall be made possible; here is a United States Senate, rather strongly disposed toward the enactment of a measure for the free coinage of silver; and here is a President, pretty thoroughly imbued with the free-trade idea. Such a situation confronted this Republican House of Representatives, and if the present emergency shall be met by the Senate and the Executive in the same spirit and with the same regard for practical and patriotic results as the Republican House has met it, the emergency will be relieved and the difficulties of our Treasury situation temporarily, at least, bridged over.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] is recognized for eighteen minutes.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, in the short time at my command I shall endeavor to recall to the House the real issue presented in the situation before us. The President of the United States has sent in a special message directing attention to our diminishing gold reserve and urging as a remedy for existing evils the issuance of bonds payable in gold and the retirement of the Sherman notes and Treasury notes now in circulation. He asks that Congress forego its usual holiday recess and legislate in the line indicated. These are plain propositions. Either you agree with the President or you do not agree with him. If his theory as to our obligations being payable in gold is correct, then we are confronted with an emergency, and prompt action should be had. If you do not agree with him in that respect, then no great haste is necessary. You should, as business men, adopt one theory or the other and act upon it. You should not play politics. You should not in hot haste do that which he has not asked and at the same time pretend that you are doing it in response to his message.

The President says there is plenty of money in the Treasury. The official statement published yesterday shows $175,470,249, including the gold reserve. He does not ask increased revenue. He does not ask authority to sell coin bonds. He asks to sell gold bonds, to retire the Sherman notes and the greenbacks outstanding, and to confer additional privileges upon the national banks. Either you favor these propositions or you oppose them.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is the gentleman from Georgia in favor of them?

Mr. CRISP. I am not. [Laughter on the Republican side.] But whether you favor or oppose them you ought to act with candor and frankness. The Secretary of the Treasury says he is not in want of revenue and that he has on hand a surplus of funds amply sufficient to cover any deficiency for years to come. On the 5th of February last the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], now the Speaker, in discussing a bond issue then proposed, used this language:

> If the Secretary of the Treasury will not have revenue, and declares that he is face to face with a surplus, we must treat the case upon that basis. Otherwise we arouse party feeling and come to no arrangement on the subject.

The course pursued by the majority to-day is exactly the opposite of that then suggested by the gentleman from Maine. You refuse to treat upon the basis suggested by the Secretary; and yet you claim the pending proposition is strictly in response to the urgent demands of the executive department.

On this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, there is some division on the financial question, yet in our opposition to the pending bill we are united. Those gentlemen on this side who believe we should have the single gold standard are opposed to it because it will bring no gold into the Treasury, and gold is what the Treasury wants. Those on this side who believe that all our obligations are payable in either gold or silver coin at the option of the Government, to which class I belong, will vote against it, because they think there is no necessity for it. Thus we unite in our opposition. How is it on that side of the House? A number of gentlemen there support this bill and yet say the obligations of the Government should be paid in gold. Those who so believe owe it to their country, to their Treasury, and to themselves to vote to obtain gold with which to redeem and to pay. Last year the President negotiated a sale of bonds to obtain gold. Under existing law he can only sell coin bonds. He sent a message to Congress saying that if within ten days that body would authorize him to issue bonds payable in gold instead of coin, there would be a saving to the Government on that single transaction of some $16,000,000. The House refused to authorize the issue of gold bonds. Those of us who believe the bonds and obligations of the Government are redeemable in either gold or silver voted against it because we believed the Government should pay according to contract in the metal most convenient, but how can one who says our obligations should be paid in gold justify a vote against it?

I ask these gentlemen who say all of our coin obligations must be paid in gold, How do you justify voting against that proposition? How does the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. DOLLIVER, justify voting against that proposition? And the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GROSVENOR? How do they justify voting against a proposition which, from their standpoint, without changing the liability of the Government, would yet save to the taxpayers of the country $16,000,000? How does the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. TAWNEY, justify it? Or the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HOPKINS; the gentleman from North Dakota, Mr. JOHNSON; the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON; and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HENDERSON? All of these gentlemen have discussed the pending proposition, and insist that the obligations of the Government are payable in gold. I ask them how can they justify their refusal to insert the word gold in those bonds, when by doing it they would have saved to the taxpayers $16,000,000? They say our coin obligations are payable in gold alone, and yet refuse to express it in the bond, when by so doing they could have saved this large amount to the people.

I opposed the proposition last year because I did not believe as they did, that all of our obligations were payable in gold. Had I so believed and refused to support it, I should have felt myself unworthy longer to represent an intelligent constituency. On the proposition last year to issue gold bonds you will find recorded in the affirmative the gentleman from Maine, Mr. DINGLEY, now the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means; the gentleman from Maine, Mr. REED, now the Speaker of the House; the gentleman from New York, Mr. PAYNE; the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. RUSSELL, and yet to-day all but one of these gentlemen have addressed the House in favor of the pending proposition, which is to issue coin bonds. Last year they voted with a number of Democrats to insert the word "gold." This year, when in the majority, they refuse to prepare and support a bill containing the word "gold," but report and support a measure providing for the continuance of coin bonds.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman from Georgia pardon a suggestion?

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman knows that I have but a very few moments. The gentleman has his own time remaining.

Mr. DINGLEY. As the gentleman has referred to a fact, it seems to be only just that an explanation should go with it.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman from Maine will have his own time in conclusion.

Mr. DINGLEY. Very well.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask again if this proposition is to be treated as a business one? Why will you not so treat it? I ask if the position you have taken is not simply a political one? What is to be accomplished by the issuance of these bonds? Authority is granted by existing law to sell coin bonds to maintain specie payments. The pending bill does not change the character of the money in which the bonds are to be made payable. It authorizes bonds at lower rates, when the Secretary of the Treasury tells us they could not probably be sold at par, and it provides for the issuance of $50,000,000 short-time bonds in case there shall be a deficit in the revenues, when the daily report of the Treasury shows that it is impossible there can be a deficiency of funds for the next two years. What, then, is the object of gentlemen on that side of the House? Why, sir, it seems to me that their object is simply to pretend to do something in response to the demand of the Executive, when they well know, as all men who look into the matter must know, they are doing nothing.

Mr. BOUTELLE rose.

Mr. CRISP. My own position—my friend from Maine inquires about that, I believe? He knows me well enough to know that I have no purpose to conceal my own views upon any question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not question that. I understand it perfectly. But I heard my friend from Georgia arguing, I thought, that we ought to follow the advice of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury and issue gold bonds.

Mr. CRISP. My argument was, that if you believed, as you claim, that the obligations of the Government were payable in gold, you ought to have had the courage to vote to insert the word "gold" in the bonds, thus saving millions to the people. My friend from Maine and others of the leaders on the other side of the House who believe all the obligations of the Government are payable in gold ought to be brave enough to say so in the bond itself.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But does the gentleman from Georgia think he is going to help the credit of the country, or to aid the Treasury to any extent, by proclaiming to the world his belief that he does not think the United States bonds heretofore issued are payable in gold?

Mr. CRISP. I am not parading my views. I am arguing as to the want of consistency of the gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But the gentleman says he does not believe our bonds should be paid in gold——

Mr. CRISP. I do not.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do you think that helps the Secretary to save the $16,000,000 which he says must be lost because of the distrust lest the bonds shall not be paid in gold?

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, can I have the remainder of my time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia declines to be interrupted, and he has the right to the floor.

Mr. CRISP. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have not the time—perhaps this is not the time, but if I had an hour at my command I might do so—to discuss in full my views as to what remedies ought to be applied to the existing condition.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not want to trouble the gentleman, but simply to say I thought he was expressing his views, but I find that I do not know whose views he is expressing.

Mr. CRISP. When the gentleman gets through I should like to proceed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say to the House that the gentleman from Georgia has the floor, and is entitled to it, and can not be interrupted without his consent. [Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I supposed the gentleman had consented.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I will say, though—perhaps I owe it to myself to do so in view of what has gone before—that I do not believe the experiment of a single gold standard should be continued longer. I do believe in real bimetallism, and that we can reach it by providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver. I do not believe we should retire the Sherman notes and the greenbacks, thus contracting the currency about $500,000,000, nor do I approve of the proposition to enlarge the privileges of the national banks. I believe we should repeal the 10 per cent tax on State-bank circulation, thus permitting the people of each State to have a good and ample local circulation. I believe our unit of value should rest on both gold and silver. I do not believe in oppressing the debtors of this country and of the world as they would be oppressed by basing our standard of value wholly upon one metal. [Applause.] I believe, Mr. Speaker, this view is shared by a large majority of the people of the United States.

Look for a moment at the history of our bond transactions and coinage laws; until 1873 the law permitted the unlimited coinage of both gold and silver at a ratio of 16 to 1, and made either coin a full legal tender in payment of all debts or dues, public and private. In that year, when silver bullion was at a premium as compared with gold, silver was demonetized, its legal-tender quality was destroyed, and its coinage discontinued. In 1869 an act was passed which pledged the Government to redeem all its outstanding obligations in coin of the then standard of weight and fineness. The act of 1870 authorized the issue of bonds payable in coin of the then standard value. The act of 1875 provided for bonds payable as were the bonds authorized by the act of 1870. In 1877, when bonds were to be issued under the act of 1875, silver had been demonetized and its coinage discontinued, and we find Mr. Sherman, then Secretary of the Treasury, inquiring of the Attorney-General whether the bonds issued under that act should be made payable in coin of the then standard or in coin of the standard of 1870. If they were payable in coin of the standard existing at the date of issue, they were payable in gold; if in coin of the standard of 1870, they were payable in either gold or silver, at the option of the Government. The Attorney-General replied that the bonds should be made payable in coin the standard in 1870. And later, to set all doubts at rest, Mr. Stanley Matthews, of Ohio, afterwards a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, submitted the following resolution, which was considered in the House.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senate.

Mr. CRISP. In the House and Senate both.

The preamble and resolution are as follows:

Whereas by an act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment in coin or its equivalent of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had previously provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold or silver; and

Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semiannually in such coin; and

Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under an act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and

Whereas at the date of the passage of the said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" to be a legal tender of payment, according to their nominal value for any sums whatever: Therefore

Be it resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds of the United States issued or authorized to be issued under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

This resolution passed the Senate—yeas 48, nays 18; passed the House—yeas 189, nays 79.

That resolution was passed, Mr. Speaker, at a time when silver was demonetized by the act of 1873, and there has never been a doubt from that day to this that our bonds and obligations could be legally, honestly, and honorably discharged in either gold or silver of the present weight and fineness at the option of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is recognized.

Mr. DALZELL. Before I proceed I want to yield half a minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL].

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the simple purpose of saying that I desire to print in the RECORD certain letters from constituents of mine upon the Venezuelan question, which is a kindred subject to that under discussion, and is at least indirectly responsible for the fact that the House is to-day discussing the condition of the Treasury. The intrinsic character of these letters as well as the high standing of their authors make it proper that I should put them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in order that other members of this House may be able to read and give them due consideration.

From S. M. Macvane, McLean professor of ancient and modern history, Harvard University:

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., December 20, 1895.

DEAR SIR: I take the liberty of writing to you, as my Representative in Congress, regarding the present alarming condition of our foreign relations.

In my opinion, the Administration has committed a criminal blunder in its appeal to warlike feelings. The House of Representatives, instead of interposing a demand for moderation and care, has given way to foolish excitement and reckless haste. It looks now as if, by a return of your bill with amendments, you may have an opportunity to reconsider the case. I beg you to do what you can to prevent the passage of the commission bill in any form. It can only complicate and retard a rational settlement. We have diplomatic machinery for dealing with foreign countries and for collecting information regarding any question that affects our interests. England can hardly recognize the commission. The very appointment of it would be an affront which she could hardly fail to resent. It would put the whole subject on a wrong basis; would create about it an atmosphere of irritation highly dangerous to the peace of the two countries. The chances are strong that it would draw us into a position from which no escape could be found short of war. The men who get us into a war with England over a question of boundary between the English colonists in Guiana and the Venezuelans will undoubtedly be held to a sharp reckoning. The people of British Guiana are as much Americans as the Venezuelans are. The one spot of South America in which men of our own blood and language have set up free government and the rule of law is as much entitled to our support as are the unruly Spanish of Venezuela. If they have carried Teutonic enterprise into the unoccupied wilds about the headwaters of the Essequibo, they have done no more, I think, than our own people would have done in the same circumstances. That their Government should have followed them can hardly surprise anybody who knows that there would otherwise have been no government there.

The absence of a settled boundary has always been primarily the fault of Venezuela in making demands so gross and sweeping that they could not be entertained. That England should now refuse to submit to arbitration the question of handing over her colonists in their new homes to the tender mercies of the Venezuelan rule seems to me highly creditable to her. That this other great Anglo-Saxon nation should threaten her with war for doing so can only be due to error and misapprehension. When our people understand the case they will know what to think of the President and any who weakly follow him.

Very sincerely, yours,

S. M. MACVANE.

Hon. SAMUEL MCCALL, M. C., Washington.

From B. O. Pierce, Hollis professor of mathematics and natural philosophy, Harvard University:

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., December 22, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: As one of your constituents I beg you to do all in your power to save the country from the wicked folly of persistence in the policy of interference in foreign affairs into which "politics" have apparently driven Mr. Cleveland, and which may lead us into a criminal quarrel with a friendly nation.

I sincerely hope that the Republican Congress will not be stampeded into unwise action for fear that it may not seem sufficiently "patriotic" to the braggarts who just now are so much in evidence.

Sincerely, yours,

B. O. PIERCE.

Hon. SAMUEL W. MCCALL,

From William James, professor of psychology, Harvard University:

HARVARD UNIVERSITY, Cambridge, Mass., December 21, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: As one of your constituents I urge you to use your influence in every way to mitigate the further results of the calamity which President Cleveland and Congress together have sprung upon the country.

The good fame that one hundred years have won for us, and that has made the rest of the world view us with an indulgence accorded to no other great power, the character, namely, of being safe, and always to be counted on as throwing our vast weight into the scale that stands for humanity and civilization, has in three days of delirium been flung so far away over the roof tops that fifty years of sane conduct will doubtfully buy it back. We have written ourselves squarely down as a people dangerous to the peace of the world, more dangerous than anything since France under Napoleon. The grotesque logic of the Cleveland-Olney communications is only matched by their gratuitously insulting form. Was there ever anything more infernally cynical than to make of an incident where we pretend to urge upon others the use of the humaner international methods the pretext and vehicle of a wanton and blustering provocation to war?

The President's fearful blunder was in coupling his direct threat of war with his demand for a commission. It is the passions aroused by that that so fatally complicate the situation. Had he simply asked for $100,000 for a judicial commission to enable us to see how to exert most justly our influence hereafter, it would have left all possibilities open. And meanwhile, had the decision of the commission so solemnly inaugurated been adverse to England, it would have been exceedingly difficult for the English Government to go on in an unjust course. The Liberal party would have made of it an issue—we should have covered ourselves with dignity and honor and appeared to the world, as we always have appeared hitherto (alas, no longer), the friends of a new and more civilized international order.

All these possibilities are lost. The threat compels England to disregard the commission's decision. It compels us to declare war if she disregards it. Compels, that is, under penalty of flagrant cowardice on the one hand, under penalty of confessing to a buffoon Government on the other. It is monstrous that so sharp and calamitous an issue should be abruptly sprung on two friendly countries by the very first public utterance of our Executive. It has made retreat with honor impossible to either side, and I fancy that such a thing has never been done in the history of nations before, except as a preliminary to a declaration of war already decided upon on other grounds. Congress must do what it can to minimize the evil.

Your constituents hold you responsible for your full share in all that may occur.

Respectfully, yours, WM. JAMES.

Hon. SAMUEL W. MCCALL,
House of Representatives.

From W. E. Byerly, professor of mathematics, Harvard University:

HARVARD UNIVERSITY, Cambridge, Mass., December 21, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: As one of your constituents I wish to beg you most earnestly to do your utmost to oppose the wholly indefensible and uncalled-for attempt of the Administration to interfere in a boundary dispute of long standing between the one free stable Government in South America and an irresponsible military despotism masquerading under the name of a republic.

The quarrel is between two South American States and has absolutely nothing to do with us, our interests, or any principle we have ever attempted to maintain.

For the sake of the people who inhabit, or who are to inhabit, the territory in dispute, all our sympathies should be with British Guiana rather than with Venezuela; but however we may sympathize, to take part in the quarrel is directly contrary to the traditional policy to which we owe most of our greatness; and to go out of our way in such a cause to insult and threaten a friendly power is as mad as it is wicked.

Very sincerely, yours, W. E. BYERLY.

Hon. SAMUEL MCCALL, M. C.

From Edwin A. Start, instructor in history, Tufts College:

TUFTS COLLEGE, MASS., December 21, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: The grave crisis which the President has brought upon the country by his recent hasty message to Congress is sufficient excuse, I hope, for me in presenting to your consideration the contents of this note.

I can not but regret exceedingly the position assumed by the President in the matter of Venezuela and Great Britain. In holding that he is wrong in his position legally and ethically, I believe I am only in line with the best authorities in the country upon history and international law. The construction given to the Monroe doctrine by the Administration is untenable and is more calculated to destroy all the significance of that doctrine than to maintain it. You are familiar with the circumstances that brought forth from John Quincy Adams, with England's approval, the original assertion of the doctrine which bears the name of Monroe. Russia was about to establish colonies on the Pacific Coast—Russia, the head of the Holy Alliance—the new reactionary system which progressive Europe feared even more than America could. Reaction was in the air, and hence our Government said in substance, No more European colonies in America; no extension of European systems of government on the American continent. I think you will agree with me that this is all there is in the Monroe doctrine.

Now, the first part of this declaration is to-day useless, for no American soil remains open for colonization.

Is the difference between Great Britain and Venezuela included in the second count? It seems to me not. It may well be that Great Britain was ungracious in refusing arbitration, but we have had our own boundary disputes with Great Britain, and they were peaceably settled by the powers concerned. The extension of a dangerous monarchical system is not involved here. Great Britain is a country as free as our own. It is very questionable whether the disputed territory would not be better governed by Great Britain than by Venezuela. It is doubtful whether our interference in this matter forcibly would accomplish any higher good than to arouse again the slowly dying ill feeling between the two greatest nations of the earth.

But I did not write you for the purpose of arguing this case in law or ethics. Upon these points you are fully informed, and, as one who has supported you with entire good will, I feel perfectly confident that your judgment will be sound.

What I wished to ask was this: Has not the war spirit in Washington become a little feverish? Has not the chip on the national shoulder grown so large as to hide considerations of the utmost importance?

If the President, to mask his political defiance, reads into the Monroe doctrine principles that are not in it; if to make political capital in the hour of defeat and waning prestige he enunciates a new policy more jingoistic than that of the jingoes, is such action not calculated to bring a thoroughly dignified American principle into contempt, and to cause it to be hereafter discounted in advance in international diplomacy?

And what does war mean? European affairs have been nicely balanced for a long time—so nicely that a touch will disturb the equilibrium. Is it likely that Great Britain and the United States can fight out a bitter quarrel that is sure to involve the possession of the northern half of the North American Continent without leading to complications that would set the armies of Europe in motion? No careful student of affairs can look for any other result. Is any such point of national honor or interest involved in the present question as to justify giving the signal for such a stupendous outbreak of giant forces?

If we are to go on the way marked out by the President, on which Congress seems ready to follow, we must face, as the President does, the probable result. Great Britain has no less national pride and self-confidence than we, and is as little likely to back down. It may be that Great Britain will yield, but it is hardly safer for us to bank on that than on Secretary Carlisle's Treasury estimates.

The Republicans in the House lost a grand opportunity to puncture the pseudo-patriotic balloon that was so airily displayed before them. Why did not some one ask that the Treasury be heard from, or why the President had dropped his policy of cautious timidity and struck the note of war so boldly at a time when his Administration had seriously embarrassed the nation financially, and when his party was on the verge of ruin.

The shrewdest politician in the country seems to have played his boldest and deepest game. In the moment of defeat he has made a high bid for the Irish vote that is getting away from its Democratic moorings, and has diverted Republican attention from conditions that make war talk worse than ill timed.

I hope I am not asking too much when I request your careful consideration of these suggestions, and urge you to throw your influence on the side of a more deliberate treatment in Congress of the serious questions now before the nation. A nation, as a man, can better afford to recede from a wrong position than to maintain it.

The voters who rolled up the enormous vote that put a Republican majority in the House did not do it to see that majority meshed in the net set by the chief of the Administration of which the people disapproved.

Perhaps I should add that I am not a peace-at-any-price man. War for a real principle, for the maintenance of national honor, whether good policy or not, would call for the support of every true American; but for a great nation to bring on war without such a basis is wholesale crime. I believe, too, in a firm, even a "spirited," foreign policy, and am classed, I think, as a jingo, but I detest a jerky and petulant foreign policy, on the course of which neither our own citizens nor other nations can count.

Asking you to pardon so long a communication, I am, sir, with great respect,

Yours, very truly, EDWIN A. START.

From Samuel E. Turner:

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., December 21, 1895.

DEAR SIR: As one of your constituents I write to express my deep regret that the House of Representatives has so far supported the policy of President Cleveland's message in relation to Venezuela.

The message has been stigmatized as a "crime against humanity," and in my opinion it is nothing less to give a new interpretation to the Monroe doctrine, insult a friendly, kindred nation, and threaten war—all in the same breath.

The precipitation of the Franco-Prussian war by Napoleon III might well be considered a righteous act compared with the precipitation of war with England by our Government.

I trust that your voice will be raised loud and clear against all measures that make for war and in favor of all that make for peace.

Very respectfully, yours, SAM'L E. TURNER.

Hon. SAMUEL W. MCCALL.

From Henry B. Blackwell:

OFFICE OF THE WOMAN'S JOURNAL,
Boston, December 23, 1895.

DEAR MR. MCCALL: The only foothold that the Anglo-Saxon race and free government have in South America is British Guiana, which is governed by a legislature of its own and is a republic in all but name, like the provinces of Canada. Venezuela is only a chaotic, semibarbarous Spanish-Indian military despotism—a republic only in name. This is not a case where the Monroe doctrine applies.

Yours, truly, HENRY B. BLACKWELL.

From Hon. William B. Durant:

BOSTON, December 21, 1895.

MY DEAR MCCALL: The sentiment of the business men in your district is, in my judgment, that the President has made a great blunder in his Venezuela message, and that the Republicans are injuring themselves by indorsing him.

Yours, very truly, WM. B. DURANT.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of this somewhat protracted debate I can not expect to offer anything new to the House. Nor shall I attempt to do so. It will be my purpose simply to gather up the threads of the argument, and to ascertain as nearly as may be where we now stand. The pending measure contains two simple propositions, easy of comprehension by any intelligent man. So far as the second proposition is concerned, I do not propose to discuss it. I do not understand that it would meet with any substantial opposition in this House upon either side of the Chamber.

The first proposition is simply to add to existing law the power in the hands of the President of the United States to issue another kind of bond. Under the act of 1875 the President has the power to borrow money and to issue bonds running thirty years and bearing 4 per cent interest, or bonds running ten years and bearing 5 per cent interest.

The proposition now before the House is to so add to his power that he may issue bonds bearing 3 per cent interest, payable in fifteen years, and redeemable after five years at the option of the Government.

Now, I am at a loss to understand how there can be any possible objection to placing this power in the hands of the President. If you assent that he may reach out thirty years into the future and mortgage the earnings of posterity at the rate of 4 per cent, ought he not to have the much lesser power to issue bonds running only fifteen years and bearing interest at the rate only of 3 per cent? Now, as a plain, practical proposition, let me cite to you some figures. Since the calamity of this Democratic Administration has come upon us there have been issued $162,000,000 of bonds. One hundred million dollars of those bonds bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent and run ten years. Sixty-two million dollars of those bonds run thirty years and bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. Upon the first issue we pay in interest $50,000,000. Upon the second issue we pay in interest $75,000,000. In other words, since this Democratic Administration came into power, bonds have been issued under existing law which place upon the shoulders of our people in the shape of interest $125,000,000. Now, if the bill that is now pending before this House had been a law upon the statute books we would have been compelled to pay only $24,300,000, or, in other words, if it had been a law it would have saved to the people of the United States $100,700,000. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I ask any gentleman on this floor to assign any good reason why we should not adopt this measure of economy in the interest of the people of the United States. Some gentleman suggested that he would strike out the provision of the act of 1875 and insert simply the provision of this act. But I want to suggest to my friend that no one can foresee the future conditions of the market nor the future condition of the country, and that no harm comes from giving to the President of the United States the margin that he will have if this bill becomes law supplemental to—additional to—the law of 1875.

I want to call your attention particularly and briefly to two important things in connection with this bill. In the first place, it proposes to make the American people the creditors of the American people. It proposes to pay such interest as we may be compelled to pay to our own people and not to foreign syndicates. It proposes to afford an opportunity to every man, woman, and child throughout this broad land, whether in city or in hamlet, to show their patriotism by investing their earnings, whether small or great, in the bonds of their own Government. [Applause on the Republican side.] It provides, in the second place, that the proceeds of any bonds that may be issued shall be a separate fund for redemption purposes, and confines them to that purpose alone. It prevents, so far as legislation can, the use of the proceeds of bond loans for paying deficiencies in the Treasury; and gentlemen may dismiss from their minds any doubt as to the question of its interference with the greenbacks. So far as the greenbacks are concerned, this law changes existing law not an iota. Then I put to you the question: If these things are so, what is the objection to this proposed form of relief in this the hour of the country's emergency?

It has been suggested that this bill is an indorsement of bond issues in time of peace. Not so. This bill does not compel the issue of any bonds. It provides only for the character of the issue when the emergency shall make it necessary.

It has been further suggested that bond issues in time of peace are not in accordance with Republican policy. This again is a mistake. The Republican party has always opposed, will always oppose, bond issues to meet revenue deficiencies, but it has always advocated bond issues when necessary to keep at par the American dollar, and so in 1878 it issued ninety-five and one-half millions. The Republican party believes, above all things, in the maintenance of all our money, whether gold, silver, or paper, at a parity. Its doctrine is parity of value in all our dollars. Now, I put another question: Who stands opposed to this proposed law?

Why, I venture to say, Mr. Speaker, that never in the history of Congressional legislation since the Government was founded has such a spectacle been presented as is presented to the country today. The President of the United States tells us that the pecuniary safety of the Republic is threatened. The Secretary of the Treasury echoes his cry. The President says to us: Gentlemen, forego the pleasures of this holiday season and come to my aid with legislation. The Congress of the United States—the majority party of the Congress of the United States—promptly responding to the President's call, do forego the pleasures of the Christmas season, and are here endeavoring to carry to the President the relief that he sought; and what is the President doing? Exercising all the power of the Administration to defeat the legislation that we are endeavoring to secure. [Applause on the Republican side.] What is the Secretary of the Treasury doing? Publishing authentic interviews in a morning newspaper decrying the legislation that we propose to consummate.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I am amazed—and I mean just what I say—I am amazed that a gentleman who has been a member of this House, a member of the other House, and a Cabinet officer has so little regard for the proprieties and decencies of public life and the theory of our Government. [Loud applause on the Republican side.] Why does the Administration oppose this measure? I will tell you why. Because it wants nothing but "gold" bonds, and it wants to deal with nobody but foreign syndicates. [Renewed applause.] Already it is an open secret that upon condition of the failure of this legislation an agreement has been made with another syndicate for another loan of anywhere from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000 at 4 per cent. That is the reason why the Administration is opposed to this measure, and why it seeks to put upon our shoulders the responsibility of its failure. Defeat this measure, my fellow-Republicans, and the Administration will say to the world—will say to our own complaining people—we are forced to make this loan at 4 per cent for thirty years because the Republican Congress would not give us authority to make any other.

Now, if that be so, if I have spoken the truth up to this time, will you tell me any reason why any Republican on the floor of this House should play into the hands of the Democratic Administration? [Loud applause on the Republican side.] Do you want, by voting with the Democracy, to increase the burden of this people another $16,000,000? Do you want to enable the Administration to put a responsibility upon us that we ought not to bear? Fellow-Republicans, there are times when there is not only an excuse, but when it is a duty to speak plainly. I beg of you to stop and think, to think long and soberly and intelligently, before you join the Democratic forces upon the other side of that aisle. [Loud applause on the Republican side.] The issue is plainly drawn. There can be no mistake about where the dividing line is. "Under which flag, Bezonian?" Will you vote with the Democratic party of this House, or will you follow after the banner of your own party in the interest of the American people? [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I ask a vote on each section separately.

The SPEAKER. The order gives that right, and accordingly the vote will be taken on the first section. The Clerk will report the first section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the authority given to the Secretary of the Treasury by the act approved January 14, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," he is authorized from time to time, at his discretion, to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par in coin, coupon or registered bonds of the United States to an amount sufficient for the object stated in this section, bearing not to exceed 3 per cent interest per annum, payable semiannually, and redeemable at the pleasure of the United States, in coin, after five years from their date, and payable in fifteen years after their date, with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions provided in said act for the bonds therein authorized. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall use the proceeds thereof for the redemption of United States legal-tender notes, and for no other purpose: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal or modify an act approved May 31, 1878, entitled "An act to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes." Whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall offer any of the bonds authorized for sale by this act or by the resumption act of 1875, he shall advertise the same and authorize subscriptions therefor to be made at the Treasury Department and at the subtreasuries and designated depositories of the United States.

Mr. CRISP. I demand the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the House that it will greatly facilitate the voting if order is kept on the floor, otherwise the Clerk can not hear the responses, and the responses should always be prompt and loud.

The Chair would further suggest that there may be three roll calls, so that gentlemen must bear that in mind and govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. CRISP. It is only on the final passage that I desire the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing that the first section be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. CRISP. I only desire the roll call on the passage of the section, and what I suggest is that it be considered as engrossed and read a third time, and then the vote be taken on the passage of the section.

The SPEAKER. Then, without objection, the vote will be taken on that question, and will be on the passage of the first section.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 171, nays 136, not voting 48; as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the passage of the second section.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The second section having now been adopted, the bill is passed.

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOLIDAY ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to make a motion which I will preface with a parliamentary inquiry. There is a desire on both sides of the House, as many gentlemen have been unable to go home for the holidays, that an opportunity to do so be afforded next week; and the general wish is that this object be accomplished by taking three-day recesses during the coming week, and not taking up any actual business until a week from next Monday. My parliamentary inquiry is, whether under the Constitution a recess can be taken from to-day until next Thursday, or whether that would be an adjournment for more than three legislative days. I do not know what the precedents have been. If the motion is permissible, I will move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. Sunday is not taken into account in these cases, but——

Mr. DINGLEY. Can the House adjourn from to-day until Thursday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the adjournment can not be to a later day than next Wednesday.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move, then, that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

Several MEMBERS. Wednesday.

Mr. DINGLEY. No; Wednesday will be New Year's Day. The idea is to take a three-day recess from next Tuesday, which would carry us over until Friday, and then another recess until Monday, with the general understanding that no business is to be transacted next week, but that business will be resumed a week from Monday. This, Mr. Speaker, will enable gentlemen who may desire to leave the city to do so safely; and I hope there will be no objection to that understanding. [Cries of "All right!"]

I move, then, that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Tuesday next.

Mr. CRISP. One moment, Mr. Speaker, before that motion is submitted. Let us have no misunderstanding. The general understanding is that we are to adjourn until Tuesday, then meet and immediately adjourn over until Friday, and on the assembling of the session on Friday to immediately adjourn until Monday, without the transaction of any business whatever; so that those who have business at home can go safely, and with the certainty that no business will be transacted next week.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is the understanding.

Mr. CRISP. That is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. If that is the understanding, the Chair will endeavor to carry it out as far as possible.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask a vote on my motion, that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Tuesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MANKATO, MINN.

Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit at this time for consideration a resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask if there is objection to its consideration.

The resolution was read at length.

It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized and directed to supply marble floor tiling, subbase, and wainscoting in the first story of the above-named building, notwithstanding the provision of the act of March 3, 1875, known as the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SCRANTON. I object.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE, VAN HORN VS. TARSNEY.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is represented and made to appear that since the completion of the record in the contested election case of Robert T. Van Horn vs. John C. Tarsney, from the Fifth Congressional district of Missouri, now pending in part 2 of the Committee on Elections of this House, and since the expiration of the time limited by law for the taking of evidence therein, new and material evidence pertinent to the issue in said contest, necessary to a just determination of the same and directly affecting the rights of the contestee therein, has been discovered by said contestee, and was not known to and could not have been discovered by the said contestee before the closing of the taking of testimony in said contest under the law: Now, therefore,

Resolved, That said contest be reopened for the taking of further testimony therein; that the said contestee shall, within ten days after the passage of this resolution, give notice to said contestant, or his attorneys, of the time and place at which testimony will be taken on behalf of said contestee, and the names of the witnesses to be examined, and that the taking of such testimony shall begin not later than ten days from the date of said notice, and may continue on behalf of said contestee for a period of ten days and no longer; that upon the conclusion of the taking of said testimony on behalf of said contestee the contestant shall have the right to take testimony in rebuttal for a like period of ten days, first giving to the contestee like notice; that in all other respects the taking of testimony herein authorized shall be governed by the law regulating contested elections, save that testimony so taken shall be returned to said part 2 of the Committee on Elections of this House instead of the Clerk of this House.

Resolved further, That the testimony taken under the foregoing resolution shall be made a part of the record in said contested election case, subject to all legal objections.

Mr. TARSNEY. In support of the resolution and showing the materiality of the testimony, I send to the desk and ask to have read a copy of an affidavit upon the subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman proposes to refer this to the Committee on Elections?

Mr. TARSNEY. I do.

The SPEAKER. Is it necessary to read the affidavit?

Mr. TARSNEY. I think so, Mr. Speaker, as an evidence of the good faith and materiality of the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I desire to be heard on that question before the reference is made.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the affidavit.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF MISSOURI, County of Jackson, ss:

H. E. J. Hartman, A. B. Zweifel, F. M. Harrison, J. T. Dwyer, J. J. Cassidy, W. H. Hunt, C. A. Hawk, and J. J. Franklin, being duly sworn, upon their oaths depose and say: That they are clerks employed in the office of the commissioners of election within and for Kansas City, Jackson County, Mo.; that they have examined the ballots cast in the fifth precinct of the Second Ward of said Kansas City at the general election held in said city on the 6th day of November, A. D. 1894; that of the first 200 ballots cast in said fifth precinct at said election and contained in the ballot box of said precinct, now in the custody of said commissioners of election, Robert T. Van Horn, Republican candidate for Congress in the Fifth Congressional district of Missouri at said election, received all of the votes upon the ballots bearing the following voting numbers, to wit: 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 85, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 157, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 167, 168, 171, 178, 178, 179, 180, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200.

Affiants state that all of the foregoing numbers were Democratic ballots, and that the name of John C. Tarsney, the Democratic candidate for Congress in said Fifth Congressional district at said election, was erased and the name of said Van Horn written in lieu thereof; that the name of said Van Horn was evidently written on said ballots by two, and only two, persons; that each of said persons wrote said Van Horn's name upon about one-half of the ballots above enumerated and numbered; that the ballots above described and numbered and containing the name of said Van Horn as the candidate for Congress, are a part of the 200 ballots numbered by the judges and clerks of election in said fifth precinct as having been cast at said precinct in said election, and which appear upon the poll books of said precinct alphabetically and numbered consecutively from 1 to 200, both numbers inclusive.

Affiants state that the foregoing facts appear from an inspection of the ballots contained in the ballot box in said precinct as having been cast in said precinct at said election and the poll books used in said fifth precinct at said election, all of which are now in the custody of said commissioners of elections, at their office in Kansas City, Jackson County, Mo., and further deponents say not.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 6th day of November, A. D. 1895.

C. EMIL JOHNSON,
Notary Public, Jackson County, Mo.

My commission expires July 10, 1899.
Notary's fee, 50 cents, paid.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the House by making any extended statement upon this matter. I shall certainly avoid what would be manifestly improper, and shall not refer to anything that does not bear directly upon the resolution before the House. I will state that the record in the case shows that 200 ballots were counted in this precinct that were unquestionably illegal. The contestant has shown them to be illegal. I concede they were illegal. The evidence conclusively demonstrates that they were illegal, and those ballots, which it is admitted on all sides were illegal, are the ballots that are specified and numbered in that affidavit which has been read. At the time the testimony in this case closed it closed without the possibility of knowing for whom those ballots had been cast. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose now to ask this House to pass this resolution, because I myself was in doubt whether it was best to reopen this case and have the testimony taken under the general rules for taking testimony in contested cases, or whether it was better to have it referred to the Committee on Elections, for that committee either in full committee or by subcommittee to take this testimony. I shall therefore ask that the resolution, with the accompanying affidavit, the original of which is in my possession and which will be presented to the committee, be referred to the committee, and that they may report back to the House the best means of reaching the real truth concerning this matter. I shall be able to satisfy this committee that this is newly discovered evidence, that it was not within the knowledge of myself or my attorneys when the matter was open for investigation, and could not have been within our knowledge at that time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, this is in the nature of an application by a sitting member of this House for leave to take testimony in a contest that is being waged for his seat after the statutory time for taking testimony has expired. I recognize, of course, the fact that the statutory method of procedure is not exclusive. Indeed, it has been held that the provisions are not mandatory, and I think correctly so held. But it seems to me that the House ought not to undertake to exercise its unquestioned right to permit the case to be opened up, or even to refer a resolution to the Committee on Elections, in order that they may determine on the propriety of opening up the case and reporting the result back to the House, until there is some kind of a prima facie showing of necessity made to the House.

It is well enough to meet this question at the very threshold, because I am informed that there will be other applications of a similar character to this one, both by contestants and contestees, made to the House. It is therefore highly important that we should have the attention of members upon this subject, to the end that the precedent here established may not be made in haste, but may be one upon which we can depend in the future in matters of a like nature.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. Would it not be proper to refer such a resolution to the committee for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is a prima facie case?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If the gentleman will permit me, I will answer that before I get through. This is an application upon the part of a sitting member. Of course if he be not entitled to his seat—and upon that point I express no opinion and have no opinion whatever—every minute of delay is giving him that to which he is really not entitled, and is keeping the contestant out of that to which he is entitled. I only mention this to show the gravity of the question and the importance of determining it correctly.

Again, the Committee on Elections No. 2 is ready and willing to discharge its duties to the utmost extent; but it may not be improper for me to say that the committee has eleven contests pending before it which will require a great deal of very hard work, extending over a protracted period. It is therefore important, I think, in matters of this kind that not even a motion referring this resolution to the committee should be adopted unless the House is reasonably satisfied of the propriety of such action. Now, before the House, of its own accord, would undertake, without a reference to a committee, to permit any party whose seat is contested to take testimony after the time has expired which the statute gives—and it seems to me, also, before it should refer a resolution to a committee, asking the committee to report as to the propriety of such action—there should be before the House some reasonable ground for believing, first, that the party asking it has not been guilty of any neglect, and, second, that the testimony when taken is relevant and will have a tendency to change the result.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. I think my friend misapprehends the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I think not. I understand the gentleman to move to refer it to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TARSNEY] does not ask any action on the part of the House. He proposes to refer this resolution to the Committee on Elections, so that the committee can look at it and report the resolution back to the House if the committee find it advisable, and if not to dispose of it in committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Suppose that this is true. The point I am insisting on is this, that before a reference is made to the committee, before the committee is asked to examine into the question—and an examination of it will, as I understand it, possibly necessitate an examination of the whole case from beginning to end—before this reference is made the contestee had better make it appear to the House in some way that he has exercised some diligence, and that when the testimony is taken it will have some relevancy.

There is not a thing before the House—except the mere statement of the gentleman, and that is not made in detail—tending to show that he has exercised any diligence. It is recited in the resolution—and that resolution in point of fact is not true—that "it appearing to the House" that he has discovered new testimony which he could not with diligence have discovered before. There is nothing here but the mere naked statement of the gentleman, and I imagine in a matter of this gravity there ought to be some statement under oath. And besides, it is stated there that a number of tickets which were Democratic tickets were found after the election in a ballot box which was in the hands of a legal custodian, and that they had across the name of the contestee a mark, and that there is written upon them the name of the contestant, all in the handwriting of two individuals.

Now, that may very well be and still the ballots be lawful ones. There is nothing in the affidavit just read and nothing stated by the gentleman from Missouri tending to show that under the election laws of Missouri these ballots would not be perfectly honest ballots.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRISP. Does my friend intend to object to the introduction of the resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Not at all. But this is asking a reference of it to the committee.

Mr. CRISP. The Chair will refer it of his own motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it was not necessary for the gentleman from Missouri to present it, although he had a right, as a question of privilege, to so present it to the House for its action.

Mr. CRISP. The Chair will refer it to the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. It must be referred or not referred.

The SPEAKER. The matter having been brought before the House in this way, and having been discussed, the Chair thinks the House may dispose of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Just one second, and I will conclude.

Mr. CRISP. The House can not reject it. The question is what the committee will do when it is referred to it. That is all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Just a minute further.

Now, the resolution, if referred, is almost in the nature of an instruction. It states that, "It appearing to the House that the party has used due diligence," etc. Now, that is the very question that the committee should be called upon to determine, if this reference is to be made. I would much rather that some gentleman not a member of the committee had made this point. I do not want to interpose an objection which will deprive the gentleman from Missouri, or any other member whose seat is in contest, of a full opportunity to take any testimony that he may deem proper and necessary; but I simply want to call the attention of this House to what this will lead to, and to insist that a member should make out a prima facie case that would justify a reference before this labor is entailed upon the committee. It seems to me that, as a matter of practice, any gentleman who seeks to delay the determination of his case in order to take additional evidence ought certainly to make such a showing before it is granted him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the reference to a committee is not action of the House indorsing the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I beg pardon.

The SPEAKER. A reference to a committee by the House is not the action of the House indorsing the resolution. It is a reference to the committee for the purpose of ascertaining what the committee would recommend in the matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That would simply obviate one of the objections I have stated, Mr. Speaker. I have no purpose to throw obstacles in the way of a gentleman who desires to take the testimony of witnesses as to newly discovered evidence.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman propose?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I have tried to make my meaning clear. I call attention to the fact that, if there is any way to prevent it, there should be no reference at all of such a matter as this to an Elections Committee until such a prima facie case of necessity is made out as will justify the reference. But if the House or the Speaker desires to act with these statements before it, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the reference to the Committee on Elections No. 2. Without objection, the reference will be considered as made.

There was no objection.

CASE OF JOHN L. WALLER.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois rises with a privileged report, which he will present.

Mr. HITT. The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution of inquiry in relation to the imprisonment of John L. Waller, have instructed me to report it back with an amendment and to ask for its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the House of Representatives all information which has been received by him or by the State Department, in regard to the arrest and trial of John L. Waller, a citizen of the United States, by French authorities in the Island of Madagascar, and his imprisonment in the Republic of France, including all correspondence between Edward Telfair Wetter, United States consul at Madagascar, and Mr. Edwin F. Uhl, of the Department of State, and all records, documents, and evidence in any way touching said matters in his possession, or in possession of the State Department.

The report (by Mr. HITT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the following resolution—

"Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the House of Representatives all information which has been received by him or by the State Department in regard to the arrest and trial of John L. Waller, a citizen of the United States, by French authorities in the Island of Madagascar, and his imprisonment in the Republic of France, including all correspondence between Edward Telfair Wetter, United States consul at Madagascar, and Mr. Edwin F. Uhl, of the Department of State, and all records, documents, and evidence in any way touching said matters in his possession, or in possession of the State Department"—

Beg leave to report the same with an amendment omitting the words, "including all correspondence between Edward Telfair Wetter, United States consul at Madagascar, and Mr. Edwin F. Uhl, of the Department of State," and recommend the adoption of the resolution with said amendment.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, that is a unanimous report of the committee, and on its adoption I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HITT. I am also directed to report back a similar resolution introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WOODMAN] with a recommendation that it lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be laid on the table.

FIRING ON SCHOONER HENRY CROSBY.

Mr. HITT. I am also directed to report back with an amendment a resolution in regard to the firing on the schooner Henry Crosby.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the following resolution—

"Whereas the schooner Henry Crosby, a vessel duly enrolled under the laws of the United States, and commanded by Abel F. Stubbs, a citizen thereof, was fired upon by troops of the Republic of Santo Domingo while at anchor flying the American flag at Azua, in said Republic of Santo Domingo, on the 10th day of December, 1893, and members of its crew shot and seriously wounded, and property belonging to the vessel destroyed; and

"Whereas the owners, officers, and crew of said vessel have petitioned the Department of State for indemnity for such injury and loss, and have received no relief:

"Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the House of Representatives, if not in his opinion incompatible with the public interests, the diplomatic and consular correspondence and the correspondence between the Government of the United States and the owners, officers, or crew, their agents or attorneys, and all other reports or correspondence relating to said attack and claim demanded"—

Report the same back and recommend its adoption with two amendments: First, strike out "was," in the fourth line of the preamble, and insert "is alleged to have been;" and, second, strike out, in the last line of the preamble, the words "and have received no relief."

Mr. HITT. This is a unanimous report. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs were agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

AFFAIRS IN CUBA.

Mr. HITT. I am further instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back a resolution in regard to affairs in Cuba, and to ask the adoption of the resolution with an amendment.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the following resolution—

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to furnish for the information of the House copies of all correspondence that has passed between our Government and the monarchy of Spain in relation to the warfare which is and has been taking place in the Island of Cuba between the inhabitants of Cuba and Spain since February last, and also any information he has as to the formation of the Republic of Cuba at Jimaquayu, in the Province of Camaquay, on September 16 last"—

Report the same back and recommend the adoption of the following substitute therefor:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to communicate to the House of Representatives, if not inconsistent with the public interests, copies of all correspondence relating to affairs in Cuba since February last."

Mr. HITT. This report also is unanimous. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution reported by the committee as a substitute was agreed to.

THOMAS F. BAYARD.

Mr. HITT. I submit also a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs upon preamble and resolution relating to Thomas F. Bayard, ambassador of the United States to Great Britain. The committee recommend the adoption of the resolution with amendments.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the following preamble and resolution—

"Whereas Thomas F. Bayard, the ambassador of the United States to Great Britain, is reported by the London Times newspaper to have said in a public speech delivered in Boston, England, on the 2d day of August, 1895, 'The President stood in the midst of a strong, self-confident, and oftentimes violent people, men who sought to have their own way. It took a real man to govern the people of the United States;' and

"Whereas said Bayard is further reported by the press of this country to have said in a public speech delivered in Edinburgh, Scotland, on the 7th day of November, 1895, 'In my own country I have witnessed the insatiable growth of a form of socialism styled "protection," which has done more to corrupt public life, to banish men of independent mind from public councils, and to lower the tone of national representation than any other single cause. Protection now controlling, the sovereign power of taxation has been perverted from its proper function of creating revenue to support the Government into an engine of selfish profit allied with combinations called trusts. It thus has sapped the popular conscience by giving corrupting largesses to special classes, and it throws legislation into the political market, where jobbers and chafferers take the place of statesmen;' and

"Whereas it is not one of the functions of an ambassador to insult in the country to which he is accredited the people he is supposed to represent, and it is consistent neither with the character of the office nor with the dignity and independence of the people of the United States that their ambassador abroad should make violent partisan speeches on questions relating to our domestic policy upon foreign soil: Therefore

"Be it resolved, That the President be, and he hereby is, requested to inform the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public interests, what steps, if any, he has taken to ascertain whether said Bayard made said speeches, and if he has ascertained that he did make said speeches, what steps, if any, he has taken to recall or to censure said Bayard"—

Beg leave to report the same back with three amendments. Amend the second "whereas" of the preamble by striking out "said Bayard" and inserting "Thomas F. Bayard, ambassador of the United States to Great Britain"; also by striking out the third "whereas"; and amending the resolution so that it shall read—

"Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to the House, if not incompatible with the public interests, any information or correspondence showing whether Thomas F. Bayard, the ambassador of the United States to Great Britain, made said speeches, and if so, what action, if any, has been taken thereon by the President"—

And recommend the adoption of the preamble and resolution with these amendments.

Mr. HITT. The report which has been read was arrived at by the committee in passing upon the resolution purely as a resolution of inquiry; and from it is eliminated everything else. The two extracts from speeches stated to have been made are preserved for identification and description. Then follows the resolution in the ordinary form of a resolution of inquiry. And therefore, as we were substantially unanimous in our decision, except as to one gentleman, who refrained from voting, I will move the previous question, unless some gentleman desires to ask a question in reference to the matter.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky: I do not desire to debate the resolution——

Mr. HITT. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I only wish to say that it is a resolution of inquiry, and that I am opposed to it. I do not approve of the resolution and shall not discuss it now; but when a response is sent to this House by the President or the Secretary of State the time will probably be more appropriate for giving an expression of my views on the matter. I simply state that I did not vote for the resolution, and do not approve of it; but its object is to obtain information for the use of the committee.

Mr. HITT. I will simply add, in explanation and justification of the action of the committee, that they were at the time they adopted the report under instruction and direction of the House to make inquiries regarding the subject-matter of this resolution. That was under a separate resolution adopted by this House; and this was framed to carry out the instructions given by permitting them to obtain the information necessary.

I now demand the previous question on the adoption of the amendments and the resolution.

The previous question was ordered; under the operation of which the amendments submitted by the Committee on Foreign Affairs were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ACCEPTANCE OF THE RAM KATAHDIN.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I am requested to call up from the Speaker's desk Senate joint resolution No. 32, authorizing and directing the acceptance of the ram Katahdin, and thereby making the said ram a part of the United States Navy, for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to accept the ram Katahdin, and to make said vessel a part of the United States Navy.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Clerk to read, in explanation of the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs, a communication from the Secretary of the Navy upon this subject.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., December 23, 1895.

* * * In answer to your request "for information as to the grounds which prevented the acceptance of the ram by the Department and a statement of the facts as to the manner of construction, and whether the ram does not furnish to all intents and purposes a substantial compliance with the contract, and whether in your (my) judgment it is not desirable that the ram be accepted and put upon the list of commissioned vessels of the United States Navy," I have to state as follows:

The ship is well built and has been completed in accordance with the contract, save in a few minor particulars, and is a desirable vessel for the Navy, being designed for harbor defense. The construction of the Katahdin was authorized as an experiment, and inasmuch as the proper method of applying the principles of naval architecture to a vessel of her type had never been demonstrated, the results that would be obtained were by no means ascertainable, and it was therefore largely conjectural as to what performance she would be capable of. The Bath Iron Works accepted the contract for this vessel upon faith in the Department's designs of hull and machinery; they complied with the letter of the contract and endeavored in good faith to carry out the desires of the Department in regard to particulars that had not been fully prescribed. They performed their part of the undertaking in the most satisfactory manner and did everything that it was possible to do to make the vessel fulfill the purposes of Congress in authorizing her construction and prove successful and efficient. Their success is evidenced by the fact that the power which the engines were designed to develop was exceeded, but it seems that the good workmanship applied on the hull could not offset the resistance to be met with on account of the peculiar lines of this type of vessel, and her failure to develop the required speed can in no wise be attributed to fault on the part of the contractors. Owing to the way the ram behaved on the trial when her engines were exerting their full power, the Department is of opinion that it would probably be impossible to make a ship of this kind run at 17 knots an hour with engines of any horsepower that could be put into her.

The vessel was sent to the navy-yard, New York, to remain there at the risk and expense of the contractors until the question as to her acceptance should be decided, and she is still at that yard.

The Department recommends that it be given authority to accept the vessel under the contract for her construction, the contractors to make good all uncompleted work necessary to put the vessel in the condition required by the contract. * * *

H. A. HERBERT, Secretary.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
United States Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, is this a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HENDERSON. A privileged report?

The SPEAKER. It is in the regular order.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, the communication just read from the Secretary of the Navy seems to me to explain clearly the necessity for this joint resolution. It is a measure in the interest of the welfare and defense of the country, and unless some gentleman desires to ask a question in reference to it I shall ask the previous question.

Mr. HENDERSON. Allow me first to see if I understand the purpose of the gentleman. Is this a proposition to accept a vessel from the contractors where the terms of the contract have not been complied with?

Mr. CUMMINGS. It is to accept a vessel when it was impossible for the contractors to comply with the condition of the contract.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then the Government and the contractors entered into an impossible contract?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The plans and specifications were drawn up by the Navy Department, supposing that an engine power of 4,500 horses would be able to give the vessel a speed of 17 knots an hour. The contractor increased the horsepower to 5,200 and still it was not sufficient to send the vessel through the water at the rate of speed required.

The provisions of the specifications for the construction of the vessel have been such that it was utterly impossible, as the Secretary of the Navy shows in his letter, for the contractors to obtain that speed.

Mr. HENDERSON. And the Government, I suppose, had its inspectors there all the time the work was progressing?

Mr. CUMMINGS. It is presumed that they had.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am only asking for information, because we have in my own town vessels under construction under the same circumstances and I want the House and the country to understand what we are doing here.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Let me say to the gentleman that this is the only ram ever built by any Government on the face of the earth that has attained a speed of over 16 knots an hour, and she will be able with that speed to destroy any battle ship ever built or owned by any foreign country at this time.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I merely wanted this distinctly understood, as I have some interests to look after that may be of the same character. I have entire confidence in the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. I was not able to hear the reading of all the report. I wish to ask the gentleman whether this is a proposition to accept the ship outright or to give the Secretary authority to accept it when the conditions that were proposed originally are complied with?

Mr. CUMMINGS. It authorizes and directs the Secretary to accept it, and this resolution is offered at the request of the Secretary, as shown by the letter which has just been read.

Mr. McMILLIN. If I understand this, it does not make the acceptance peremptory upon the Secretary, but leaves to him the discretion?

Mr. CUMMINGS. It makes the acceptance peremptory, as I understand it. It authorizes and directs.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Secretary recommends that Congress accord him the authority to accept the ship. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the contractors in this case have been indorsed by the Secretary of the Navy, and by both the construction bureaus, as having performed all their part of the work with exceptional ability, and that in addition to what they have done, in the endeavor of the contractors to attain the rate of speed which was estimated for by the Department, but which it is proved impossible to attain, they have expended, outside of the specifications, more than $40,000 themselves, in order to try to bring this ship up to the contract rate of speed.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. Then the only point upon which the contractors failed was that of speed?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The only point in which this vessel falls below the ironclad conditions of the contract—which proved to be more ironbound than any of the other contracts for ships—is less than 1 knot of speed; and Secretary Herbert, under authority of the Boards of Construction and Steam Engineering, states explicitly in his letter that not only are the contractors not at all responsible for the failure to get the speed required, but he states that the experiments with this ship, which is of entirely novel construction, so that no man was able to estimate accurately the degree of resistance that would be met by a vessel of this peculiar form—the Secretary states that the trial trip demonstrated that it was not only impossible to attain the rate that had been calculated in the plans of the Department, but that the contractors furnished 200 horsepower in excess of the specifications.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Four hundred horsepower.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Several hundred horsepower in excess; but the Secretary says that it has satisfied him, and that the Department is of opinion that it would probably be impossible to make a ship of this kind run at 17 knots an hour with engines of any horsepower that could be put in her. That is the only point in which they have failed to absolutely fulfill all the terms of the contract. The contractors had too much faith in the plans and specifications of the Department, which now prove, according to the statement of the Secretary, to have required in the contract practically a mechanical impossibility.

Mr. SAYERS. In all other respects it comes up to the requirements of the contract?

Mr. BOUTELLE. In all other respects the ship is reported as splendidly built, fulfilling every condition of the contract, and, in the opinion of the Secretary and of the chiefs of the bureaus, is a most desirable vessel to be added to the Navy of the United States.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. COX. Do I understand from the gentleman's statement that the Secretary of the Navy is perfectly satisfied with the vessel as constructed?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes, in every way——

Mr. COX. And asks that it be accepted?

Mr. BOUTELLE. And recommends to Congress in his letter that he be authorized to accept it, which he can not do under the technical conditions of the contract.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will say, in conclusion, that this resolution passed the Senate unanimously yesterday, and I hope that it will unanimously pass the House to-day.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I read from the Secretary's letter:

> The Department recommends that it be given authority to accept the vessel under the contract for her construction, the contractors to make good all uncompleted work necessary to put the vessel in the condition required by the contract. * * *

The resolution reads as follows:

> That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to accept the ram Katahdin, and to make said vessel a part of the United States Navy.

I should be glad to know the reason for the difference between the language of the resolution and the recommendation of the Secretary?

Mr. MILNES. Read the latter part of the resolution.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman permit me to answer my friend from Illinois? I desire to say in that regard that the uncompleted details are simply the last finishing touches which are always put upon a ship before she is turned over finally to the Government. They only amount in this case to a few hundred dollars, the final painting and some few minor details, which the contractors expect to fully complete to the satisfaction of the Department.

Mr. LOUD. Why is not that included in the resolution?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not know why it was not. It was probably an oversight, but there will not be any trouble about that. The contractors expect to go on and put this ship in exactly the order that was contemplated by the contract, with the exception of waiving the speed clause. That is all.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will say in answer to my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that this resolution is perfectly satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy, and I presume that the word "direct" is put in there because he desires Congress to assume the responsibility.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman now says to the House, as I understand, after conversation with the Secretary, that the joint resolution meets with his approval.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It does. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CUMMINGS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MANKATO, MINN.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The joint resolution is as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 60) concerning the completion of the United States court-house and post-office building at Mankato, Minn.

Whereas a clause in the sundry civil appropriation act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 395), relating to public buildings, provides: "No change in said plan involving an increase of expense exceeding 10 per cent of the amount to which said building was limited shall be allowed or paid by any officer of the Government without the special authority of Congress;" and

Whereas in providing (during the last recess of Congress) for a much-needed enlargement of the United States court-house and post-office building at Mankato, Minn., (still in process of erection) the limitations prescribed by the above-cited clause made it necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury to so modify the plans and specifications for said building as to provide a finish inferior to that originally intended: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to supply marble floor, tiling, subbase, and wainscot in the first story of the above-named building as shown and called for by the original drawings and specifications: Provided, That the present appropriation for said buildings and grounds shall not be exceeded.

During the reading of the resolution,

Mr. DINGLEY said: Mr. Speaker, this resolution has just been read, and unless there is a call for its being read again I think it is hardly worth while to reread it.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman may explain the joint resolution.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, in 1891 an appropriation of $100,000 was made for the erection of a court-house and post-office in the city of Mankato, Minn. The contracts for the substructure and for the superstructure were let at different times. When the substructure was completed it was seen that the building proposed was too small not only for the future needs of the city, but even for those of the present. We were embarrassed by that fact and seriously contemplated coming to Congress to ask for a larger appropriation.

Upon inquiry at the office of the Supervising Architect, I discovered that the estimates of cost on which was based the plan of our building called for Indiana limestone, Portland cement, and other materials that would have to be brought from a distance.

But, Mr. Speaker, Mankato is literally "founded on the rock," rock that has no superior for beauty and durability, rock which is shipped for building and bridge purposes to all parts of the country; and right within the city limits is produced the finest natural cement in the world. Having convinced the Supervising Architect of these facts, I secured from him an order substituting our home stone and cement for those previously contemplated.

Then, on account of the proximity of these two important items to the proposed building, we secured surprisingly low bids for the superstructure.

Here was our opportunity to have our building enlarged without appealing to Congress for more money. At my request, the Supervising Architect made a plan for an addition to the building. To expedite matters, a committee, consisting of the contractor, one of our leading citizens, and myself, came down here last summer. After a conference the contractor and the Architect reached a conclusion whereby the enlargement of the building could be made within the appropriation. When the matter was submitted to the law division of the Architect's Office we encountered the law recited in the preamble to the pending resolution, that no addition could be made involving an expenditure greater than 10 per cent of the original estimate. The addition would involve an expenditure of about 12 per cent; and so, to get the addition and yet not exceed that 10 per cent, the contractor and the Architect agreed that the lobby of the building should be finished in wood instead of in marble. They did this hoping that by the time that point was reached in the construction of the building Congress would have convened and we could get its consent to an expenditure of money that had already been appropriated. This is the object of the pending resolution. I direct attention to the fact that we ask for no added appropriation, and that when the building is completed there will be $2,000 or $3,000 to be returned to the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I understand from the gentleman that the authority he asks will not entail the expenditure of over $100,000 in all?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It will entail an expenditure of about $98,000 in all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Pending that motion, the Chair submits the following report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, and will cause to be laid on the table the House resolution relating to the ram Katahdin.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2264) fixing the times for holding the circuit and district courts of the northern district of Iowa and of the southern district of Iowa;

A bill (H. R. 2720) to make Palm Beach, Fla., a subport of entry and delivery; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 56) to transfer certain offices of the United States in the Territory of Utah to the officers of the State of Utah.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HURLEY, until January 6, 1896, on account of important business.

To Mr. HUBBARD, until January 6, 1896, on account of important business.

To Mr. DANIELS, for five days, on account of New Years.

To Mr. TRELOAR, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. WHITE, for ten days, on account of important business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine moves that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday next, December 31, at 12 o'clock m.

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

PAPER ON TRADE WITH ARGENTINA.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have a communication from Señor Don Vicente J. Dominguez, chargé d'affaires of the Argentine legation at this place, on the subject of commercial relations between that country and ours, especially in view of pending tariff legislation, which I ask may be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair be kind enough to announce what was the request of the Senator from Indiana?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senartor from Indiana requested that the paper he presents be referred to the Committee on Finance and printed.

Mr. HOAR. What is the paper?

Mr. VOORHEES. It is a communication from the chargé d'affaires of the Argentine legation (now in charge of the legation in this place in the absence of the minister) on the subject of the pending and proposed tariff legislation.

Mr. HOAR. To whom is it addressed?

Mr. VOORHEES. It is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to interpose any objection to anything the Senator from Indiana desires, as I hope he knows very well——

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. But I think the Senate has heretofore been pretty strict in refusing to receive petitions or communications of any sort from citizens of a foreign government unless they come through the Department of State. It would seem to me, without much reflection, that the principle is peculiarly applicable to communications from the accredited representatives of foreign governments, and it appears to me that the Senate can not properly receive such a communication. Is there not something in the rules on the subject?

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I will state what perhaps I should have stated when I first presented the paper. The writer of this communication informs me, in writing to me this morning, as he did verbally on Saturday last, that he had communicated with the Secretary of State, Mr. Olney, and that Mr. Olney had sent his communication to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I ventured to say to him that the Committee on Finance, of which I am chairman yet for a little while—only a little while—has charge of that subject; and thereupon, acting upon that suggestion, he has sent the whole subject to me, I will say, with the understanding that it would go to the Finance Committee. That is all.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to read—it has been handed me by another Senator—the fourth clause of the seventh rule of the Senate?

> No petition or memorial or other paper signed by citizens or subjects of a foreign power shall be received, unless the same be transmitted to the Senate by the President.

It seems to me this document comes clearly within that rule.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Massachusetts knows I do not wish to violate the rules. I know less of them, however, than he does.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. If, as I understood the Senator, the Secretary of State has sent this communication to the Committee on Foreign Relations——

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes.

Mr. HALE. Everything that the Senator desires to accomplish may be done if that committee reports it to the Senate for reference to the Committee on Finance. That cuts the whole knot.

Mr. VOORHEES. I suppose it is as much a violation of the rule just read to communicate the paper through the Committee on Foreign Relations as through the Committee on Finance. I do not see the difference.

Mr. HALE. But I understood the Senator to say that the Secretary of State had sent the communication to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORGAN. The Secretary of State has not sent a communication from any diplomatic agent of the Government of Argentina to the Committee on Foreign Relations. He wrote a note to the chairman of that committee informing me that such a communication, or some communication on this subject, had been received from the chargé d'affaires of the Argentine Republic; but he did not communicate the paper itself to the committee. Thereupon I wrote to the Secretary and asked him his opinion in regard to the power and jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States in considering a question of that sort on a presentation made by a foreign government. The matter stands in that situation. The rule quoted by the Sentor from Massachusetts is of course obligatory upon the Senate of the United States. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that he withdraw his motion for the present and see whether the Secretary of State intends to send in the communication.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will let the motion stand over without action. I ask that the subject may go over just in the shape it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the fourth clause of Rule VII, which has been read, the paper, in the judgment of the Chair, can not be received as presented, but on the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana the matter will go over for the present.

Mr. MORGAN subsequently said: With respect to the papers that were presented this morning by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] in regard to the tariff question as affecting the Argentine Republic, I find I was in error in one particular. I thought all the papers were new, but I find there are but two of them which have not been hitherto presented in some form to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate. The Secretary of State sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations a communication addressed to him by Señor Dominguez, the chargé d'affaires of the Argentine Republic, relating to the tariff on wool. Since the communication was sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations there has been no meeting of that committee; and as chairman of it I did not consider that I had the right to bring the paper before this body without the authority of the committee. If the executive department choose to make a communication to the Senate or to either House of Congress upon a matter of this kind, of course that communication ought to have been addressed directly to Congress; and not being a member of the executive government at all, but merely a Senator and chairman of a Senate committee, I concluded it was my duty to await the action of the committee before I brought that paper before the Senate, if at all. The chargé d'affaires, however, must have understood and did understand, no doubt, that the paper had been communicated to the Senate through the Committee on Foreign Relations. The other two papers to which I refer are new and have not heretofore been under consideration by the Senate or by any of its committees, as I understand.

I wanted to make this explanation so that the Senator from Indiana might be set entirely right, for I observe in the papers he has submitted to the Senate that there is a copy of the communication which was sent to me as chairman of the committee, and a copy of that communication is made the predicate for the presentation of the additional papers. That is all that I find it necessary to say about it at the present time, merely to clear up what might otherwise be considered as a matter of delicacy between the Senator from Indiana and the chargé d'affaires of the Argentine Republic.

I will say this further about it, Mr. President, that, doubting whether such legislation as is suggested by the communication itself, if it was enacted by Congress, would be an interference with the favored-nations clauses of the various commercial treaties that we have, I asked the Secretary of State for his opinion upon it, that I might submit that, in conjunction with this communication, to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The subject will immediately pass out of my hands when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] succeeds in the chairmanship of that committee, and I desired to make this explanation before the committees were reorganized.

to make such payment in gold coin whenever the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold is less than the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver, and to continue to pay in such gold coin until the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold shall be equal to the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver, but when the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold shall be greater than the market value of 412½ grains of pure silver he shall pay said coin obligations as they mature in silver coin, and continue to pay the same in silver coin until the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver shall be equal to the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida, coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL December 24, 1895, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate, who shall be charged with the duty of investigating the subject of the efforts of corporations in the State of Florida, or of the president and directors thereof, to control the election of members of Congress from the State of Florida, or to influence the legislation of Congress; also to investigate and report to the Senate whether corrupt means, bribery, or free transportation have been or are being used to influence such elections in the State of Florida; also to inquire and report to the Senate whether the use of such influences or means is consistent with the preservation of the Republic of the United States and the rights and liberties of the people, and to report a bill for the prevention of such practices.

Mr. CALL. I ask that that resolution be allowed to go over without losing its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

PAN-AMERICAN UNION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska, coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the following resolution submitted by Mr. ALLEN December 24, 1895:

Whereas recent events have shown that European nations are making an aggressive attempt to obtain a greater foothold on the American Continent; and

Whereas such an attempt shows the necessity of a closer union of the American Republics: Therefore

Be it resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the United States of America should, as speedily as possible, invite all American Republics to enter into a closer union, to be known as the Pan-American Union, for the purpose of promoting the general, industrial, and commercial welfare of the members thereof, and secure said respective Republics from European or other foreign encroachment. Such union should be made of lasting benefit to the people of the several Republics forming it and a unit of value should be established and maintained therein, which shall be a full legal tender and circulate freely between the various Republics and the people thereof.

Mr. ALLEN. Let that be passed over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AFFAIRS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida, coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the following resolution submitted by Mr. CALL December 24, 1895:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and are hereby, directed to furnish, as soon as practicable, for the information of the Senate, a statement showing—

First. The names of all streets, avenues, alleys, and reservations in the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown which are partially or wholly unpaved, and the total length thereof so unpaved; also the length thereof unsewered; also the length thereof without water mains, together with the estimated cost of fully improving the same.

Second. An estimate of the full amount required to carry out the provisions of the act of March 2, 1893, to provide a permanent system of highways in the District of Columbia outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown; the total number of feet of land in streets, avenues, and reservations required to be condemned in each subdivision or piece of land and the value of the same; the number and estimated value of buildings required to be condemned to carry out the provisions of said act in such districts as are prepared by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; the total number of feet of land in streets, avenues, etc., in each subdivision or piece of land that will be abandoned, and the amount and nature of improvements of such streets, avenues, etc., the amount of said improvements at public and private expense. Also an estimate of the cost of fully improving said streets, avenues, and reservations by grading, paving, sewering, and laying water mains, building bridges, culverts, etc., in such streets, avenues, and reservations as are to be condemned by the provisions of said highway act; an estimate of the value of property held by the United States, and the assessed value of private property held in the county, outside of Washington and Georgetown.

Third. A statement showing the amount of taxes collected in the cities of Washington and Georgetown and the county, respectively, by years, from 1878 to 1894, both inclusive, and in like manner the amount expended in each of said sections by the District of Columbia for the same period.

Fourth. The amount of the revenues of the District of Columbia applied by the Treasurer of the United States to liquidate any undue debt of the District of Columbia to the United States or other parties from 1878 to 1895 and from what fund taken and to what debt applied, and if any of such revenue has been refunded and the amount and time of such refunding; an estimate of the amount of the revenues of the District of Columbia that will remain above the appropriation asked for at the end of the years 1895 and 1896.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the present consideration of that resolution, which was submitted at the request of a labor association of the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. Was that resolution introduced this morning, or was it laid before the Senate, having been previously introduced?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It comes over from a previous day.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the resolution been printed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been printed.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Florida will not ask for its consideration this morning. I wish to look at it before the Senate takes action upon it. That it involves an immense amount of clerical work is the only possible objection I can now see to it, but I should be glad to examine it before it is acted upon.

Mr. CALL. I comply with pleasure with the request of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. As I stated, the resolution comes to me from citizens who are members of a labor association in the District of Columbia, and, as I understand, it represents their views.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over without prejudice.

BATTLE SHIPS FOR THE NAVY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania, coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. QUAY December 27, 1895:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether, in his opinion, it would be advantageous to the naval service to now contract for six battle ships, instead of for the two at present authorized, on the basis of the bids now before the Navy Department, modified as might be in the opinion of the Department to the public interest.

Mr. HALE. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. QUAY. I should be glad if the Senator from Maine would explain why the resolution should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs. It is a mere request of the Secretary of the Navy that he should furnish information in his possession relative to the construction of these ships, a question which at the present juncture interests the whole country. I do not see that it is necessary that the Committee on Naval Affairs should be called upon to pass on that question.

Mr. HALE. If it is only a resolution of inquiry——

Mr. QUAY. That is all.

Mr. HALE. I thought it was a resolution of direction. If it is only a resolution of inquiry, I have no objection to it.

Mr. QUAY. That is all it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

INCREASE OF COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL on the 27th instant, as follows:

I give notice under the rule of an amendment in the Senate rules in paragraph 9, line 9, page 153, Rule XXV, by striking out the words in the lines "A Committee on Commerce, to consist of thirteen members," and inserting the following:

"Resolved, That the Committees on Naval Affairs, Military Affairs, Judiciary, Foreign Relations, Appropriations, and Interstate Commerce shall each consist of fifteen members.

"Second. That until each of the Senators shall be assigned to one of the before-mentioned committees no Senator shall be a member of more than one of the said committees.

"Third. That five members shall constitute a quorum of the said committees.

"A Committee on Commerce created, which shall be charged with all questions which concern the foreign commerce of the United States and the improvement of the tide-water harbors of the United States.

"A Committee on Rivers and Harbors, which shall be charged with the consideration of all bills for the improvement of rivers and inland lakes and harbors, which shall consist of fifteen members, of which five shall constitute a quorum."

Mr. CALL. I ask that that resolution may lie over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on the first day of the session I introduced a joint resolution reciting the declaration made by Mr.

Monroe in his message of December, 1823, and giving to that declaration the formal sanction of Congress. I had not intended to address the Senate upon that resolution until it had received the consideration of the Committee on Foreign Relations and, as I ventured to hope, been favorably reported by them. But since then the President has sent in his message on the Venezuelan difficulty, and Congress, without a dissenting voice, has authorized the commission which the President requested. This action on the part of the President and of Congress has led to a great deal of discussion and much wild talk. Those persons in this country who, for one reason or another, believe that we should never do anything which can clash with English interests have filled the air with their cries and lamentations. It is true that they are more vocal than numerous, but they are very vocal indeed. This outcry, coupled with London's attempt to frighten Congress by producing a stock panic, has tended to confuse the issue and to mislead many persons. When men usually sane cable to London such frantic nonsense as that the Senate is controlled by a jingo mob in the galleries, by "the gentlemen of the pavement," like the French convention during the Reign of Terror, it seems as if a little cool explanation of the real situation would not be out of place. I shall therefore venture to ask the attention of the Senate while I state very briefly the case upon which the President and Congress, charged with the heavy responsibility of government, have acted without a dissenting voice. I shall try to show what the Monroe doctrine is, what it means to the United States, and that it is vitally involved in this Venezuelan controversy. I shall also show that this is not a petty question of a South American boundary, but one in which, so far as it concerns us, the safety and the honor of the United States and its place in the scale of nations are all deeply involved.

These are the gravest questions which can confront any people, and must be treated by those charged with the conduct of public affairs with dignity, calmness, and firmness. Wild denunciation of public men responsible for the nation's peace and safety and bound to protect her rights are as wholly out of place on the one hand as bluster, threats, and violent language are on the other.

The war scare and the war talk do not come from those charged with the responsibility of government, but from outside these walls and chiefly from the stock market and the meetings of the advocates of peace. No responsible public man, let me say now, desires war or seeks in any way to promote it. We do not believe, here at least, that there is any danger of war, but we are all agreed that honorable peace can be most surely maintained by a firm and temperate upholding of the rights and interests of our country.

Two cardinal principles have always governed the United States in their relations with foreign nations. Although in late years these two principles may have been lost sight of, they have never been departed from. The first was laid down by Washington in what was known at the time as the neutrality policy. The doctrine then declared was that we intended as a nation to hold ourselves entirely aloof from European politics, to form no entangling alliances, and to take no part in the affairs of Europe. To-day this proposition seems like a truism, but when it was declared by Washington with reference to the great struggle then going on between France and the rest of Europe it aroused a storm of opposition.

As British colonies we had necessarily been involved in European affairs wherever England was engaged. A war in Europe, whether dynastic or territorial, reached always to the American Continent. The question of the Spanish succession filled New York and New England with the horrors of Indian warfare, and when Frederick the Great faced all Europe in arms, Pitt declared that he would conquer Canada upon the plains of Germany. Thus the colonists of North America had come to look across the Atlantic to know whether they would have war or peace, and the habits of thought of one hundred and fifty years were not effaced by the fact that we had achieved our political independence.

When the struggle of the French Revolution began, Americans, still under the influence of the colonial traditions, felt with a natural sympathy that they should join hands with the nation which had helped them to gain their independence. But if this view was natural, it was also colonial. Fortunately for us, we had at the head of our Government a great statesman, who saw, with that clear vision which no passion could dim, that the policy befitting the colonies was wholly unsuited to a nation. As a part of the British Empire the struggles of Europe were vital to us. As the United States of America, as a free and independent nation, we had no concern with them. So Washington laid down the principle of neutrality in the European wars then raging and maintained it in the midst of obloquy and attack. It was left to a later generation to appreciate rightly the far-reaching wisdom and the high courage which dictated the action of our great first President. When Washington went out of office and gave to the country his Farewell Address he stated the principle which he had carried into action in words which can not be improved and which have been the guide of all succeeding statesmen in the United States upon this point from that day to this:

> The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.
> Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.
> Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.
> Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own stand to go upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

In the years immediately following the retirement of Washington the Government of the United States, despite the change of parties in control of the administration, adhered strictly to Washington's policy. For the protection of American citizens abroad they fought a naval war with the Barbary States, but held rigidly aloof from any connection with European affairs during the troublous times of the First Empire. After the downfall of Napoleon, however, matters in Europe took a new turn. The Holy Alliance, consisting of Russia, Prussia, and Austria, was formed with the avowed object of restoring and maintaining the old forms of absolutism which had really been destroyed in the French Revolution, although the statesmen of the Holy Alliance were unable to understand it.

At the congress of Aix la Chapelle in 1818 the views of the Holy Alliance as to the necessity of suppressing all movements against absolutism were strongly advocated. In 1820 another congress was held at Troppau and later at Leybach, and there it was proposed to unite in repressing the revolution which had broken out in Naples. England protested and Austria suppressed the revolt alone. In 1822 another congress met at Verona, this time to deal with the affairs of Spain. There was an insurrection in the Peninsula itself and the Spanish-American colonies were in open revolt. Again it was proposed that the great powers should unite in suppressing these revolutionary movements, and again England declined to take part.

A French army crossed the Pyrenees and suppressed an insurrection in Spain. The Holy Alliance desired to go still further and reduce the revolted colonies to subjection. Against this Canning vigorously protested, and it was to this he referred in later times when he made the famous declaration that he had called in the New World to redress the balance of the Old. In pursuance of this policy, Mr. Canning, in August, 1823, proposed to our minister, Mr. Rush, that England and the United States should publish a joint declaration to the effect that, while these two Governments desired no portion of these colonies for themselves, they would not view with indifference any foreign intervention in their affairs or their acquisition by any third power. Mr. Rush replied that the United States would join in this declaration, provided that England would acknowledge the independence of the Spanish colonies. This Mr. Canning declined to do at that moment, but he, at the same time, announced to the Prince de Polignac that Great Britain would not permit any European intervention in Spanish-American affairs. It is interesting to observe that the first public proposition looking to the exclusion of Europe from the Western Hemisphere was made by Great Britain and accompanied by a renunciation, on her part, of any desire to acquire new territory there herself.

The schemes of the Holy Alliance made it clear to American statesmen that the time had come when the United States must adopt and declare her policy with reference to the relations of Europe with the Western Hemisphere. Just at the time when Mr. Canning was making his proposals to Mr. Rush, in July, 1823, John Quincy Adams, then Secretary of State, said to Baron Tuyl, the Russian minister, that "we should contest the right of Russia to any territorial establishment on this continent, and that we should assume distinctly the principle that the American continents are no longer subjects for any new European colonial establishments." The question of our policy in regard to the relations of Europe with the Americas, owing to the projects of the Holy Alliance, had assumed such gravity and importance that President Monroe asked the opinions upon it of Madison and Jefferson. Mr. Madison replied that our relations to the new Republics were such as to call for our efforts to defeat the meditated crusade. Mr. Jefferson said:

> The question presented by the letters you have sent me is the most momentous which has ever been offered to my contemplation since that of independence. That made us a nation; this sets our compass and points the course which we are to steer through the ocean of time opening on us. And never could we embark on it under circumstances more auspicious. Our first and fundamental maxim should be never to entangle ourselves in the broils of Europe. Our second, never to suffer Europe to intermeddle with cisatlantic affairs. America, North and South, has a set of interests distinct from those of Europe, and peculiarly her own. She should therefore have a system of her own, separate and apart from that of Europe.

The words of Jefferson may be commended to the attention of those persons who think the operations of a foreign power in South America of less importance than the temporary price of stocks.

The result of the consultations thus held by President Monroe and of the views of Mr. Adams, which he strongly urged, appeared in the following passages of the President's message of December 2, 1823:

In the discussions to which this interest has given rise and in the arrangements by which they may terminate, the occasion has been judged proper for asserting, as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintained, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European power.

* * * * * * *

In the wars of the European powers, in matters relating to themselves, we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy so to do. It is only when our rights are invaded or seriously menaced that we resent injuries or make preparation for our defense. With the movements in this hemisphere we are, of necessity, more immediately connected, and by causes which must be obvious to all enlightened and impartial observers.

We owe it, therefore, to candor, and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers, to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere; but with the Governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have on great consideration and on just principles acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny by any European power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

These extracts contain what has ever since been known as the Monroe doctrine. The principle which it laid down was the necessary corollary of Washington's neutrality policy and covered three points. First, no more European colonies on these continents; second, no extension of the European political system to any portion of this hemisphere; third, no European interposition in the affairs of the Spanish-American Republics. That part of the declaration which related to European intervention was received by Great Britain with approval, and was warmly praised by Mr. Brougham, Sir James McIntosh, and Lord John Russell, some of whose remarks have been already quoted to the Senate by the Senator from Illinois in his able speech upon this question. In the succeeding Administration President Adams, who may be considered as the real author of the Monroe doctrine, and Mr. Clay, then Secretary of State, attempted to draw closer the bond between ourselves and the South American Republics by the Panama Congress, and Mr. Adams reiterated the Monroe doctrine in his message of March 15, 1826. In the course of the debate upon sending the delegates to the Panama Congress, Mr. Webster spoke as follows:

I look on the message of December, 1823, as forming a bright page in our history. I will neither help to erase it or tear it out; nor shall it be by any act of mine blurred or blotted. It did honor to the sagacity of the Government, and I will not diminish that honor. It elevated the hopes and gratified the patriotism of the people. Over those hopes I will not bring a mildew; nor will I put that gratified patriotism to shame.

The Panama Congress, owing to the question of slavery, came to nothing so far as the United States was concerned, but the passages which I have quoted show sufficiently the view taken of the doctrine by our leading statesmen at the period of its declaration. In 1845 President Polk reiterated the Monroe doctrine, and spoke as follows:

The existing rights of every European nation should be respected; but it is due alike to our safety and our interests that the efficient protection of our laws should be extended over our whole territorial limits, and that it should be distinctly announced to the world as our settled policy that no future European colony or dominion shall, with our consent, be planted or established on any part of the North American Continent.

Three years later President Polk in a special message called the attention of Congress to the appeal of the white population of Yucatan for help against the Indians. They offered to transfer Yucatan to the United States. The President stated that while he did not recommend the acquisition of Yucatan, he advised its temporary occupation in order to prevent its passing into the hands of any European power, which would be an infringement of the Monroe doctrine. A bill was introduced for the occupation of Yucatan, and was opposed by Mr. Calhoun on the ground that the Monroe doctrine was only intended for the temporary purpose of resisting the schemes of the Holy Alliance. The war in Yucatan came to an end, and the bill never reached a vote. The incident is of interest only as showing that Mr. Polk's Administration sustained the Monroe doctrine in its widest application, and that Mr. Calhoun is the only American statesman of any standing who has tried to limit its scope.

Thus far I have merely sketched the history of the doctrine to show the view taken of it by all our Administrations and by all our statesmen, with one exception. I now come to the only attempt which has been made by an outside power to break down the Monroe doctrine and set it at naught. In 1861 Great Britain, France, and Spain entered into a convention to unite in compelling the payment of certain claims which they held against Mexico. When the allied troops disembarked at Vera Cruz it was discovered that the Emperor of the French intended to go much further than had been agreed upon, and to do nothing less than place an Austrian prince upon the Mexican throne. Thereupon England and Spain withdrew, and France was left to carry on her design alone. At that time our hands were tied by our great civil war, but we at once demanded explanations from France, and continued to protest against her conduct. During the entire period of the French occupation we recognized only the Government of Juarez. Mr. Seward consistently pressed our views upon France, and the proceedings of the French were denounced in Congress with so much indignation that in 1863 we were on the verge of war. The moment the civil war was over Mr. Seward at once demanded the withdrawal of the French troops. Our hands were free, and General Sheridan, with a powerful army, was ordered to the Mexican boundary. Under this pressure, after some months of diplomatic delay, the Emperor was forced to give way. The French troops were withdrawn, and the Emperor's Mexican conspiracy, which had begun with treachery and bad faith, ended in humiliation, failure, and the execution of the unfortunate Maximilian. When Napoleon sent out his expedition English writers hastened to declare that he had done a great political service by extinguishing the Monroe doctrine, but when our war was over and we had forced the French armies from Mexico and destroyed the wretched empire they had tried to set up, it was plainly seen that the Monroe doctrine had been signally vindicated and that an attempt to infringe it had brought nothing but shame and disaster to the European power which had made the experiment. Sir Edward Creasy, a distinguished English historian with a greater sense of truth than those writers who had exulted over the buccaneering enterprises of the French, speaks as follows in his First Platform of International Law:

The United States (occupied by their own civil war which was then raging) did not actually send troops to oppose the French in Mexico, but they steadily refused to recognize Maximilian, or any government except a republican government, in Mexico; and the language of their statesmen exhibited the fullest development of the Monroe doctrine.

Since 1823 there have been many cases in which the Monroe doctrine has been cited and discussed, but until the present time the French invasion of Mexico has been the only instance in which it has been openly disregarded and actually infringed by a European power. A second case has now arisen, and the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine is again threatened as it was by the French in 1862. This second attack upon the principle of the Monroe doctrine comes from Great Britain, and is made under cover of a boundary dispute with Venezuela, while Lord Salisbury in his letter to Mr. Olney openly assails the validity of the doctrine itself. To understand the importance of this controversy and how deeply the very existence of the Monroe doctrine is involved in it, it will be necessary to trace very briefly the history of the dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela, which has now reached a crisis affecting most gravely the honor, the interests, the rights, and the well-settled policy of the United States.

The dispute over the boundaries of Guiana is an inheritance bequeathed to Venezuela and Great Britain by Spain and Holland. The successful revolt in 1810 of the South American colonies of Spain established the independence of what is now known as Venezuela. That independence was finally recognized by Spain in a decree on the 27th of May, 1845, in which Her Catholic Majesty Doña Isabel II expressly renounces the sovereignty of the American territory known "under the old name of Captaincy General of Venezuela, now Republic of Venezuela." Among the thirteen provinces enumerated in this act of renunciation and cession is the Province of Guiana, which measures 20,149 square leagues, while the remainder of the Republic measures only 15,803 square leagues. It is the controversy over the control of this vast expanse of territory, rich in minerals, fertile in soil, and drained by navigable rivers, which has now reached such an acute stage.

Great Britain's claim is derived from Holland. By the treaty of the 13th of August, 1814, the establishments of Demerara, Essequibo, and Berbice were ceded to Great Britain, and the supplemental agreement called for by the terms of the treaty subsequently confirmed this partition. Unfortunately, the lines of demarcation between Venezuela and British Guiana were not specifically defined in either of the treaties above mentioned—a circumstance England has not overlooked. It therefore becomes a question of paramount importance in any examination into the merits of this controversy to determine by other means the territorial jurisdiction of Spain in 1810 and of Holland in 1814. The earlier treaties, documents, and ordinances are happily ample and explicit upon these points. Lord Salisbury now puts forward a claim to title based on conquest and military occupation in 1796, but as the treaty which confirmed these conquests only describes them as the establishments of Berbice, Demerara, and Essequibo, this new claim does not affect the argument except as a mere assertion.

It is hardly worth while to do more than barely allude to the fact that the northern part of South America belonged to Spain by virtue of original discovery. There is no principle of the law of nations now better established than the doctrine of discovery. Calvo, an eminent authority upon international law, says:

> The discovery of America and those (discoveries) which have been made at the close of the Middle Ages in Asia and Africa have introduced into international law a new mode of acquisition and possession. We speak of the priority of discovery, of the first occupation, and of colonization.

It is beyond dispute that what is now Venezuela and British and Dutch Guiana was originally Spanish territory.

Columbus discovered the mouth of the Orinoco in 1498. In the following year Alonzo de Ojeda, a Spanish subject, made further discoveries in the same region. In 1500 Vicente Yanez Pinzon, a companion of Columbus, explored the principal mouths of the Orinoco. In 1531 Diego de Ordaz navigated this river as far as the mouth of the Meta. These acts of discovery and exploration on the part of Spain were soon followed by colonization. For many years her only rival in South America was Portugal, and in the treaty of 1750 between these two powers Portugal bound herself to recognize and support the right of Spain to territory lying between the Amazon and the Orinoco. Thus Portugal, the only country that can claim with Spain the honor of original discovery, solemnly recognized the justice of the Spanish contention to what is now disputed territory. It is interesting to note in this connection that a few years later (5th of March, 1768) a royal cedule fixed the Amazon as the southern limit of Spanish Guiana.

It was not until the northern coast of South America had been substantially preempted by discovery that Holland began to seek a foothold in that part of the New World. During their long war of emancipation the Dutch had succeeded in planting several colonies in Guiana. When Spain, whose vassal Holland had been, became a party to the treaty of Munster in 1648, she legalized the Dutch pretensions. By article 5 each power was to retain territory already possessed and held in the East and West Indies and on the coast of Asia, Africa, and America. It was further stipulated that neither power should molest or disturb the garrisons and strongholds of the other. This treaty proved to be a fruitful source of misunderstanding and irritation. Each power soon came to accuse the other of violating its provisions.

Dutch expeditions beyond the Essequibo were repulsed and driven back by the Spaniards repeatedly, and there is no evidence to show that Spain ever acquiesced for a single moment in the Dutch pretensions to a rood of land west of the Essequibo. On the contrary, when the director-general of the Dutch colony of Essequibo, on the 30th of September, 1758, sent a note of protest to the Spanish authorities complaining that the Spanish troops had molested and driven the Dutch away from a post which stood on one of the banks of the Cuyuni, a vigorous response was returned, saying "that the river Cuyuni and its dependencies belonged to His Catholic Majesty, and that consequently, as the Dutch had entered the Spanish dominion, he would make no restitution."

The river referred to there, let me say, is far to the east of the Orinoco and Point Barima, where the Schomburgk line ends.

It does not appear that the Dutch sought to continue further these diplomatic amenities. That they made spasmodic attempts at further extension is unquestioned, and on these Lord Salisbury in his reply to Secretary Olney appears to rely, but it is equally certain that none of their attempts ever attained anything like the dignity of permanent and recognized settlements, or were ever admitted by Spain. Indeed, in 1788 Antonio Lopez de la Puente, who had been sent by the Spanish governor of Guiana to explore the Cuyuni River as far as the limits of the Dutch colony, presented his report. In it he said:

> That having descended the river as far as the curve which it makes, in order to pour into the Essequibo, where the possessions of the Dutch colonies commence, he found the first Dutch houses at the mouth of the Masaruni, i. e., precisely at the curve, no new territories having been encroached upon by them up to that time.

This, then, was the situation in 1791 when, on the 23d of June, a treaty of extradition was concluded at Aranjuez between Spain and Holland. The objects of this treaty, as defined in the preamble, were for "the mutual restoration of deserters and runaways between their respective colonies" and to "put a stop to desertion and its pernicious consequences." The first article of the treaty recites that "complaints of desertion have been more frequent, to wit, between Puerto Rico and St. Eustace, Coro and Curaçao, the Spanish establishments on the Orinoco and Essequibo, Demerara, Berbice, and Surinam." An examination of the map to-day shows that the British province of Berbice extends from Surinam to the River Berbice, Demerara from the Berbice to the Demerara, and on the same principle the province of Essequibo would extend from the Demerara to the River Essequibo, which may or may not include the valley watered by that stream. We have just seen, also, from the preceding report (1788) that the Dutch establishment of Essequibo did not extend beyond the mouth of the Masaruni and certainly it is a fair inference to assume that the Dutch themselves did not put forward any serious claim to territory virtually beyond the Essequibo.

This presumption is further supported, indeed, by Dutch testimony of the most unimpeachable sort. No less an official than Mr. Six, secretary of the Dutch East India Company, sent in 1794 a communication to Señor Corral, the Spanish minister to Holland, in which he makes the following significant admission:

> The captain, pilot, and crew of the Spanish merchant ship Neustra Señora de la Concepcion, after having been perfectly well treated by the governor-general of Surinam, were conveyed to Moroco, west of the Essequibo, as having been Spanish territory, so that they could thence go as on their own land to the nearest Spanish-American town.

Clearly, then, the River Moroco, by common consent and by the admission of the Dutch in 1794, was a Spanish possession, and the Moroco is far to the east of the Orinoco and the Schomburgk line. There could be no dispute by the Dutch to territory beyond the Moroco. Their broadest claim in 1794 was confined to the few leagues between the Moroco and the Essequibo.

Of the Dutch colonies enumerated in the treaty of Aranjuez three, to wit, Essequibo, Demerara, and Berbice, as stated at the outset, were substantially ceded to England by the treaty of London of the 13th of August, 1814. By this act of alienation England succeeded to the title of Holland. England is entitled to every foot of territory that was Dutch in 1814, and to nothing more. Venezuela is heir to the rights of Spain and nothing more. No act of aggression or encroachment since can change or alter the relative position of the two countries. No new rights have accrued to either side since the 13th of August, 1814.

What Holland's claim included in 1791 and 1794 we have already seen. It is absurd to say that any Dutch aggressions beyond the Essequibo subsequent to 1794 and prior to 1814 conveyed to Holland any color of title by prescription. A period of something less than a quarter of a century is hardly "time immemorial" within the meaning of the rule. Neither will it be seriously contended that such Dutch occupation of disputed territory as did occur was "peaceable." It is manifest, then, that any title by prescription must be invalid.

Still less is it necessary to fortify Spain's claim by any supplemental quotations from further ordinances and decrees. It may be said in passing, however, that the list is by no means exhausted. Among other additional and confirmatory evidence that the Spanish boundary terminated only with the Essequibo, reference may be had to the following documents: Note of Gregorio Espinosa, governor of Cumana, 1st of February, 1742; order of 4th of February, 1779, giving directions for establishing settlements in the eastern part of Guiana; report of Felipe de Inciarte, 1st of November, 1779; royal mandate of 1st of October, 1780, demanding the aforesaid Inciarte to drive the Dutch away from land at the northwest of the Essequibo as "trespassers."

Having determined at some length and with reasonable precision the western limitations of Dutch Guiana, to which, and to which only, England succeeded in 1814, it now becomes pertinent and proper to inquire how far England has respected or rather ignored these boundaries and to trace step by step her aggressions upon the soil of her weaker neighbor. For many years the question of boundary between Venezuela and England was held in abeyance. Venezuela for a long time was a part of the old Colombian Confederation and too busy with her own internal problems to pay much heed to the more remote question of the boundary of her eastern frontier. Perhaps the earliest, as it certainly is one of the most significant, incidents of this whole controversy occurred in 1836. On the 26th of May of this year Sir Robert Ker Porter, the then British minister at Caracas, requested the Venezuelan Government in an official note to place light-houses and other marks at Point Barima, at the mouth of the Orinoco River, as an aid to navigation. This voluntary act of Sir Robert Ker Porter was a most complete admission of Venezuela's sovereignty over the Orinoco.

The modern British claim that the Dutch had occupied Point Barima long before the treaty of Munster probably did not occur to Sir Robert. Indeed, it seems altogether likely that he only had in mind the treaty of Aranjuez of 1791, already alluded to, in which the Dutch themselves distinctly recognized "the Spanish establishments on the Orinoco." This dispatch was a part of the archives of the British legation at Caracas for half a century, and it was not until 1887 that the then British minister, on being confronted with it, took the pains to disavow this act of his predecessor on the ground that it was without the "knowledge or authority of the British Government." Indeed, about the time that Sir Robert dispatched his now famous note, there are various other acts which go to show that the agents of the British Government were unaccountably ignorant of what have since come to be "undoubted British rights" in Guiana.

In the latter part of the same year (1836) the British governor of Demerara, in a note printed among the Parliamentary papers, made the startling statement that the Pomaron River, west of the Essequibo and east of the Moroco, could be taken as the limit of the English colony. Further, in September or October of 1840, an Englishman was arrested and tried for having killed an Indian. His counsel succeeded in showing that the crime had taken place in the territory of the Moroco, whereupon the British tribunal promptly acquitted him on the ground that it had no jurisdiction, the act having been committed in a foreign territory. Thus we see that in 1840 a British court in Demerara had judicial cognizance of the fact that the territory of the Moroco was Venezuelan territory and outside British jurisdiction. The governor of Guiana informed his Government of these facts in a dispatch dated 23d of August, 1841. It is not known that the British Government, either then or since, in any way disavowed these acts of its accredited agents.

Meanwhile the reports of the discovery of rich gold fields in the territory of the Yuruari reached London, and the English ministry soon began to display a lively concern in the boundary question. In 1841, Mr. (afterwards Sir) Robert Schomburgk, who was sent out first under the auspices of the Royal Geographical Society to explore the country in 1834, surveyed and laid out a line of demarcation. It does not appear that Venezuela was invited to cooperate in a work which affected her interests so vitally. The British consul, it is true, informed Venezuela of Schomburgk's mission, but the vigorous protest of the latter Government went unheeded and ignored. Schomburgk continued his survey and staked out the famous "Schomburgk line." This survey included the whole seaboard between the Essequibo and the Amacuro (which finds its outlet at the mouth of the Orinoco) and a vast section in the interior. One of its conspicuous features was the erection of a sentry box and the planting of a British flag at Point Barima at the mouth of the Orinoco. The Venezuelans, not without a touch of humor, have uniformly contented themselves in all of their published maps by referring to this line as "capricious," and Schomburgk in his original map and report speaks of his line as the British claim, not boundary.

It is difficult to resist the conclusion that the British Government of that period took much the same view, for Lord Aberdeen, then prime minister, in reply to the urgent remonstrance of the Venezuelan minister at London, said, on the 11th of December, 1841, that the survey had been undertaken merely as a "preliminary step" to further discussion between the two Governments, and not, as the Venezuelan Government seemed to fear, "with the intention of indicating dominion or empire on the part of Great Britain." He added that he was glad to learn that Venezuela had been able to ascertain that Point Barima had not been occupied by the British authorities. A few weeks later, on the 31st of January, 1842, Lord Aberdeen gave force and effect to this disclaimer by ordering the removal of all the marks set up by Engineer Schomburgk.

I have here certain letters which I ask leave to print with my remarks. I will not weary the Senate by reading them. The first one expresses the views of Lord Palmerston in 1840. Lord Palmerston would suggest for the consideration of Lord John Russell that—

A map of British Guiana should be made out according to the boundaries described by Mr. Schomburgk; that the said map should be accompanied by a memoir, describing in detail the natural features which define and constitute the boundaries in question.

That is very apparent from Schomburgk's report; in fact, he mentions it in his memoir, that he laid the line according to the natural boundaries of the territory as he conceived them. He was a botanist and an explorer.

The letter referred to is as follows:

SIR: I am directed by Viscount Palmerston to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, inclosing copies and extracts of dispatches and their inclosures from Mr. Light, governor of British Guiana, relative to the expediency of an arrangement being made with the Brazilian, Venezuelan, and the Netherlands Governments by which the boundaries of British Guiana may be accurately defined.

With reference to that part of your letter in which you state that Lord John Russell considers it to be important that the boundaries of British Guiana should be ascertained and agreed upon, if possible, and that Mr. Schomburgk's researches in those parts have qualified him in a peculiar manner to be of use, should the service of any person acquainted with the geography of British Guiana be required for fixing the boundaries of the British territory, I am to state to you that the course of proceeding which Lord Palmerston would suggest for the consideration of Lord John Russell is that "a map of British Guiana should be made out according to the boundaries described by Mr. Schomburgk; that the said map should be accompanied by a memoir, describing in detail the natural features which define and constitute the boundaries in question, and that copies of that map and memoir should be delivered to the Governments of Venezuela, of Brazil, and of the Netherlands as a statement of the British claim; that in the meanwhile British commissioners should be sent to erect landmarks on the ground in order to mark out by permanent erections the line of boundary so claimed by Great Britain." It would then rest with each of the three Governments above mentioned to make any objection which they might have to bring forward against these boundaries, and to state the reasons upon which such objection might be founded, and Her Majesty's Government would then give such answers thereto as might appear proper and just.

Lord Palmerston further considers that it would be expedient that the Brazilian should be required to withdraw from Pirara, and that the officer in command should be informed that any claim which Brazil may imagine itself to have to that village should be stated by the Brazilian Government to that of Great Britain in order that it may be discussed and settled between the two Governments.

I have, etc.,

LEVERSON.

JAMES STEPHEN, Esq.

Mr. LODGE. I have also a letter from Lord Aberdeen, dated the 31st of January, 1842, in which he speaks of removing the marks which had been put up, and explains that he is very glad to meet the wishes of the Government.

The letter referred to is as follows:

LEGACION DE LOS E. E. U. U. DE VENEZUELA,
Foreign Office, January 31, 1842.

The undersigned, Her Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the note addressed to him on the 10th instant by Mr. Fortique, plenipotentiary of the Republic of Venezuela, representing the alarm and excitement which have been created in Venezuela on account of the marks fixed by Mr. Schomburgk at different points of his survey near the mouth of the Orinoco, and renewing his request that Her Majesty's Government will order the removal of these marks.

The undersigned begs to inform Mr. Fortique in reply that, in order to meet the wishes of the Government of Venezuela, Her Majesty's Government will send instructions to the governor of British Guiana directing him to remove the posts which have been placed by Mr. Schomburgk near the Orinoco.

But the undersigned feels it his duty distinctly to declare to Mr. Fortique that, although in order to put an end to the misapprehension which appears to prevail in Venezuela with regard to the object of Mr. Schomburgk's survey the undersigned has consented to comply with the renewed representations of Mr. Fortique upon this affair, Her Majesty's Government must not be understood to abandon any portion of the rights of Great Britain over the territory which was formerly had by the Dutch in Guiana.

The undersigned begs to renew to Mr. Fortique the assurance of his high consideration.

ABERDEEN.

Mr. LODGE. I have also another letter of Lord Aberdeen, written on March 30, 1844, in which he discusses first the British claim to all the territory as far as the Orinoco, but closes by saying that they will yield to Venezuela from the line of the Orinoco practically to the Pomaron. He says:

Being convinced that the most important objects for the interest of Venezuela is the exclusive possession of the Orinoco, Her Majesty's Government is ready to yield to the Republic of Venezuela a portion of the coast sufficient to insure her the free control of the mouth of this her principal river and prevent its being under the control of any foreign power.

The letter referred to is as follows:

FOREIGN OFFICE, March 30, 1844.

In 1674 the West India Company, formed in 1627, was dissolved, but a new company was formed and authorized, restricting their rights to trade with certain parts of Africa, the Island of Curaçao, and the colonies of the Essequibo and Boneverone (Pumaron), the latter extending, as above stated, as far as the Orinoco.

Pursuing the examination of the authorities, which in more modern times confirm these datas, it will be found that in the History of South America by Bolt, published about the middle of the last century, Dutch Guiana is described as extending from the mouth of the Orinoco at 9° as far as the Marawaina to 6° 20′ latitude north, that in a map of said coast published in 1783 by Faden, the Orinoco River is established as the western limit of the Dutch according to their pretensions, and that in a more recent chart published by Jeffery's in 1798, the Barima River is described as being the division between the Dutch and Spanish lands. The undersigned must declare that these authorities can not be rejected as being English, and therefore, having an interest in this question because, although at the date of the last cited chart the Dutch colony was under the protection of Great Britain, it was restored to the Batavian Republic in 1802, and there is no reason to doubt the testimony of Faden and Bolt, or to accuse them of partiality.

It is doubtful whether the same could be said of La Condamine Bellin and other French writers, whose Government always showed itself to be jealous of the progress of the Dutch in the neighborhood of the settlement of Cayenne.

But, in reality, no doubt can exist that the mouth of the Orinoco was not only claimed by the Dutch as the western limit of their possessions, but also that from the very beginning they effected its military occupation and retained possession of it. Hartsinck says, "The first rivers found in Dutch Guiana coming from the Orinoco are the Barima, about 1 mile in width, where in olden times we had a fort." There exist documents of the West India Company showing that directors recommended to the commander of Pumaron to keep the Barima fort in good condition. Colonel Moody found the ruins of these fortifications when, in 1807, the English occupied the coast and were preparing to send some forces to Angostura to destroy buccaneers that were pillaging the coast of Dutch Guiana, and also to fortify that place again. Mr. Schomburgk, when in the discharge of a commission, found the remains of the fort and also of cultivation in the neighboring territory.

The undersigned does not deem further evidence necessary to show how erroneous are the assertions of Señor Fortique when he states that the Essequibo has been considered as a dividing line between the two countries, and that territory lying between that river and the Orinoco has been considered by the world as belonging exclusively to Spain. These statements make the undersigned feel justified in doubting whether Señor Fortique would be supported by his own countrymen in his views, taking into consideration that in the maps of the provinces of Venezuela published four years ago by an officer of the Republic the extreme limits of the Venezuelan eastern claim is the Moroco River, and in truth, to judge from the exaggerated pretensions found in this work on other points, the author is not inclined to sin on the side of generosity with respect to the neighboring British colony.

Were the undersigned inclined to act on the spirit of Señor Fortique's communication, it is evident, by what he has said, that he ought to claim on behalf of Great Britain, as the rightful successor of Holland, all the coast from the Orinoco to the Essequibo, and such claim, aside from all questions of right, would certainly be much less injurious to Venezuela than the pretensions of Señor Fortique as to England, as Venezuela has no settlements on the disputed territory, and the admission or acknowledgment of the Essequibo as the limit of the Republic would, of course, mean that Great Britain should deliver about one-half of the colony of Demerara, including Point Cartabo and the Island of Tkykoveral, where the Dutch founded their first settlement on the Majarini, the mission of Barlika Grove, and many settlements now existing on the Arabisi coast as far as 50 miles from the capital.

But the undersigned believes that the negotiations would not be free from difficulties if the claims that can not be sustained are presented, and shall not, therefore, follow Señor Fortique's example, but state here the concessions that Great Britain is disposed to make of her rights, prompted by a friendly consideration for Venezuela, and by her desire to avoid all cause of serious controversies between the two countries.

"Being convinced that the most important object for the interest of Venezuela is the exclusive possession of the Orinoco, Her Majesty's Government is ready to yield to the Republic of Venezuela a portion of the coast sufficient to insure her the free control of the mouth of this her principal river and prevent its being under the control of any foreign power." With this end in view, and being persuaded that a concession of the greatest importance has been made to Venezuela, Her Majesty's Government is disposed to lay aside its rights upon the Amacuro as the western limit of the British territory, and to consider the mouth of the Guiama River as the boundary of Her Majesty's possessions on the coast side. Moreover, Her Majesty's Government will consent that the boundary in the interior be fixed by a line from the mouth of the Moroco to the point where the rivers Barama and Guiama meet, as far as the Aunama, whose upward course will be followed until the stream approaches the point nearest the Acarabisi; then following the downward course of the Acarabisi as far as its confluence with the Cuyuni, it will pursue the upward course of the latter as far as the highlands contiguous to the Boraima Mountains, where its waters are divided between the Essequibo and the River Branco.

Great Britain is then disposed to cede to Venezuela all the territory lying between the above-mentioned line and the Amacuro River and the chain of mountains where it has its head, upon condition that the Government of Venezuela shall engage itself not to alienate any portion of said territory to any foreign power, and also upon condition that the tribes of Indians now living in said territory shall be protected against all ill treatment and oppression.

The undersigned has the honor to renew to Señor Fortique the assurance of the highest consideration.

ABERDEEN.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, we are told now that Great Britain will not consider any question arising to the east of the Schomburgk line, which terminates at Point Barima on the mouth of the Orinoco. At that time Lord Aberdeen, as may be seen in his letter, considered that of vital importance to Venezuela. He was ready to withdraw all their claims, whether they were large or small, to the land in that neighborhood and west of the Moroco practically, in order that Venezuela might control that great stream.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he is quite sure that the first exploration made by Schomburgk was under the auspices of the Geographical Society, or whether he did not go out from the United States, where he was occupying the position of clerk in a tobacco store in New York, being a botanist and otherwise interested in natural objects, upon a private exploration. After he had made the exploration he made his report to the Geographical Society, whereupon they gave him authority to make it more definite, and after that the Government of Great Britain took up the subject.

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that Schomburgk, as he states, was in business in this country, a clerk in a shop. He went to an island, some West Indian island or an island in the neighborhood of South America, of which he made a survey and a map. He sent it to the Geographical Society at London. It was so very well done that the society invited him to make explorations on the mainland. In 1834 he went to Guiana under their auspices. It is so stated in the Parliamentary paper which prints extracts from his letters. He went there in 1834 and explored Guiana, and made a report and wrote a memoir. In that expedition he practically laid down the line as he thought it ought to be.

Then the British Government, hearing of this memoir, ordered those portions of it printed which related to the boundary, and they sent him out officially in 1840 to mark out the boundary, which I think it is apparent he had really already surveyed. The Parliamentary paper containing the report or the extracts from his memoir (it is a very rare one; I have never seen more than one copy of it) states in a note that those are extracts from his letters and memoir, and in those he constantly refers to the natural boundaries. He devotes most of his space to discussing the boundary of Brazil on the south, where the serious trouble then was. He devotes very little space, comparatively speaking, to the question of the Venezuelan boundary. He then went out in 1840, as I have said, and officially ran the line which bears his name. He returned to London in 1844, when he was knighted for his services, and, I believe, subsequently came to South America as a British consul.

Mr. DAVIS. Did he only lay down one line?

Mr. LODGE. I think so. There is what is called an extension of the Schomburgk line, but I think Schomburgk himself laid only one line.

A few weeks later the marks of which I have spoken were removed. In other words, the British Government of that day disavowed the Schomburgk line within which we are now told Great Britain can not assent to arbitration. It required half a century, however, to bring into clearer relief just what really was intended in referring to the Schomburgk line as a mere "preliminary step" to future negotiations. Lord Aberdeen repudiated the Schomburgk line in 1841. In 1890 Lord Salisbury, then prime minister, repudiated the act of his predecessor, Lord Aberdeen. This is what he said in a note on the 10th of February to the Venezuelan minister of foreign affairs:

Her Majesty's Government can not accept as satisfactory any arrangement not admitting as English property the territory included within the line laid down by Sir R. Schomburgk.

We can see in this way how that line, from being the mere suggestion of an explorer, based on natural objects, has now become an immutable right beyond which discussion is out of the question.

Popular feeling in Venezuela had been greatly excited by the event connected with the Schomburgk incident. It was in response to repeated instructions from Caracas that the Venezuelan minister in London finally succeeded in opening negotiations. The attempt was abortive in any immediate results. The Venezuelan Government proposed the Essequibo as a frontier, and based its argument upon the ancient maps and treaties. In response Lord Aberdeen proposed the Moroco. This proposition would probably have been accepted as a compromise had it not been accompanied by some offensive and humiliating conditions which forced Venezuela to reject it. Instructions, however, were issued to Señor Fortique, the Venezuelan minister, to suggest suitable modifications, but his sudden death virtually suspended further negotiation for a period of thirty years.

Occasional notes were, however, interchanged, and of these quite the most significant was one addressed by Belford Hinton Wilson, the British chargé d'affaires at Caracas, on November 18, 1850, to the Venezuelan minister of foreign affairs. Mr. Wilson, it appears, had become somewhat alarmed "in relation to the existence of a propaganda to mislead and excite public opinion concerning the boundary question." He therefore took this opportunity of saying (I quote from his published letter):

The Venezuelan Government, in justice to Great Britain, can not mistrust for a moment the sincerity of the formal declaration which is now made in the name and by the express order of Her Majesty's Government, that Great Britain has no intention to occupy or encroach upon the territory in dispute.

The territory in dispute lies between the Orinoco and the Essequibo; most of it between the Schomburgk line and the Essequibo. It was the territory in dispute, according to the authentic utterance of Her Majesty's Government in 1850, and now it is territory which must not even be discussed.

A similar assurance from Venezuela was asked for and promptly given. This was of course pending the settlement of the boundary question.

It was not until 1876 that negotiations were again opened, the initiative being taken, as usual, by Venezuela. Dr. José Maria Rojas was sent to London as minister resident, with explicit instructions to terminate the dispute, if possible, in a way honorable to Venezuela. Intimation was conveyed to the British foreign office, in accordance with the spirit of these instructions, that a line of compromise rather than one of strict right would be considered, so anxious was Venezuela to bring about a final settlement. After several years of unremitting endeavor Dr. Rojas was at length rewarded by receiving from Lord Salisbury on the 10th of January, 1880, a statement "of the claim of Her Majesty's Government by virtue of ancient treaties with the native tribes."

This revised line of demarcation was found to include not only the old Schomburgk line, but a vast and valuable tract beyond it. Lord Salisbury promised in conclusion to consider in the "most friendly spirit" any proposition which the Government of Venezuela might see fit to make for the establishment of a limit satisfactory to both nations. The reference to ancient treaties with the native Indian tribes was justly regarded by Venezuela as being involved in a good deal of obscurity. The claim, which was now set up for the first time, was certainly a novel one. The particular treaties and the particular tribes referred to were known to Great Britain alone. Likewise the manner in which these tribes came to be recognized as free and independent, possessed of the attributes of sovereignty, was another diplomatic secret, which was safely guarded within the precincts of the British foreign office. As a matter of fact, the Indians had been for centuries subjects of Spain and Holland, and had long since lost all right to make a treaty with anyone.

In accordance with Lord Salisbury's suggestion that Venezuela submit some proposition "for the establishment of a limit satisfactory to both nations," Dr. Rojas proposed the Moroco, Lord Aberdeen's old divisional line, but shortly afterwards the Beaconsfield ministry fell and Lord Granville became minister of foreign affairs. In a note dated September 15, 1881, Lord Granville declined to accept the Moroco as a boundary, but suggested a line which should begin at a place on the seacoast at a longitude of 29 miles to the east of the right shore of the River Barima. This proposition was in turn rejected by Venezuela. A few years later a final adjustment of all difficulties between the two countries seemed at length to be in sight. The British Government consented to unite the boundary question with the question of additional duty on merchandise coming from the Antilles and certain indemnity demands made by British citizens against Venezuela.

It was proposed to pave the way to an adjustment of all issues and controversies by one treaty. "The proposal to settle by arbitration questions which may arise between the countries," wrote Lord Granville to Gen. Guzman Blanco, on the 15th of April, 1885, "meets with the entire concurrence of Her Majesty's Government." An actual convention was drawn up, but before it could be signed the ministry changed. Lord Salisbury, who resumed the foreign portfolio, expressly repudiated the arbitration agreement made by his predecessor, and the negotiations abruptly ended. According to Lord Salisbury, to refer all disputes and controversies to arbitration "would be without precedent in the treaties made by Great Britain."

The next attempt to reopen the question came in the following year, when the Venezuelan legation renewed its efforts to secure some satisfactory compromise and suggested arbitration as the means. Lord Rosebery, in July, 1886, replied by proposing a frontier which would include the River Guaima in British Guiana. Coupled to this memorandum was a demand for the free navigation of the Orinoco, which made it impossible.

Meantime the British aggressions in the disputed zone, the region which Great Britain had solemnly promised not to occupy while in dispute, began to be more and more aggravated. Beginning with October, 1884, various marks of British sovereignty were repeatedly set up or posted. Fortifications were thrown up at Barima Point. The Venezuelan commissary at the mouth of the Amacuro was arrested and tried for the alleged ill-treatment of a Portuguese subject. Venezuela protested that the status quo of 1850, not to occupy the territory in dispute, was being flagrantly violated. No heed was paid to this remonstrance. There was under such circumstances but one honorable course for Venezuela to pursue. She broke off diplomatic relations with Great Britain on the 20th of February, 1887.

Even this, however, did not terminate the efforts of Venezuela to arrive at some understanding with her powerful adversary. She has since made several futile endeavors to refer the whole question to friendly arbitration. The last one was made as late as the spring of 1893, by Dr. Michelena, the confidential agent of Venezuela at London. It went the way of all the others. Lord Rosebery, in 1893, was plainly convinced that his demands of 1886 were too moderate; he reenforced them by conditions more objectionable than ever. In 1850 Great Britain herself suggested nonintervention in the disputed belt; in 1893 it was quite impossible for England to consent to arbitrate the greater part of this identical territory which had for so many years constituted "an integral portion of British Guiana."

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me for just a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Massachusetts seems to have given the subject great consideration, and I desire to ask him if he can inform the Senate whether Venezuela has ever at any time refused to submit the matter to arbitration?

Mr. LODGE. Never.

Mr. HILL. I asked the question because of a published interview said to have been given out by Mr. Lincoln, in which it was stated that at one period Venezuela had refused arbitration.

Mr. LODGE. I have never met with any instance in which she refused arbitration by itself. So far as I am aware—and I think I have examined all the correspondence—she has sought arbitration constantly. She has rejected some of the compromises offered by Great Britain in which arbitration may have been a feature, but on other grounds. She rejected, for example, one compromise offered by Great Britain, because Great Britain insisted upon the free navigation of the Orinoco. But I do not think that Venezuela has ever rejected arbitration as an independent proposition. On the contrary, she has always sought it.

It will be observed from the brief outline of the dispute which I have given that no new rights have come to England or to Venezuela since 1814, i. e., since the declaration of President Monroe. They have the rights of Spain and Holland, respectively, nothing more and nothing less, and are entitled to exactly what those inherited rights give them. In 1836 a British minister acknowledged that Point Barima belonged to Venezuela by asking the Venezuelan Government to erect a light-house there. In 1840 a British court in Demerara declared the territory of the Moroco, far to the east of the Orinoco, to be Venezuelan territory. In 1841 an English engineer laid out a perfectly arbitrary line running from the mouth of the Orinoco in a southerly direction until it reached the southern boundary of British Guiana. Lord Aberdeen disavowed this line and proposed another starting at the River Moroco and going farther into the interior; Lord Granville proposed another reaching further to the west; Lord Rosebery another inside the Schomburgk line, but coupled with the free navigation of the Orinoco. In 1893 he proposed a second line, and meantime Lord Salisbury had extended the British claim while he was secretary for foreign affairs.

The Statesman's Year Book will show, if anyone cares to examine it, that the British claim upon Venezuela advanced in one year 33,000 square miles. Every British minister has offered a different line within which Great Britain would not consent to arbitrate, and every British minister has gone beyond his predecessor in making fresh claims to territory beyond the line which he offered and about which he would arbitrate. At first sight this seems to denote inconsistency on the part of the British Government, but in reality their course has been just the reverse. There is apparently just as much support for one line as another when they pass beyond the valley of the Essequibo. From Schomburgk down, every line was entirely arbitrary, and the constantly growing claims beyond the various lines offered was in entire keeping with the policy of the British Government. Their object was to get as much new territory as they could if the matter ever came to a settlement, which they have used every artifice to delay.

I do not personally believe that Great Britain has a good claim to a foot of land beyond the Essequibo, for Indian treaties are altogether too flimsy to support any serious contention, and the claim of recent settlement is impossible, as that would entitle England to any vacant land anywhere in North or South America on which a British subject had settled.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether in his researches he has discovered any trace of the Indian treaties alluded to by Lord Salisbury?

Mr. LODGE. I have not. They must be concealed in the British case.

But it is not my purpose to pass upon the merits of either the British or the Venezuelan claim. All I have desired to show is that there is a dispute as to the ownership of the territory lying west of the Essequibo, and that neither England nor Venezuela holds an uncontested title to any portion of it. That disputed territory either belonged to Holland or it did not. If it did, England ought to have it, and there would not be the slightest disposition on the part of the United States to interfere with her possession of it. If it did not, it belongs to Venezuela, and Venezuela ought to have it. The question is one for the arbitration of an impartial tribunal, and by the decision of such a tribunal the United States would cheerfully abide.

But if England, with no authority but a disputed claim, seizes territory and declines arbitration upon it, her action does not differ from seizing and holding new territory in the Americas by the right of conquest. The boundary dispute does not touch the essence of the question, which is the acquisition of new territory in this hemisphere by a European power. Such pretexts can always be found. If England can seize territory under a claim which has grown larger with each succeeding year, there is nothing to prevent her taking indefinite regions in South America. If England can do it and is allowed to do it by the United States, every other European power can do the same, and they will not be slow to follow England's example. We have seen them parcel out Africa, and if we do not interpose now in this case the fate of large portions of South America will be the same. We shall have formidable rivals all about us; we shall be in constant danger of war; and we shall be forced to become a military power with great armies and navies.

The seizure of this South American territory by England is an absolute violation of the Monroe doctrine. I have heard it said that no one knows what the Monroe doctrine is. Mr. President, it is as simple in principle as the Declaration of Independence, to which Jefferson compared it. It is not a doctrine of international law, and the attempt to discuss it or to oppose it on that basis is a waste of words. Like the independence of this country, it is a question of fact and not of law. The independence of this country is unquestioned, because, having declared it, we compelled the world to recognize it. In the same way we have always acted on the declaration of Mr. Monroe as the guiding principle of our foreign policy. We shall now, I hope, declare it again with the formal sanction of Congress, representing the people of the United States. It is idle to argue either for or against it as a matter of international law, for it requires no such support.

We declare the Monroe doctrine as a principle which we believe essential to the honor, the safety, the interests of the United States. We declare it as a statement of fact, and we must have it recognized as our independence and national existence are recognized by all the world. It must be recognized, because we sustain and support it, and we can no more permit it to be a matter of discussion with other nations than we can afford to discuss with them our national welfare or our forms of government. It embodies for us the same principle as the balance of power so jealously maintained by the nations of Europe. They will not allow that to be disturbed, and we hold to our balance of power with equal tenacity.

The Monroe doctrine interferes in no wise with the rights which the principles of international law give to all nations. It does not touch the question of reparation for injuries inflicted upon the subjects of any European power by any of the Central or South American States. We cherish that right jealously ourselves; we do not deny it to others. If the subjects of any European power suffer wrong at the hands of any of the Governments of South or Central America, that power is entitled to demand the fullest satisfaction and redress. But, Mr. President, the question of reparation must not be mixed up with the acquisition of territory. Lord Salisbury, with the ingenuity for which he is distinguished, has made a claim for reparation upon Venezuela on account of the arrest by the Venezuelan authorities of certain British subjects. He turns to us and to the rest of the world with the inquiry as to whether the Monroe doctrine is to interfere with the right of every power to protect its citizens in South America.

To such a question there can be but one answer, and Lord Salisbury is assured beforehand of the sympathy of all nations on that point. But the whole case has not been stated in that question. Those British subjects were arrested on the disputed territory, on the land which the British Government, by its accredited representative, solemnly pledged itself not to occupy until the question of ownership was finally settled. If that territory belongs to England, those men were wrongfully arrested. If it belongs to Venezuela, they were rightfully arrested. If Venezuela pays now the indemnity fixed and demanded by England, and admits that she does so because these men, being on British territory, were wrongfully arrested, she gives her whole case away. The Monroe doctrine does not interfere with any nation seeking reparation for injuries to its subjects, but it does interfere if a demand for reparation is to be made the pretext for the seizure of territory by a European power on the American Continent.

The Monroe doctrine, as I have said, is very simple. It is merely the declaration that no foreign power must establish a new government, acquire new territory by purchase or force or by any method whatever, or seek to control existing Governments in the Americas. That is the principle which Mr. Monroe declared. If there is any dispute as to the meaning of his language, it is not needful to dwell upon it. That is what the American people believed he meant. That is the way American statesmen have interpreted it, and that there may be no future misunderstanding, that is what we should declare it to be and to have always been by this resolution.

Mr. President, we have neglected too long our foreign policy and the great interests of the United States which lie beyond her borders. We have permitted this English advance upon Venezuelan territory to go unchecked for years. The time has now come to end this state of things. We want this matter settled, and settled by arbitration, because if it is settled otherwise it is a blow to a principle vital to the welfare and the dignity of the United States. But, Mr. President, there is more in it than this. If we neglect our foreign affairs, England does not neglect hers.

At the last session of Congress I called the attention of the Senate and of the country to the manner in which England had absorbed the islands of the Pacific and to the necessity of our controlling the Hawaiian Islands, a necessity which becomes more pressing with each succeeding day. I ask you now to look at the Caribbean Sea. I ask you to note the strong naval station which England has established at Sta. Lucia. Follow a line thence to the westward and you find Trinidad, the development of which has been strongly pushed of late years, then Jamaica, and finally British Honduras. That line faces the South American coast. This territory claimed from Venezuela is being pushed steadily to the westward along that coast, and the point at which it aims is the control of the mouths of the Orinoco, one of the great river systems of South America. The purpose of all these movements is written plainly on the map. If successful they will give Great Britain control of the Spanish Main and make the Caribbean Sea little better than a British lake.

We are a great nation, Mr. President, and we have a great nation's duties and responsibilities. The path which we should follow lies clear before us. We must be the leaders in the Western Hemisphere. We must protect our coasts and hold the commerce of that hemisphere. We do not meddle with the affairs of Europe. Neither Great Britain nor Europe must be permitted to interfere with our affairs or gain new territory here. We seek no quarrels with any nation. We have not been the aggressors in any of the difficulties which are now lowering upon the horizon. But, Mr. President, I think there is no mistaking the temper of the American people. For thirty years they have been absorbed in healing the ravages of civil war and in completing the conquest of the great continent which was our inheritance. That work is done. The American people have begun to turn their eyes toward those interests of the United States which lie beyond our borders and yet so near our doors. They see those interests have been neglected. They see another nation hemming them in with fortifications and encroaching upon regions which must remain what they have always been—American. They are resolved that there shall be an end to these things. They are resolved that the United States shall not sink in the scale of nations, that it shall not be menaced even by that nation to whom we are united by the bonds of blood and speech, but that it shall fulfill abroad as at home the great destiny to which it has been called. The American people, in my judgment, believe in and cherish the Monroe doctrine and will not suffer it to be infringed.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that the people of England have the least desire to engage in hostilities with the United States any more than we seek or desire hostilities with them. Nor do I think that they take any serious interest in this disputed Venezuelan territory or realize even now that the question involves for us a principle which we consider vital to our safety and our welfare. We have no desire to interfere with any rightful possession of Great Britain in South America, but we can not allow her to set up claims to American territory and then seize and hold that territory by force. If she can do it successfully in Venezuela she can do it in Mexico or Cuba; if she can do it other nations can also. We do not ask her to give up her rightful territory or retreat an inch. All we ask is that she shall submit this disputed boundary to the arbitration of an impartial tribunal. We have nothing to gain ourselves by the decision of that tribunal, but in the reference to arbitration there is involved a principle which we regard as vital. We can not believe that any English ministry seriously intends to force hostilities on the United States, and yet their recent policy is, to say the least, unfortunate.

We have seen British forces at Corinto. We know the attitude they assume in Venezuela. They are attempting to take land on the Alaskan boundary. They have just denounced the modus vivendi and reopened in that way the perilous dispute of the northeastern fisheries. It is not by accident that these events have all occurred or all come to an acute stage within the past year. They are not due to us, for we have committed no aggression upon anybody. Of all these difficulties which are now upon us, the most immediate is that involved in the dispute with Venezuela. They tell us that this territory is remote and worthless. It is remote, perhaps, but it is not worthless, for if it had been the Venezuelan possession of it would be undisturbed. But it matters not whether it is worthless or valuable. The tea tax was trivial, but our forefathers refused to pay it because it involved a great principle, and the attempt to collect it cost Great Britain her North American colonies. The American people believe to-day just as firmly in the principle of the Monroe doctrine. They deem it essential to their honor, their safety, and their interests as a nation, and they are prepared to defend it when it is assailed.

Mr. President, who is responsible for the unhappily strained relations between England and the United States? As I have pointed out, we have not been the aggressors on any of the points now in dispute, whether in Alaska or Venezuela. What, then, has strained our relations? Is it not peremptory refusal to arbitrate this question of boundary? Who gave that refusal? Great Britain. We have appointed a commission, not to arbitrate between Great Britain and Venezuela, but to inform us, after careful investigation, what the true divisional line, in their opinion, should be. Who has drawn an arbitrary line of boundary and declared that they would not arbitrate to the east of it? Not the United States, but Great Britain. Ultimatums are what strain relations, and they have come from Great Britain and not from us. I believe that this question will be peacefully settled by the good sense of the representatives of England and the United States, but I am very clear that such settlement can only be reached by action on the part of Congress and of the President which shall be as firm as it is temperate and which shall maintain the Monroe doctrine absolutely and at all hazards wherever it justly applies. That doctrine is as important to us as the balance of power is to Europe, and those who maintain the latter must not attempt to break down the principle which guards the integrity of the Americas and protects them from the interference and control of foreign powers.

STANDING AND SELECT COMMITTEES.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Before the Senate proceeds to the appointment of the standing and select committees, I offer a resolution which I send to the desk, and preliminary to its consideration I ask unanimous consent for the suspension of the rules at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which will be read for information.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be read.

Mr. HARRIS. I think it had better be read. It will not take long, and the Senate will then comprehend exactly what is proposed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Very well; let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The list will be read.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to call the attention of the Senator who offered the proposition to one omission. There is one place on the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads which has not been filled by this side. I make this statement so that it may be thoroughly understood if the resolution shall be adopted.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I understand if the resolution is adopted there will be a vacancy to be filled by the minority.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, it has been the universal custom of the Senate that the party in the majority should control the majority of the committees of this body and the chairmanships of all the committees, except perhaps eleven, which are usually allotted to the minority, and so with the majority of the membership of the committees, leaving, for instance, the membership of the minority in a committee of seven to consist of three, and in a committee of nine, of four. To that there is no objection. It is the proper and ordinary way of conducting the business affairs of the Senate. But owing to the fact, as was well known prior to the assembling of this Congress, that neither of the great parties, Republican or Democratic, was likely to have a clear majority of the Senate, a resolution was passed continuing the old committees until otherwise ordered by the Senate. On this side of the Chamber we are perfectly well aware of the fact that the Democrats are in a minority in this body. We have not a clear majority of all the Senators elected, and we do not know as yet that the Republicans have a clear majority. That can only be tested and demonstrated by a vote upon this proposition. If the other side have a clear majority, they are unquestionably entitled to the adoption of this resolution and the entire change of all the principal committees of this body. Then the country will understand perfectly who is to be held responsible for the conduct of business in this body. With a view of ascertaining that fact, I shall demand the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). I am requested to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] stands paired on this vote with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY].

Mr. CAFFERY (when Mr. BLANCHARD'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. BLANCHARD] is paired on this question with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BRICE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], but an arrangement has been made by which that pair has been transferred to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], and I vote "nay."

Mr. CARTER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] has a general pair with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE]. My colleague would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. MCBRIDE (when his name was called). As has been announced, I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea," and he would vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I call the attention of the Senator from Michigan to the fact that a transfer was made of that pair by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE] a moment ago.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think not.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the Senator from Oregon is mistaken. It was the transfer of a pair to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], and not to his colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I beg pardon.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I understand it as the Senator from Tennessee has stated it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. SHOUP (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am requested to announce that the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] is paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. BACON. As has already been announced by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR], he is paired with my colleague [Mr. GORDON]. I simply desire to say that if my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO. I am requested to announce that the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] is paired with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON].

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 28; as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, it is due to the Populist party, represented in this Chamber, that a very brief statement as to their position be made to the Senate.

During the Fifty-third Congress it was very common for Republican Senators and Democratic Senators to classify us as "Democratic Populists" and "Republican Populists," respectively. The classification was altogether improper. It is due to the Senate and to the country to state that the Populist party, while not numbering a great many in this Chamber, are as thoroughly and completely a party organization as either the Democratic or the Republican party. We want it distinctly understood by the Senate and by the country that we have no political affiliations whatever with either of the old parties. While our personal relations with Senators on both sides of the Chamber are what they should be, yet, so far as our political principles and our political sympathies are concerned, we are just as averse to being known as "Republican Populists" or "Democratic Populists" as either of the old parties are to being known as having any tendency to Populism.

When this Congress convened we realized that there was a clear majority in the Senate in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver. We believed that Senators who declared themselves in favor of silver meant what they said, and that they were not Democrats first and silver men second, or Republicans first and silver men next, but we believed that they were sincere, and that they were perfectly willing to unite in bringing about the passage of a free silver measure in this body. To that end we promptly sent out letters to every man in this Chamber who had declared himself in favor of free silver, inviting Senators, regardless of their political affiliations, to meet in a caucus and organize the Senate upon free silver lines. With the exception of two or three Senators, no one was there but the members of the Populist party. When it came to the question of the reorganization of the Senate, we felt that as a matter of policy it was due our party that we take no part in it whatever. We felt that the Republican party, as between the Democratic party and itself, was in the ascendency here. We felt as though the responsibility for the legislation of Congress should pass to the Republican party in both Houses as speedily as possible, and that the country should understand that the Republican party is now in the majority, or in the ascendency, in both branches of Congress, and is therefore responsible for legislation in the future. We felt that it was due to ourselves as a party that we take no hand whatever in the organization of the Senate, and that we should refrain from voting, permitting the Republicans and Democrats to settle the question of the organization between themselves.

I want to repeat, Mr. President, so that no man, woman, or child in this country may misunderstand what is said, that the Populist party in this Chamber and in the other branch of Congress and in this country is a distinct political entity, having its organization in every State and Territory of the Union, having a vote within 200,000 of the number that landed Mr. Lincoln in the Presidency in 1861. We are a distinct organization, and propose to maintain our organization throughout this and future Congresses.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am inclined to ask the Senator from Nebraska if his organization, composed of six members, as I understand it, in this body, did not deliberately, with a full knowledge of the fact that they held the balance of power as between the two great political parties represented here, determine by their silence to allow the Republican organization here, that has two or three more votes than the Democratic, to take absolute control of the management of the affairs of this Chamber, and if by that silence he does not understand and hold that they are as responsible for the act as if they had cast their votes instead of sitting here silent?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I take very great pleasure in answering the question of my distinguished friend from Tennessee. When we came to consider this question we realized, as the Senator well knows, that we held the balance of power in this Chamber. We realize it now; and I will say to the Senator we are going to utilize it to the fullest extent as we go along.

We could pursue one of two courses. That was plain to any man. We could either vote against the adoption of this resolution, and by that means join our forces to the Democratic party, which we did not propose to do, or we could refuse to vote, and by our negative action of course we could permit the Republican party to take charge of this Chamber. We saw fit to do the latter. Evil was the result either way [laughter], and we chose what we considered the lesser evil.

Let me say, Mr. President, in all kindness and all fairness, the Democratic party has proven itself absolutely incapable of legislation. [Laughter.] The Democratic party came into this Chamber in March, 1893, with a clear majority of its own, not relying in the slightest degree upon the Populist vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. In both Houses.

Mr. ALLEN. I never undertook to do anything in better faith in my life than I did when I came into this Chamber to support the reform movements of Mr. Cleveland. I did not care whether he was a Democrat, a Populist, a Republican, a Prohibitionist, or what he was. If he could give to the homes of this country relief, as he professed he could and would, I was for Mr. Cleveland and for his measures. The Democratic party claimed to be for tariff reform. I believe in tariff reform myself; I believe in lightening the burdens of taxation upon the people of this country. When the measure came before the Senate for its consideration, it was loaded up with protection; it was loaded at both ends and in the center with protection in a very crude and imperfect form. Every time a measure has been introduced here and brought up in this Chamber which looked to the enlargement of the volume of money, the Democrats, who have professed to be in favor of monetary reform, voted against it. They have talked one way and voted another, until this country has passed into an indebtedness of over $163,000,000 in the last eighteen or nineteen months, and is going still deeper in debt.

I have no faith in that portion of the Democratic party represented by Mr. Cleveland and his friends. I have no faith in their capacity or in their disposition to relieve this country.

I want to say, Mr. President, that I have no faith in the Republican party's capacity or disposition to relieve the country—not the slightest. [Laughter.] These gentlemen have all talked about the Democrats, and will talk about them and about the Populists; but I want to say to them that the do-nothing policy which they have inaugurated in the other branch of Congress and which they have inaugurated in this branch will work their ruin, and I want the responsibility to begin now, so that the people of this country in the next six months will see the do-nothing policy on the part of the Republican party result in as much disaster as the policy pursued by the Democratic party. Now, I hope I have satisfactorily answered the question.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I thought a few moments ago that perhaps a word of response would be appropriate to the suggestion made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] when the resolution was under consideration, to the effect that while it was not quite certain as to whether the Republicans were in a majority in the Senate, if we succeeded in adopting the resolution that then, as suggested by the Senator, of course it must be taken for granted we are in a majority, and must be held responsible for the legislation of the Senate. The answer to that has been fully made by the speech by the Senator from Nebraska to which we have just listened and the suggestion made by the Senator from Tennessee.

The truth is, Mr. President, the Republicans of the Senate are not in a majority. They were not in the majority before this resolution was presented; they are not in the majority now. Whether they ever will be in a majority during the present session of Congress remains to be seen. The Senate is composed, when its membership is full, of 88 Senators. That membership now consists of 87, which constitutes the present Senate, as there is one vacancy, namely, from the State of Delaware. Of these 87 the Republicans have 42 members, the Democrats have 39, and the Populists have 6. If that state of the case gives a majority of the Senate to any political party in the Senate, then it requires some kind of figuring that I have no knowledge of.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Oregon permit me to put a question to him?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly; two of them.

Mr. ALLEN. The adoption of the resolution gives to the Republicans the control of every committee in the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No.

Mr. ALLEN. Therefore——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, every important committee. The Finance Committee, for instance.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Not every important committee. There are eleven committees, some of them quite important committees, in some of which the Democrats have control and in all of which there is a Democratic chairman.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me put to the Senator another question.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. The resolution gives the Republican party control of the Finance Committee, from which must come monetary measures for the relief of the country.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No, Mr. President, the Senator is wrong there again. As I understand the present complexion of the Finance Committee, and as fixed by the resolution just adopted, it is composed of six Republicans, six Democrats, and one Populist—thirteen in all.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Therefore the Populist party, so ably represented by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, has the balance of power in the Committee on Finance——

Mr. ALLEN. We are satisfied with that.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. As it has the balance of power in the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not want the Senator from Oregon to undertake to escape responsibility for his party. This is a government of the committee, by the committee, and sometimes for the committee. Every important committee in this Chamber is completely in the control of the Republican party, and I hope the distinguished Senator from Oregon will not now undertake to back water and say that the Republican party will not be responsible for what measures are presented here.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Republican party is responsible for measures passed through the Senate whenever they have enough members of their party to pass a measure through the Senate, and only then.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will indulge me further, I will state that you have power now to present those measures to the Senate for us to vote on.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly; we can present them.

Mr. HOAR. So can any individual Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. But so long as the Republicans of the Senate have but 42 votes in this body they are powerless against a majority of the Senate to pass any measure.

Mr. ALLEN. I think, if the Senator will indulge me one moment further——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. Whenever you present a respectable measure, designed for the relief of the people of this country, you can safely count on the Populist vote to help you pass it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I hope so, and I hope more than that. I hope when the Republican party presents a respectable measure in the Senate, and one that is right, and I trust they will never present any but such, not only the Populist members, but every Democrat will vote for it. I should hope so. Still, perhaps, it is hoping against hope.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply want the Senator to make his statement a little more distinctly and more in exact accordance with the facts. It is the uniform custom of the Senate for long years past that the majority party, claiming the right to organize and control the action of the body, has invariably given to the minority party some ten or twelve of the minor and least important committees.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly; that is true.

Mr. HARRIS. And that is what the majority party with its Populite contingent has done to the Democratic party now. [Laughter.]

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon will suspend until order is restored. The Senate will be in order. The Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to state that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], representing the Populist party in the Senate, has stated the case precisely, so far as the organization of the committees is concerned. The Populists of the Senate absolutely refused to take part. They even refused to make suggestions as to assignments on committees. Their statement was, "You Republicans and Democrats can settle these matters yourselves. We are a very small minority here; there are but six of us; we will take no part one way or the other." We, however, assigned them to places on committees——

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In one moment. We permitted them to retain substantially the same places they held under the Democratic assignment two years ago. Four of the chairmanships, I think, were left precisely as they were before. That of Mr. PEFFER, I think, was changed to another committee.

Mr. HARRIS. The question I wanted to ask the Senator is, whether that position of nonaction and silence when they came to a yea-and-nay vote in this Chamber was not quite as satisfactory to the Senator from his Republican partisan standpoint as if he had pledged the members of that party to stand here and vote with the Republican party upon all questions?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am always bound to be satisfied with whatever the majority of the Senate does, so far as that is concerned; but so far as I am concerned personally, when I offered the resolution I was not advised before the vote was taken as to whether the resolution would receive a majority of the votes cast or not.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from Tennessee, not designedly, I am sure, has made some remarks which are calculated to give a very wrong impression to the country and which exaggerate altogether the importance of what has been done. The rule of the Senate long ago, and the rule for which, I have no doubt, the Senator from Tennessee voted when it was adopted—but whether he did or not, the rule of the Senate long ago provided that the committees of the Senate should be organized by pluralities and not by majorities.

Mr. HARRIS. I am aware what Rule XXIV is.

Mr. HOAR. I dare say the Senator knows everything under the sun.

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, no; I do not profess to know everything.

Mr. HOAR. I am speaking for the information of the country at present.

Otherwise, when there happened to be three parties in this country of so many diverse opinions represented here, none of them having a majority, the Senate can not act. Now, everything that is necessary to the proceeding by the Senate in due order to legislate is provided for by that rule, which is that the plurality shall organize the committees. If there were ten parties in the Senate, nine of them having eight members apiece and the other one having but nine, the nine members, from the necessity of the case, organize the committees.

Now, when the committees are organized everything has happened which is necessary to a complete provision for the due and orderly transaction of the public business. The committees meet. They have no chairman. That is required to be done by a majority. But without a chairman, a committee, having met, can designate one of its members to present to the Senate what it agrees on, whether it has a chairman or not. So if every Populist had voted "no" against the resolution it was equally in the power of the Republican party to have made all of the committees of this body just as it pleased, and for those committees to go on and frame and present business for the country. The election of a chairman is a mere matter of personal convenience.

Mr. PALMER. I should be glad to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a single question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. Does the Republican party decline to be responsible for the committees that have been organized?

Mr. HOAR. That question does not relate to anything that I am saying at present. I would rather complete first what I have to say. I will come to the Senator's question afterwards.

There is a further fact which gentlemen familiar with the constitutional organization of this body, as the Senator from Tennessee, ought to know, and which the Senator from Tennessee does know. It is in the power of every individual Senator in this body to present any measure to the body he chooses. The power of amendment is unlimited. A bill presented by an individual Senator has the same right on the Calendar to be considered and dealt with by the Senate under our rules as a bill presented by the most important committee of the Senate. Not only does that right exist, but, as I was about to say, the right of amendment, there being no previous question here, is absolute and untrammeled, important as the right of free and untrammeled speech itself. So the Populist party has the same power, whether the committees are made up as we propose or not, that the Republican party has, or that the Democratic party has. There is no difference whatever on that point. The election of a chairman is a mere matter of convenience involving the right under our rules to occupy the committee room for private purposes, and involving the right, I suppose, to appoint the clerk of the committee, though I believe he may be appointed by the committee itself if it chooses to take the matter into its own hands.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that while it is in our power to present such measures as may seem proper, yet the world knows, or ought to know, that the committee rooms are burial places for the best measures that have ever been presented in this Chamber; and that the Republican party, having control of the important committees, has it in its power to bury every Populist measure in this Chamber and never let it see daylight again.

Mr. HOAR. So have the Populist party and the Democratic party the power to bury every Republican measure. The Senator——

Mr. ALLEN. Can the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. HOAR. Now, let me go on. The Senator is not rising to correct anything I say, but to make a speech of his own.

Mr. ALLEN. I merely want to ask the Senator a question. I do not wish to interrupt him unnecessarily. Can the Senator from Massachusetts as a representative Republican promise us that those measures will be reported back in one form or another to the Senate?

Mr. HOAR. That is a very different question.

Mr. ALLEN. I thought so.

Mr. HOAR. Whether I promise or whether anyone promises, no Republican and no ten Republicans have authority to make a promise that the committees shall report measures that they do not believe in. What I say is that there is not a measure of public policy on any important or unimportant matter which it is not in the power of any individual Senator to present under as good circumstances as if it were reported by a committee, either by presenting it himself as a separate measure or by moving it as an amendment. If he can get a majority of the Senate to favor it, it passes. If a majority of the Senate are against it, it fails. The matter of the chairmanship has nothing to do with the matter of important political power or the advantage given to measures in this body.

Now, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] talks about the Populist party as a contingent or addition to the Republican party. Mr. President, take the political doctrines of the Senator from Tennessee and the political doctrines of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] who sits next to him, and they have voted together in the past and will vote together in the future ten times where the Senator from Nebraska votes with me or the majority of Republicans once. That is a ridiculous, idle, and utterly unfounded suggestion on the part of the Senator from Tennessee. In the present condition of this country it is very absurd to talk about political parties in this matter. The divisions which exist in this country to-day are in regard to certain doctrines concerning which the party lines or party fetters or obligations sit very lightly on the shoulder of any Senator in this body. They vote according to their individual opinions and the opinions of their constituents.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] asked me if I supposed the Republican party are not willing to be responsible for the action of the majority of the committees of this body. I suppose they expect to be responsible within all reasonable bounds; that is, if a committee report, as they ordinarily will, measures based on the principles which the Republican party believe in, they will accept the responsibility. An individual Republican may not do so, and he is not responsible.

But what I rose to say and what I wish to repeat is that such responsibility as grows out of the framing and presenting measures of committees and the election of committees in this body is a responsibility which the rule puts upon pluralities and not upon majorities, and the Senator from Maryland, the Senator from Tennessee, the Senator from Nebraska, the Senator from Illinois, and the whole country know as well as I do that the Republican party is not in the majority in this Chamber.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, the impression made by the Senator from Massachusetts ought not to go out uncorrected. He seems to suggest that the resolution which has just been carried by a majority of the Senate could have been carried equally as well by a plurality. Now, while that may be true with reference to the individual memberships of the committees——

Mr. HOAR. I did not say so. The Senator will pardon me.

Mr. PASCO. That is the impression that will go out from the Senator's remarks, whatever his exact words may have been.

Mr. HOAR. No; I said that as to the construction of the committees, except the chairmanships——

Mr. PASCO. But this was not a construction of committees. This was the appointment of chairmen of committees as well as filling up the membership, and the Senator did not speak with his usual candor in referring to the action as one that could have been carried through as well by a plurality as by a majority.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Florida pardon me? I am afraid my honorable friend did not hear what I said.

Mr. PASCO. I did.

Mr. HOAR. I expressly stated that the chairman required a majority, and went on to state that the power of the chairman had nothing to do with the matter of framing measures or the construction of a committee as far as it was a political agent.

Mr. PASCO. I listened very carefully to what the Senator said and for what he did not say. As a matter of fact, it ought to be understood by the country that the resolution required a majority vote, and that it could not have been carried through the Senate without a majority vote. It was not simply a question, as the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts would seem to indicate, as to who were to form the membership of the committees, but it included also the question as to who should be chairmen of those committees, and that really was the most important part of the resolution.

I do not feel willing that this matter should pass without comment, and the impression should not go out to the country that the resolution would have been equally as effective if the Populist members of the Senate had voted, and had voted against it. As a matter of fact, it required their votes or their silence to carry through this reorganization. In order that this matter may be made more apparent, I ask that the Secretary may read the rule, so that it may show clearly that the chairmen of committees must be selected by a majority vote, and that the vote which we have just cast was for the selection of chairmen as well as for the membership of the committees.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XXIV.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEES.

1. In the appointment of the standing committees, the Senate, unless otherwise ordered, shall proceed by ballot to appoint severally the chairman of each committee, and then, by one ballot, the other members necessary to complete the same. A majority of the whole number of votes given shall be necessary to the choice of a chairman of a standing committee, but a plurality of votes shall elect the other members thereof. All other committees shall be appointed by ballot, unless otherwise ordered, and a plurality of votes shall appoint.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I regret that I am compelled, so soon after entering this body, to take issue with those who have served here so long and so prominently. But some things have been said reflecting on the People's Party which I, representing that party in part as I do, can not allow to go unchallenged. For instance, such a statement as that made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], who seemed to take peculiar pleasure in trying to brand or stigmatize the People's Party as an annex of some other party. It is due the People's Party, and it is due the Senate, that the facts shall be known as they are. I propose to state the facts.

The People's Party Senators had not decided what position they would take with reference to the organization when we came here from our homes. We knew that we held the balance of power. We had a consultation to decide what was best. After consulting, viewing the situation fully, we decided that it was our duty to take advantage of the situation and to use the power which we had, this balance of power, to try to effect some reforms that we believe are necessary to relieve the oppression of the people and restore prosperity to the country. It was, of course, understood that we should make no bargains or trades with either party for patronage or spoils, but we decided unanimously that we would cooperate with such Senators in both of the old parties who would stand together with us against the monopolists and the gold combine and make a square fight to give the people of this country such remedial legislation as is necessary to give new life to agriculture, manufacturing, and to every honest industry.

We decided further that we not only would express our willingness to do this, but that we would invite such Senators to cooperate with us on this line. We knew that a number of such Senators agreed with us as to the results that should be secured, yet disagreed with us as to some of the methods of getting this relief. But there is one remedy (one plank of the People's Party platform) on which a majority of the Senators in this body are understood to agree, and that is the free and unlimited coinage of silver on equal terms with gold. So we decided to ask those who were elected as free-coinage men to cooperate with us. The first step toward legislation was to organize the Senate. We sent a written invitation to 52 silver Senators.

I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] if he did not receive an invitation as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 30, 1895.

Hon. I. G. HARRIS.

DEAR SIR: There will be a meeting of Senators friendly to silver in the Marble Room of the Capitol on Monday, December 2, at 11 a. m., to consult with a view of organizing the Senate on silver lines. You are respectfully invited to attend.

Signed by W. M. STEWART, W. V. ALLEN, W. A. PEFFER, and myself. Senators KYLE and JONES of Nevada were not present; they came in that night and indorsed it. Did not the Senator from Tennessee get such an invitation?

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator desire an answer?

Mr. BUTLER. I do.

Mr. HARRIS. I give it with pleasure. I did receive, I imagine, a copy of the paper the Senator reads, and the only remark I care to add is that up to this hour there has been no period of my life when I was willing to join in the organization of a great political party based upon one single idea. I have never been quite willing to organize a political party upon a single idea or a single proposition. Yet I am as earnest an advocate of the utilization of the free and unlimited coinage of silver as any one of the gentlemen who attached their names to that paper.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman says that he will not help to organize or fight for one idea. I think he had better try to get his party to organize and stand for at least one idea, for it has not a single idea to-day. It would be to his credit and to his party's credit if they had one idea—just one. They have deserted the ideas and principles they claimed to cherish. They have deserted them bag and baggage and gone over to the Republican camp in everything but name. Yes, if they had stood by the teachings of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson there would have been no People's Party to-day. The People's Party came into existence to defend and uphold the very principles which your party has deserted. It came into existence to defend and to put into practice the great, true principles of Democracy and Republicanism as represented by Jackson, Jefferson, and Lincoln, and because your party, both old parties, have deserted and gone over to the side of the monopolists and gold bugs. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will show his devotion to silver and the people when he votes for President in the next campaign, even if he will not help us to organize the Senate against the gold bugs.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER. You may.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator speaks of combining with other organizations. I hope it is not impertinent if I ask the Senator if he does not hold the seat he occupies upon this floor by a combination between the Populists and the Republicans of the State that he in part represents?

Mr. BUTLER. I will answer the question with pleasure. I hold my seat by such a cooperation for the simple reason that the party in my State which you belong to got to be so corrupt the people in the State rebelled against its management. Your party could to-day be in full power in North Carolina if it had stood by its pledges and promises. A cooperation of all who opposed its methods was made, but that combination could not have driven the Democratic party from power in North Carolina if that party had been true to its pledges, true to its promises, and true to its people. It not only deserted the principles of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson, thereby disgusting the great rank and file of the party, but it tried to keep itself in power by stealing and perjury at the ballot box, by ballot-box stuffing and manipulating the returns. This made fair elections—the purity of the ballot box—the overshadowing issue in North Carolina politics.

A large majority of the voters of the State joined in a movement to correct these abuses. The Democratic party held the election machinery and under a vicious election law determined to count enough votes in the last election to keep them in power. But the revolt of the people against the Democratic machine was greater than the leaders anticipated. They stole over 30,000 votes, but fell 20,000 short of having enough. Yes, we freed North Carolina, and, I trust, forever, from such corrupt methods. This was done with the help of men who had been Democrats all their lives.

I trust that I have given the Senator from Tennessee a full and satisfactory answer to his question.

Mr. President, to return to the point, this invitation was sent to the Senator from Tennessee and to 51 other Senators on this floor. Fifty-two Senators on this floor got that invitation. What was the position of the People's Party? If those 52 men, elected as silver men, men pledged to vote against the gold standard, had accepted our invitation, we could have organized the Senate and put every committee in the hands of the friends of silver. This would have enabled us to have brought forward and passed a free coinage bill and also to have repealed the law under which President Cleveland is about to issue more bonds. We were anxious to do this. But only a few Senators from the two old parties accepted our invitation.

The Senator from Tennessee declined that invitation. Which course was it the duty of the People's Party Senators to pursue? We had to do one of three things. I want to be understood. We had either to vote with the Democrats to organize the Senate, or vote with the Republicans to organize the Senate, or to stand alone. We decided to vote with neither side. We had invited the men on both sides who claimed to agree with us on financial questions to cooperate with us, and both sides had refused. But the Senator from Tennessee makes the point that we refused, and by not voting—mark his words—we virtually voted for the Republicans. I believe I state him correctly. Now, let us see what we would have done by voting. By voting for candidates of our own, as we wanted to do, we found that we would simply deadlock the Senate, and the result would be what? Virtually to vote for the Democrats. Now, mark that. We would be just as much voting for the Democrats as if we had cast our ballots for them, and the Senator from Tennessee knows it, and he would be forced to admit it if he dared to say anything now.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question.

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask him if he regards my colleague, Senator KYLE, as a member of the Populist party in this body?

Mr. BUTLER. Senator KYLE is a Populist, but I believe he did not act entirely with the other People's Party Senators in the programme I am now speaking of.

Mr. PETTIGREW. He voted with the Democrats on the resolution, and I simply wanted to know where to classify him.

Mr. BUTLER. Senator KYLE——

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me just one word?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to inform my colleague, and all members of the Senate present, that the junior Senator from South Dakota is independent all the way through and is not bound by any caucus.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] says he was elected as an independent and that he is acting as an independent.

The Senator from South Dakota is a mighty good Populist, for he votes the Populist doctrine every time. I wish there were more here like him.

Now I will proceed with what the five did. I repeat that if we had voted as the Senator from Tennessee says we ought to have voted we would virtually have been voting for the Democrats, and he knows it. I wish to state right here that there are two reasons why we did not do so. The first reason is that we expected that the Senator from Tennessee and others on the other side who have made such loud professions for free silver and for financial reform would at least be among the foremost if not the foremost to join hands with us in trying to organize the Senate for silver and the people and against the gold-standard monopoly.

Mr. President, we were sorely disappointed, and on top of it we see interviews in the newspapers from gentlemen on the other side saying the country will go to perdition if we do not have free coinage, and yet in the same interviews saying that if their party nominates a gold bug for President next time they will bow down and lick his feet and vote for him. There is something I wish to say now and to say with emphasis. I would not say it, for I dislike to say unpleasant things, but for the fact that I believe the situation in this country is so perilous with respect to the welfare of the people that I ought to say it. It is this: Free coinage would have been secured long ago if it had not been for those who claim to be free-coinage men, but who sacrifice it for party success. If these men would stand for free coinage, party or no party, the people of this country would have had free coinage before now. It is the men who talk free coinage in campaigns, but bow to the party lash in their national convention, when gold bugs, who have prevented the passage of free-coinage legislation, tell them which way to vote. Such men are the worst enemies of free coinage, although they profess to be its friends.

Mr. President, there is one other reason. If the Democratic party had more votes here than the Republicans, we would have acted just as we did. Why? Because by not voting we would have allowed the party that had the most votes to take the offices, since they would not help us. We decided that we would not help a minority that would not help us to organize, but that between the two sides we would allow those who had the greater number of votes to take the organization before we would help those who were in the minority to take it—a minority that had refused to raise its hands to help free coinage when we called upon them to help us.

There is something else. I do not think the members of the party which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] represents can afford to ask for Populist help so long as they stay inside of that party, with its present views and leadership. I wish to say that in my humble opinion his party does not deserve the support or the help of the People's Party. It had a majority in the last Congress, and yet on the statute books to-day there is a Republican law giving the President the power to issue bonds. He issued bonds under your teeth here in the last Congress. And we understand now that he is in another dark-lantern trade negotiating with private individuals for the sale of more bonds under a law that the Democratic party has denounced but refused to repeal when it had the power. We suppose the President will make another deal that will put millions of the people's money into private pockets. The People's Party is opposed to such infamous laws and to such infamous transactions. Therefore the Democratic party does not deserve Populist support any more than the Republican party, on its record, deserves Populist support, and neither party will get it. We have simply stood by the principles. We have let the two old parties fight it out. The Republicans had the most votes, and they got the organization. If the Democrats had had the largest number of votes they would have secured it. We have been consistent. You gentlemen must make the best of your records you can.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not think there is need of much more speech to show the situation. There is nothing mysterious about it, there is nothing undiscerned, and the discussion to-day has disclosed it entirely. The Republican members of the Senate, a plurality, but with no power of carrying into execution any measure, whether of organization or of legislation, simply propounded a list of committees as touching their side; the Democrats propounded a set upon their side, and the Populists were left substantially as they were in the Senate during the last Congress, which was Democratic.

Now, those propositions were brought before the Senate, and nothing could more clearly disclose what is the situation now and what will be the situation hereafter than the vote and the discussion. The list of committees as reported by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], representing the Republican side, and with the control of the committees substantially given to the Republican side, received on a yea-and-nay vote 30 votes. The opposition, whatever it may have been, to the committees so constituted received 28 votes, and 5 Populists sat silent. Had they voted with the Democratic party, which was solid, the vote would have stood 30 yeas and 33 nays, and the Republican programme would have tumbled and fallen to the ground.

So it must be, Mr. President. The country must see and must understand that in the case of any proposition framed by the majority of a committee, Republicans though they may be, and presented to the Senate, the same thing that occurred to-day will occur again and again recurringly. The Populist members have the balance of power. If the Republicans report what is called a sound-money measure and hold their votes for it and the Democrats vote against it and the Populists vote with the Democratic party, the Republican programme falls and is naught. If the Republicans on any committee formulate a measure of another class, something that does not pertain to sound money, and present it here, the result will depend upon the Populists.

I welcome the fact, however, that after all the discussion and after all question about where the responsibility lies, we have to-day brought it out of the domain of discussion and speculation into the domain of the concrete and the demonstrable. That is shown by the vote here to-day.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I am very glad to hear the Senator from Maine say that this proposition has now come to the concrete, as the concrete of the whole matter is that the Populists remained silent and permitted the Republicans to take charge of the committees of this body, because the Committee on Finance, as now constituted, has on it a majority of free-coinage men. It has been stated here that that committee is composed of six Republicans and six Democrats, with one Populist; but the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] is put upon the committee with the knowledge and understanding that it gives the committee to the free-coinage advocates in this body. That is the concrete of the whole business. Without that arrangement we never would have seen our Populist friends sit here dumb as oysters while the programme was being carried through.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to the fact that the complexion of the Finance Committee is not altered by the change in the committees, except that the number is increased. It is well known that a majority of the Finance Committee as organized are in favor of the free coinage of silver, every Democrat on the committee being understood to be in favor of it. As respects the selection of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] or the selection of the new Democratic member of the committee, we do not deceive each other, no matter what we may say here. It is known that the Finance Committee was and is in favor of the free coinage of silver, and it is also known that practically no organization of the Senate could be made without that being the case. Therefore we are to-day dealing with leather and prunella with respect to the whole question. We came here with a perfect knowledge on the part of both sides of the Chamber that neither the Republicans nor the Democrats had a majority control in this body, and that the decent and orderly conduct of business required that there should be such an organization of the Senate as would assign new members, who come in on both sides of the Chamber, to proper and effective places with relation to the business of the Senate.

It was also found, in the adjustment of the committees, that certain committees which hitherto had nine or eleven members were too small, in the judgment of both sides of the Chamber, to take into consideration the varied interests of the people of the United States. It was necessary, in the nature of things, that there should be some composition of the situation whereby the committees should be organized. They had to be organized either by a union of the independent party, called the Populist or People's Party, with the Republicans or with the Democrats, or by that party taking the organization which had the largest number in membership on this floor. The Republican party, as shown by the vote here to-day, notwithstanding the fact that one Populist voted with the Democrats, had a plurality of 2 as against the Democratic party. If the Populist Senator had not voted with the Democrats we would have had a plurality of 3 in this Chamber as against the Democrats.

It may be well for gentlemen upon the other side of the Senate and upon this to seek partisan advantage out of the condition, but those who read and see what is done in this Chamber will understand that the whole arrangement has practically been made under the necessities of the situation. When my friend the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] this morning sent to the desk the resolution providing for the organization of the committees, it required the unanimous consent of this body—of every Democrat and every Populist in it—to deal with the question to-day. It could not have been dealt with except by a common and general understanding that it was wise to deal with it and to deal with it as we have done. I believe this is the first time (certainly it is the first time within my experience in this Chamber) that we have ever had a yea-and-nay vote upon the organization of committees. It arose from the fact that neither of the great parties has a majority in this Chamber, and the minority party, as between the Republicans and Democrats, sought by a yea-and-nay vote to ascertain how the Populist members of the Senate would vote or whether they would vote at all.

I shall not go into the minutia of what would have been the effect if they had voted one way or the other. Nobody is to be fooled about the matter. As Mr. Lincoln said, "You can fool all of the people some of the time and part of the people all the time, but you can not fool all the people all the time." The people of this country understand the play here to-day. They know that neither of the old parties has a majority in this Chamber; that neither of them in the concrete, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] say, has the power of legislation here. None of the great questions which are the subject of controversy between political parties in this country can be settled by this body unless Democrats vote with the Republicans or Populists vote with the Republicans, or unless Republicans vote with the Democrats or with the Populists. Therefore, to charge party responsibility upon either side, either in the committee room or in the Chamber, is playing with the whole question as respects our responsibility.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I confess my amazement at the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who, with his party friends on the other side of the Chamber, has been most anxious to assume responsibility by taking charge of the main committees of this body, and yet, before the committees are organized, proclaims to the country that they have no power to carry out the decrees of their party.

From this time henceforth Senators on the other side of the Chamber are responsible for the action of both branches of Congress. The Republicans came here knowing that they had not a clear majority in the Senate. By common consent provision was made at the last session of Congress for this very condition of affairs, knowing that it was absolutely necessary to make such concessions as had never before been made in the Senate, for such a condition, where a few gentlemen hold the balance of power, had existed but once before in the history of this body. In that condition, as I understood it and as I supposed the other side meant it, the resolution was adopted, in order that this great body might adjust its committees on more liberal lines as between the two parties, on a line which would have secured for the country the consideration of measures in committee by the best thought of both sides of the Chamber, without reference to the third party.

Mr. President, after all, the country will hold either the Republicans or the Democrats responsible for the Government for the next two years. It is a divided responsibility. With an overwhelming majority of the Republican party elsewhere, a gentleman who was elected as a Democrat in the Executive branch, and this Chamber in the condition in which it was, partiotic action suggested at the last session that we would meet it here by cooperation on both sides. But the desire for power, the anxiety to control committees and keep the legislation in their hands, have made the Republicans take a step which possibly will not give them the power of legislation, but they have taken the responsibility. Meet it. Meet it as we did in the last Congress, when we had but a single vote in the majority. Meet it, and take the responsibility.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Maryland a question?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland, because these are generalities and not practical matters, if he will suggest a single measure or doctrine or principle which to-day it is within the power of the Republicans in this body to pass without the aid of Democratic votes?

Mr. GORMAN. That is true.

Mr. HOAR. There is none.

Mr. GORMAN. I admit it. But the Senator from Massachusetts knows as well as I do that when you take possession of every great committee of the body, putting Democrats in the minority on every single committee where legislation originates save one, you—a minority, as you claim, in this body—have placed yourselves in a position to frame legislation, to stop legislation.

It is the responsibility of the majority which you have assumed. If you had carried out the idea that was suggested by the resolution passed at the last session of Congress, organizing the committees under this condition of affairs by more liberal concessions to both sides of the Chamber, bringing together the best thought, shaping the committees so as to secure the services of the men who, as Democrats and Republicans, understand it and have the best interests of the country at heart, I think we would have had better legislation than we shall have now. But by the action which has been taken the great Finance Committee, as has been stated on the other side to-day, is controlled by the Populist party.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GORMAN. With great pleasure.

Mr. HALE. The question I desire to ask is pertinent to the Senator's allusion to the Finance Committee. He has twice referred to what might have happened beneficently if another procedure had been taken and if the best thought of the Senate had been brought together on the committees. Before the Senator sits down, I wish he would explain to the Senate what he means by that statement. What issue is it? Is it the money question, is it the tariff question, or what? And upon the money question, let him explain to the Senate, if he desires the better thought, perhaps the conservative thought, of the country to be more prominent, how it happens that when the membership of the Committee on Finance, which must report all financial measures, was increased, so that the Democratic party was entitled to an additional member, having already on it five silver men, it proceeded to put on another silver man. If the Senator refers to that subject when speaking of the sound thought of the country, let him explain to the Senate and the country why it was that the Democratic party, in making up its composition of the Finance Committee, did not give preference to the sound-money men on the other side of the Chamber. With one supporter of the Administration for sound money and sound thought, to use the Senator's language, going off the committee, why did the Senator and his associates fill the place of a sound-money man with a silver man when they had to put on a new man?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. GORMAN. I yielded only for a question. I shall detain the Senate but a moment longer.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to have the term "sound money" defined?

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, 42 Republicans on the other side of the Chamber assumed that they were in the majority in this body.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no.

Mr. GORMAN. They assumed that they had the right to control the majority of the committees of this body, and, as is usual where a party is in the majority, they proceeded to assign to the Finance Committee seven members and gave to this side six. It is no matter of mine how they selected their seven. They did select one from Nevada, another from Colorado——

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Nevada was an old member.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, he was an old member; but the Senator from Maine knew his views, because they are better known throughout the country than those of any other Senator. I am not going into the manner of the selection.

Mr. HALE. Let me make one suggestion.

Mr. GORMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. HALE. The Senator knows that in filling up the Democratic minority of that committee if his side had put on two what we call sound-money men, antifree-silver men, then the sound-money or antifree-silver men would have had a majority of the committee, and when they declined to do that, declined to put on one sound-money man, the whole control of the committee went to the silver men.

Mr. GORMAN. That was not the point. I do not care anything about the individual views of the members of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. GORMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. TELLER. In reply to the Senator's suggestion relative to the Democrats selecting for the Finance Committee sound-money men, or what I would call "unsound-money" men, I want to say for a number of us here that there would have been no reorganization of the committees if that had been done.

Mr. GORMAN. That is true, and that is the full explanation. That is precisely what the country ought to know. That is the reason why the distinguished Senator from Nebraska sat quietly in his seat. It is a mistake, in my judgment, that you have made on the other side of the Chamber, but you have made it; the attention of the country has been called to it by this debate, and you ought to stand up and take the full responsibility, for it is yours; it is not any longer ours.

Before I take my seat I want to say that, while I think, in the interest of this body, the reorganization is an error of judgment, I think, in the interests of the country, you ought to have subordinated your desire for control until you had a fair majority, for there are pending a number of important questions which affect not only the business interests within our own bounds, but interests as far-reaching as the bounds of the world. I trust that from this time out, notwithstanding you have the control, full opportunity will be given for the consideration of these measures; and I believe there are a number who, while they think a great error has been committed, will be ready to cooperate with the Senators who have charge of these great committees in so framing legislation and in so conducting our affairs that the best interests of the country will not be put in jeopardy.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator will soon recover his composure and not continue to show the anxiety which he and other Senators upon the other side of the Chamber have been manifesting these many days past concerning the Republicans of the Senate and the fearful responsibility which they say has been imposed upon the plurality in the Senate of voting for their own propositions. That responsibility the plurality will endeavor to bear with composure.

The Senator the other day said something about a combination by which the Republicans were to obtain control of the Senate, and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to-day has spoken of a "contingent" of the Republican party, referring to the members of the Populist party. I do not think those suggestions are wise. I do not think that it is wise for the Senator to criticise the method, if there has been any method, by which the Republicans have come into the control in the main of the committees of the Senate, and by which they will, I hope, at some future day elect a President pro tempore of the Senate, much as I dislike to spare from the performance of that high function the respected Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. President, if the method by which the Republicans are now in such power as has been given to them does not compare favorably with the method by which the Democratic party obtained and retained power in the last Senate, then I am mistaken. I shall not at this hour go into a review of the two methods. I leave them to the verdict of the future.

There has been no combination that I know of; there is no "contingent" of the Republican party in this Senate that I know of.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the honorable Senator permit me a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. Has there not been a perfect and complete understanding for the last three or four weeks between the Republican and Democratic parties in the Senate that the Republican party should organize?

Mr. CHANDLER. I should say no, Mr. President. There have been conferences between the chairman of the committee on our side and the chairman of the committee on the other side with reference to the way and manner of arranging the committee lists, which has always been the custom, but we have always understood that a vote in the Senate would be insisted on.

Mr. ALLEN. What does the distinguished Senator from Maryland mean when he says in substance, not in words perhaps, that all through the months past "the very best thought of this Chamber"—whatever that may be, from what source it may come I do not know, of course—but "the very best thought of this Chamber on both sides has cooperated and will continue to cooperate in the control of the Senate in the future"?

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will pardon me, I will come to that in a moment.

The inquiry has been made as to the motive which actuated the Senator from Nebraska and the other Populist Senators in their decision to refrain from voting. The answers have been given, and I trust our friends on the other side of the Chamber, led by the Senator from Tennessee, who showed curiosity, are satisfied on that point as to the motives which actuated the Populists.

So far as I am concerned, I repeat that there has been no combination, and there is no contingent of the Republican party in this Chamber. The real regret of the Senator from Maryland seems to be that the Republicans have not in fact made a combine with somebody on the Democratic side of the Chamber, and the Senator from Nebraska well asks, What was that combine which was proposed? Does the Senator from Maryland wish it to be understood that the Republicans have been considering all these months any proposition from him, or any considerable number of Senators upon his side, to organize this body by an arrangement between the Republicans and the Democrats? Is it the trouble with the Senator that there has been any such proposition pending as that, and that it has been declined on this side of the Chamber and a combination made with the Populists?

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator knows perfectly well that no such suggestion has been made to him or to anybody else. The Senator from New Hampshire knows perfectly well that we were content, and have been to-day, to give unanimous consent for any resolution his party desired to offer to take the committees whenever they wanted them.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator stated distinctly that it was a matter of regret to him that there had not been some arrangement made by Senators on his side of the Chamber—the Democrats he meant—with the Republicans on this side of the Chamber with reference to the organization of the Senate. The Senator, it is true, left his statement in a somewhat nebulous form, so that it has naturally puzzled the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] to deal with it. The Senator said it was to be an organization which should comprise "the best thought" of this Chamber. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine well asked the Senator from Maryland to state upon what idea, upon what principle, it was that he desired to have this Democratic-Republican organization of the Senate made. Was it connected with the silver question, the Senator from Maine asked.

The question was pertinent. Why, Mr. President, if the Republicans of this Senate had not seen fit to come in and vote for a resolution appointing committees mainly Republican, allowing the Populists to vote or not vote as they pleased, and to take whatever result might come, but had, instead, been willing to recognize the Senator from Maryland as the great leader of "the best thought of this country" and had undertaken to negotiate with him and such Democratic associates as he could command upon the principle of opposition to the free coinage of silver, we should not have found enough sound-money Senators upon the other side of the Chamber to negotiate with to equal the six Populists.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Maryland referred to "the best thought" on both sides of the Chamber, and the Senator from New Hampshire now designates the Senator from Maryland as "the leader of the best thought in the Chamber." Will he be kind enough to designate what Senator upon the other side of the Chamber is the leader of the best thought there? Can the honorable Senator point out the leader of the best thought on the Republican side?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am afraid, Mr. President, the number who would be entitled to be counted as "the leaders of the best thought" on this side of the Chamber would not be larger than that on the other side of the Chamber; certainly not larger than the Populist party in this body, and the only Senator that I know of on either side of the Chamber who is willing to rise and assume to represent the best thought of the Senate and of the country is the Senator from Maryland. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I did not intend to talk more than a moment. I rose for one thing—simply to say to those Senators who are so agonized and distressed at the responsibility which has been this day assumed by this side of the Chamber that the responsibility will be cheerfully undertaken. We shall take it with the incidental comforts and pleasures and benefits which go along with it, with an equanimity which will be astonishing to the Senator from Tennessee. [Laughter.] The Republican party is not afraid of responsibility; it never has been afraid of responsibility in all its history.

The facts connected with the organization of the Senate have been brought out by the Senator from Maryland to-day by insisting upon a yea-and-nay vote on the adoption of the resolution appointing committees. I trust the Senator is entirely satisfied with his exploration. I assure him that we upon this side of the Chamber are more than satisfied; and, with the 42 Republican votes which there now are in this Chamber, soon to be increased by 2 more, and possibly by 1 other, we shall go on proposing measures to this body, getting them through if we can; while, if we can not, the responsibility for the failure will rest solely upon the members who vote in the negative.

Mr. President, the process of transferring responsibility to the Republican party, painful as it is to Senators upon the other side, is going on with astonishing rapidity. I hope that the Republicans of this body—I hope that the Republicans of the country will not only use their powers wisely, but that they will deal courteously with their opponents on every occasion. Indeed, Mr. President, I now come to the foremost object which was in my mind when I rose to speak. I have been under many obligations in the last two years to the Senator from Maryland and to the Senator from Tennessee for courtesies extended in debate and otherwise. They have been exceedingly gracious not only to me, but to all Senators upon this side of the Chamber, so far as I am aware. They are now a little troubled, a little excited, a little downcast, as they contemplate the heavy responsibility which they say the recent vote has cast upon us, but I am sure that in a day or two they will recover their customary amiability, gentleness, and sweetness, and we shall see them in the minority as kind, as charming, and as courteous to us as they always have been while they have been in the majority. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I want to state to the Senate, because I think I owe the statement to the Senate, that if I had had the remotest thought that the innocent question which I propounded to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] would have provoked the rant of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] and the volubility of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] I should have restrained myself and refrained from asking the innocent question of the Senator from Nebraska; but having witnessed the result and having inflicted the Senate with these things, I think I owe an apology, and I serve notice on the Senator from Nebraska that I shall never ask him another question, no matter what the provocation. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLS. If the debating society is over, I wish to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator to yield to me for one moment.

Mr. MILLS. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to make a statement, that it may go into the RECORD, to show the true facts of the eleven committees given to the Democratic minority. The Democrats have a majority on only one of those committees, and that is the Committee on Private Land Claims. On one other, the Committee on the Reclamation of the Potomac Flats, there is an equal division, and on the other nine committees the Republicans and Populists have a majority.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator will allow me to say that the proportion is just the same as it was in the last Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. The same as it was before?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Exactly.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the line suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] concerning the minority committees, I want to make the statement that the Committees on Agriculture and Forestry, on Claims, on Coast Defenses, on Contingent Expenses, on Commerce, on Education and Labor, on Finance, on Fisheries, on Immigration, on Indian Depredations, on Indian Affairs, on Pacific Railroads, on Pensions, and on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have an equal number of Republicans and Democrats, and the Populists hold the balance of power in all those great committees.

Mr. CHANDLER. As I understand, the plurality have treated the Populists just as the Democrats treated them in the last Congress; they have treated the Democrats just as the Democrats treated the Republicans in the last Congress, and the Republicans have treated themselves just as the Democrats treated themselves in the last Congress. That is all.

PROPOSED HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer a resolution which I ask to have read and lie upon the table, to be brought up to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved (the House of Representatives concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn to-morrow it shall be to meet on Tuesday, January 7, 1896.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

DUTY ON WOOLS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a resolution I offered some days since, and which is on the table, for the purpose of submitting some remarks upon it.

Mr. BERRY. On what resolution does the Senator desire to speak?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. On a resolution submitted by me some days ago looking to an instruction of the Finance Committee in reference to the tariff on wool.

Mr. BERRY. All right.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 31, 1895, at 12 o'clock meridian.

PROPOSED DUTY ON RAW SUGAR.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer a resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its consideration at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas the conditions of soil and climate in the United States are so peculiarly favorable to the growth of the sugar beet and sugar cane that the manufacture of sugar should be the most important industry of the country; and

Whereas under the operation of the tariff law of 1890 the sugar industry was greatly encouraged and promoted, to the benefit not only of the persons directly interested, but of all of the people of the United States; and

Whereas the operations of said law were fast making the manufacture of sugar the most important industry of the country, causing vast tracts of land to be put under cultivation, and affording employment to many thousands of persons in field and manufactory; and

Whereas the effect of the changes made by the tariff law of 1894 has been to stop the development of this great industry, to retard its progress, to hamper it in every way, to discourage the planting large tracts of land by reducing the price of raw material, to take away the means of livelihood from farmers and farm laborers, and to close the manufactories against the laborers who had been employed therein; and

Whereas without some further protection granted by Congress for a few years, or until the industry becomes solidly established, it will not be possible to long continue the cultivation of the sugar beet or even, perhaps, of the sugar cane, or to manufacture sugar in this country in competition with foreign farmers and manufacturers who employ cheaper labor than can be procured in the United States; and

Whereas there is now pending before the Finance Committee of the Senate a bill to increase the revenue by laying additional duties on a large number of articles, but not on sugar: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and it is hereby, instructed to report an amendment to said revenue bill providing for an additional duty on raw sugar equal to the proposed increase on other articles enumerated in the said bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BERRY. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection, and the resolution will go over under the rule.

THE GOLD RESERVE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer a resolution which I ask to have read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That by injurious legislation by the Fifty-third Congress the revenues of the Government were reduced below its necessary expenditure and the fund created by law for the redemption of United States notes has been invaded to supply such deficiencies of reserve; that such a misapplication of the resumption fund is of doubtful legality and greatly injurious to the public credit, and should be prevented by restoring said fund to the sum of not less than $100,000,000, in gold coin or bullion, to be segregated from all other funds, to be paid out only in the redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes, and such notes when redeemed to be reissued only in exchange for gold coin and bullion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall desire on Friday probably, if it is the pleasure of the Senate, to make some remarks upon the resolution. Let it go over until that time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT TO FRIDAY.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next, for the reason that the Committee on Finance desire the time on Thursday to consider the bond and tariff bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PROCTOR December 21, 1895, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate what amount of money can be advantageously used for the purpose of coast defense prior to July 1, 1897, and what portion of said amount should be made available during the present fiscal year; also, an estimate of what portion of the amount would be required for sites for fortifications, and how much for engineering, and how much for ordnance work, and whether the requisite number of heavy guns can be supplied from the Government shops, and if not, whether the deficiency can be manufactured by private plants in this country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF COIN OBLIGATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from North Carolina coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. BUTLER December 21, 1895, as follows:

Whereas it was the purpose of Congress to keep gold and silver coin at a parity by investing the Secretary of the Treasury with the discretion of paying the coin obligations of the Government as they mature in either metal: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed, when liquidating either the interest or principal of the Government's coin obligations, to make such payment in gold coin whenever the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold is less than the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver, and to continue to pay in such gold coin until the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold shall be equal to the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver, but when the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold shall be greater than the market value of 412½ grains of pure silver he shall pay said coin obligations as they mature in silver coin, and continue to pay the same in silver coin until the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver shall be equal to the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not notice the Senator from North Carolina in the Chamber at present, and I suggest the propriety of letting the resolution pass over without prejudice until he comes in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], coming over from a previous day.

Mr. CALL. I ask that all the resolutions introduced by me which are on the Vice-President's table may lie over without prejudice until to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

PAN-AMERICAN UNION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska, coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. ALLEN December 24, 1895, as follows:

Whereas recent events have shown that European nations are making an aggressive attempt to obtain a greater foothold on the American Continent; and

Whereas such an attempt shows the necessity of a closer union of the American Republics: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the United States of America should as speedily as possible invite all American Republics to enter into a closer union, to be known as the Pan-American Union, for the purpose of promoting the general industrial and commercial welfare of the members thereof and secure said respective Republics from European or other foreign encroachment. Such union should be made of lasting benefit to the people of the several Republics forming it, and a unit of value should be established and maintained therein, which shall be a full legal tender and circulate freely between the various Republics and the people thereof.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to have that resolution lie upon the table subject to call.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

ARMOR FOR NAVAL VESSELS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire, coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CHANDLER December 30, 1895, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be directed to inquire whether the prices paid or agreed to be paid for armor for vessels of the Navy have been fair and reasonable and as low as the prices charged by the same manufacturers to foreign Governments; also whether any prices paid have been increased on account of patent processes used for the introduction of nickel, or for cementation by the Harvey process; and if so, whether the increases in price are fair and reasonable; whether the issuance of any of the patents was expedited at the request of the Navy Department; whether such patents were properly issued and were for inventions not previously known or used, and who were and are the owners of such patents; whether any officers of the Government were interested therein; or at the time when any contracts were made were or have since been interested in the patents or employed by the owners thereof; and whether any legislation is necessary to further promote the manufacture and cheapen the price of armor for vessels of the Navy.

Mr. CHANDLER. At the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], I desire to modify the resolution by striking out the words which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, after the word "reasonable," strike out the words "and as low as the prices charged by the same manufacturers to foreign Governments"; so as to read:

That the Committee on Naval Affairs be directed to inquire whether the prices paid or agreed to be paid for armor for vessels of the Navy have been fair and reasonable; also whether any prices paid have been increased on account of patent processes, etc.

Mr. MILLS. What are the objections, I will ask the Senator, to retaining the words he proposes to strike out of the resolution? It seems to me their retention would enable us to get information about the prices abroad and in this country, too.

Mr. CHANDLER. I struck the words out at the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. I have no objection to having them stricken out. The information desired on that point can be ascertained just as well without inserting the language in the resolution. The Senator from Maryland, to whose opinion I attach high value and who thought it would be injudicious to have those words retained in the resolution, can make the explanation as to the reason of his request.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the facts connected with the sale of armor to the Russian Government by one or two firms in this country are perfectly well known, and have been reported to Congress, I think, by the Navy Department. At all events, they are perfectly well understood, and the matter was disposed of at the last session of Congress.

The facts, as I understand, are these: The Russian Government asked for bids for armor for one vessel. There was a very great desire in the country on the part of manufacturers of this class of steel to have the United States compete with England or Germany, and a very low bid was put in for a very small amount, only enough, I think, for one vessel. There was some criticism about it, as it was at a lower price than the same material had been furnished to our Government as a rule. Indeed, it was furnished at a loss, merely to give the United States a standing with the Russian and other foreign Governments, and merely to finish the one vessel. An attempt was made immediately afterwards to apply the same rule as to payments for similar material furnished to the Government of the United States. The matter was thoroughly considered by both Houses and disposed of, it being decided unfair and unjust, if not destructive, to the firms who entered into that Russian contract to apply the same rule to their dealings with us. Therefore I see no necessity of going over that matter. It is perfectly well understood and perfectly open.

As to the remainder of the resolution directing the Committee on Naval Affairs to inquire into all the matters suggested, there is apparently connected with it an intimation that there has not been a careful business conduct of the offices of the Navy Department, and a further intimation that some officers of the Government have been interested in patents relating to these different processes. If the information which has reached the author of this resolution is sufficient in its character to warrant the belief on his part in the statements which have been made in the press and otherwise, such an inquiry should be made, and I have no objection to it. I regret, however, that it is thought by anybody necessary to make such an inquiry. I have believed—and I have been associated with the appropriations to a considerable extent—that under no Administration, certainly in the last twelve years, has there been anything except the most careful conduct of affairs by the Navy Department. Both political parties have united in promoting the affairs of the Navy Department. We have given great discretion to the Secretaries of the Navy, and the result of their work has been a marvel not only to this country, but to the world. No intimation whatever, on any of the Secretaries of the Navy, Democratic or Republican, has been made of a want of honesty or integrity or intelligence in the conduct of the affairs of that Department. Just at this time, with the peculiar atmosphere with which we are surrounded, I for one regret that it is thought necessary even to make an inquiry into the honesty and integrity of naval officers or of the Navy Department. At the same time, the distinguished Senator who has offered this resolution has had experience in that Department and knowledge of the business connected with it, and if, in his judgment, such an inquiry should be made, I certainly have no objection. But I suggested privately to the Senator from New Hampshire that, in my judgment, if the item as to the sale to the Russian Government, about which there is no question of fraud and no question as to the integrity of the practice or of the Department, were included, it would probably embarrass our entire operations.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I agree entirely with what the Senator from Maryland has said about the history of transactions in the Navy Department for the last twelve or fourteen years. I regret very much that any information has come to the Senator from New Hampshire which constrains him to institute this inquiry. I do not by this mean to say that information has not come to him which justifies the inquiry, but I regret its existence.

One of the most pleasing spectacles that we have witnessed in these years is the harmony with which Congress has acted and stood by the different Secretaries of the Navy in the great work of building up this branch of our naval establishment, and incidentally connected with it the still greater work of building up the plants throughout the country by which we are able now not only to build every ship, but to produce every article that is needed in its construction, its armor plate, and every pound of the ordnance that thunders from the decks of the ship. Fifteen years ago we could do nothing of this kind. In these fifteen years had there not been unity of action between the two parties, nothing could have been done in the direction in which we have proceeded. But it has been the pleasure of this body and the duty of this body and of the other branch of Congress to uphold the hands of the different Secretaries of the Navy.

The Senator from New Hampshire himself is to be credited with the initiation of this great work and partially building, not entirely completing, some of the best ships that are to-day in the Navy. His successor, a most eminent gentleman, a most successful administrator of the Navy Department, had his hands upheld by all Republicans here and in the other branch. When he was succeeded by another distinguished gentleman from New York, a Republican, our Democratic friends on the other side reciprocated the treatment awarded on this side to his predecessor, and in turn the present Secretary, long distinguished in the other House for his service as chairman of the Naval Committee there, has in his important work been sustained by both branches of Congress.

It has been believed and I have believed that these great transactions have been done not under cover, not in the night, but openly and aboveboard, and with integrity transfused through every branch of the service. I regret very much that now anything has arisen that in any way would disturb the confidence which Congress has had in all the branches of the Navy Department and that the country has shared, and in which the country has felt so much pride. If there is anything it ought to be brought out. I hope the investigation will demonstrate (and I know if it does no one will be more rejoiced than the Senator from New Hampshire) that there is nothing.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I concur in every word that has been said by the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Maine, including the regret which they expressed that there is any occasion, if there be occasion, for the adoption of this resolution.

I take the responsibility of offering the resolution and of saying that facts have come to my knowledge which require investigation, and also which require publicity, if the facts are as I understand them, in order that in future contracts for armor for the vessels of the Navy, which we hope to build and ought to build in considerable numbers during the next few years, everything may be above suspicion and above reproach.

Unless it is necessary to secure the adoption of the resolution, I do not propose to bring into the Senate and put on record any statement of fact which would injure any officer of the Navy or other officer of the Government. If Senators are inclined to learn a part of the foundation of this proposed inquiry they can do so by reading in the New York Times of November 18, page 1, in the New York Times of November 19, page 1, and in the New York Times of November 20, page 4, statements which justify and require, in my judgment, this investigation.

Certainly we shall be the more likely to make judicious contracts and to secure the large appropriations for the increase of the Navy which ought to be made, if this subject can be cleared from the doubt and the suspicion that now rest upon it in connection with the publication made in the newspaper to which I have alluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

MONEY ISSUES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. ALLEN, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate of the amount of outstanding paper money, currency, silver certificates, gold certificates, legal-tender notes, and Treasury notes, respectively, issued by the Government of the United States from March 4, 1789, to the present time, and the respective acts of Congress, by titles and dates, under which they were issued, properly classifying the same.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out all after the word "directed," in the first line of the resolution, and to insert as a substitute what I send to the desk. Let the resolution be read as it would stand with the substitute agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate a statement containing a copy of each obligation issued by the Government since March 4, 1789, with a reference by title and date to the laws, respectively, authorizing such issues, and showing the amount of each issue and the amount now outstanding, properly classified, and including Treasury notes of every kind, bonds, and certificates for currency, silver and gold.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 60) concerning the completion of the United States court-house and post-office building at Mankato, Minn., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

NANCY G. ALLABACH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 894) granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach. It will take but a minute. It is a little pension bill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will it lead to any debate?

Mr. CAMERON. None at all. If it does I will withdraw it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Nancy G. Allabach, widow of Peter H. Allabach, late colonel One hundred and thirty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DUTY ON WOOLS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution offered by me on a previous day, for the purpose of enabling me to submit some remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Oregon on the 20th instant will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A resolution by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, instructing the Finance Committee to incorporate into any bill for raising revenue that may come to that committee from the House of Representatives certain provisions relating to wool.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution submitted by me on the 20th instant, relating to an increase in the duties on wool, be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Oregon on the 20th instant will be read.

The resolution was read.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I offer a substitute for the resolution, which, as it is quite lengthy, I ask may be printed in the RECORD, the reading of all except the first part to be omitted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first part of the proposed substitute will be read, and it will be printed entire as requested.

The proposed substitute is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and they are hereby, instructed to incorporate into any bill for raising revenue which may come to that committee from the House of Representatives at the present session the following provisions, either as a substitute or as an amendment, and report the same to the Senate at their earliest convenience:

That from and after the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all wools and hairs imported from foreign countries, and mentioned in Schedule K herein contained, the rates of duties which are by said schedule and paragraphs respectively prescribed, namely:

SCHEDULE K.—WOOL.

First. All wools, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, llama, and other like animals shall be divided, for the purpose of fixing the duties to be charged thereon, into the following classes:

Second. Class 1, that is to say, Merino, mestiza, metz, or metis wools and including all other wools having any admixture of Merino blood, immediate or remote, Down clothing wools, and wools of like character with any of the preceding, including such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Ayres, New Zealand, Australasia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, and elsewhere, and also including all wools not hereinafter described or designated. Also Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, Down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools having any admixture of English blood, immediate or remote, and usually known by the terms herein used, and also all China wools, and similar wools and all hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, llama, and other like animals.

Third. Class 2, that is to say, Donskoi, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, Russian camel's hair, and including all such wools of like character from Turkey, Greece, Egypt, Syria, and elsewhere, excepting improved wools hereinafter provided for, and not including any wools hereinbefore mentioned. But no wool shall be deemed of this class because imported from the places named.

Fourth. From the standard samples of all wools and hair which are now or may be hereafter deposited in the principal custom-houses of the United States, under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be selected under his direction the standards for the classification of wools under this act, and he shall have the authority to renew these standards and to make such additions to them from time to time as may be required, and he shall cause to be deposited like standards in other custom-houses of the United States when they may be needed.

Fifth. Whenever wools of class 2 shall have been improved by the admixture of Merino or English or other blood, or by domestication or breeding, from their original native character, such improved wools shall be classified for duty as class 1, as the case may be.

Sixth. The duty on all wools and hair which shall be imported washed or otherwise cleansed shall be twice the amount of the duty to which they would be subjected if imported unwashed; and the duty on all wools and hair which shall be imported scoured shall be three times the duty to which they would be subjected if imported unwashed.

Seventh. Unwashed wools shall be considered such as shall have been shorn from the sheep without any cleansing; that is, in their natural condition. Washed wools shall be considered such as have been washed with cold water on the sheep's back. Wool washed or cleansed in any other manner than on the sheep's back as aforesaid shall be considered as scoured wool. And all wools having less than 12 per cent of grease, yolk, dirt, or other foreign matter shall be deemed washed, and wools having any admixture of Merino blood, immediate or remote, and having less than 60 per cent of grease, yolk, dirt, or other foreign matter shall be deemed scoured, and all other wools having less than 40 per cent of grease, yolk, dirt, or other foreign matter shall be deemed washed.

Eighth. The duty upon wool of the sheep or hair of the camel, goat, llama, alpaca, and other like animals which shall be imported in any other than ordinary condition, or which shall be changed in its character or condition for the purpose of evading the duty, or which has been skirted, sorted, or otherwise increased in value by the rejection of any part of the original fleece or otherwise, shall be twice the duty to which it would be otherwise subject.

If any bale or package of wool or hair specified in this act imported as of any specified class, or claimed by the importer to be dutiable as of any specified class, shall contain any wool or hair subject to a higher rate of duty than the class so specified, the whole bale or package shall be subject to the highest rate of duty chargeable on wool or hair of the class subject to such higher rate of duty, and if any bale or package be claimed by the importer to be shoddy, mungo, flocks, wool, hair, or other material of any class specified in this act, and such bale contain any admixture of any one or more of said materials, or of any other material, the whole bale or package shall be subject to duty at the highest rate imposed upon any article in said bale or package.

Ninth. The duty upon all wools and hair of the first class shall be 12 cents per pound, and upon all wools or hair of the second-class 8 cents per pound.

Tenth. Wools and hair on the skin shall pay the same rate as other wools and hair, the quantity and value to be ascertained under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, but the quantity shall include all, without reference to the length of the staple.

Eleventh. Wools and hair of the camel, goat, llama, alpaca, or other like animals, in the form of roping, roving, or tops, and all wool and hair which have been advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, not specially provided for in this act, shall be subject to the same duties as are imposed upon manufactures of wool not specially provided for in this act.

Twelfth. On noils, shoddy, top waste, bur waste, slubbing waste, carded waste, roving waste, ring waste, yarn waste, garnetted waste, and all other wastes composed wholly or in part of wool, and on carbonized noils, and carbonized wools, the duty shall be 30 cents per pound.

Thirteenth. On shoddy, mungo, flocks, and rags, composed wholly or in part of wool or hair, and on cattle hair, the duty shall be 15 cents per pound.

Fourteenth. There shall be levied, collected, and paid upon sheep and lambs imported from foreign countries, except as hereinafter provided, the rates of duty following: On mutton sheep, $2 per head; on stock sheep other than bucks and on lambs, $1.50 per head; on bucks, including lambs for stock sheep, $3 per head.

Fifteenth. Any animal imported specially for breeding purposes shall be admitted free: Provided, That no such animal shall be admitted free unless pure bred of a recognized breed, and duly registered in the book of record established for that breed: And provided further, That certificate of such record and of the pedigree of such animal shall be produced and submitted to the customs officer, duly authenticated by the proper custodian of such book of record, together with the affidavit of the owner, agent, or importer that such animal is the identical animal described in said certificate of record and pedigree. The Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe such additional regulations as may be required for the strict enforcement of this provision: Provided also, That for the period of two years from and after the passage of this act native Mexican ewes shall be admitted free of duty.

Sixteenth. On and after the 30th day of June, commencing one year after the 30th day of June following the passage of this act, the duty prescribed in this act shall be annually increased one-half cent per pound for four years on unwashed wools and hair, and 1 cent on washed and 1½ cents on scoured wools and hair.

Seventeenth. There shall be levied and collected duties on Peruvian cotton, otherwise called vegetable wool, 15 cents per pound, and on other raw cottons 2 cents per pound.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, this resolution is in the nature of an instruction to the Committee on Finance to incorporate into any revenue bill that may come to that committee from the House of Representatives the provisions of the McKinley tariff act of 1890 relating to duties on foreign wools, with such modifications only, however, as the history of the operation of that act clearly demonstrated to be advisable, not only in the interest of the Government as a means of raising revenue, but also of the sheep and wool industry as a measure of adequate protection.

Since the presentation of the resolution by me a revenue bill has passed the House of Representatives, come to the Senate, and been referred to the Committee on Finance, where it is now awaiting the consideration and action of that committee. As this measure is now within the jurisdiction of the Senate, it will be entirely proper, I take it, to refer to it, analyze its provisions, and suggest amendments. Before doing so, however, I may be permitted to say that, perhaps, since the organization of our Government no important agricultural and manufacturing interest, which for nearly the entire history of that Government had been encouraged and promoted by the vitalizing application of the protective principle, has received such a staggering and deadly legislative blow as was inflicted on the wool industry of the United States by what is known as the Wilson tariff act of 1894. That the effect of the one schedule of this ruinous act by which wool was placed on the free list has already, within the last year, drained our country of many millions in gold to pay for foreign wool, and occasioned a loss to the woolgrowers of this country on wool and sheep alone of more than $100,000,000, are facts susceptible of practical demonstration. And it is equally true if that legislation is permitted to stand on the statute books of this country a few years longer our sheep and wool industry, and especially and within a remarkably short space of time that of the Pacific Coast States and Territories, by reason of the great disadvantage under which it labors by reason of heavy freight rates from ranch to market, will be wholly annihilated.

The advantage which the Australian woolgrowers have over those of the Pacific States and Territories in the one matter of freight rates places the latter at the mercy of the former in the markets of Boston and other Eastern cities. Wool is shipped from Australasia to Boston, including freight, commissions, and all other charges of handling and transportation, for 1 cent per pound; while freight rates alone from most of the shipping depots west of the Rocky Mountains range from 1.3 to 2.5 cents per pound, but this does not include the cost of transportation and charges connected therewith in getting wool from the sheep ranches to the railroad and water depots, to say nothing of commissions which invariably attach to the shipper before his product reaches the manufacturer.

According to a statement in a recent issue of the Chicago American Sheep Breeder the ocean rates on foreign wools are as follows:

From South America to the three principal United States ports, New York, Philadelphia, and Boston, the cost is about $1.17½ per 100 pounds; from Turkey, 70 cents per 100 pounds; from South Africa, $1.15 per 100 pounds; from Russia, 55 cents per 100 pounds; from China, 65 cents per 100 pounds by sailing vessel and 30 cents by steamship; and from London, England, the great dumping ground of the free wools of the world, the current rate is about 25 cents per 100 pounds.

That is but one-quarter of a cent a pound from the great English wool depot.

The opportunity is now presented to correct the flagrant wrong of 1894 and to arrest by appropriate legislation the paralyzing and destructive influence of a policy which has tended with amazing rapidity and startling effect to stimulate and build up the sheep and wool industry of the Argentine Republic, Australia, China, Canada, and other foreign countries, and at the same time destroy this industry in our own country. Last year Congress legislated in the interest of alien lands and alien peoples, and in direct antagonism, in the main, to the interests of American industry and American labor. Let us in these closing hours of the present year call a halt and in our legislative capacity endeavor to rise to the level of the occasion and the demand of the times and legislate in the interest of and for the promotion of the industries and interests of our own people. Let our legislation be in the interest of the labor and capital of our own country, and not for the benefit of alien labor and foreign capital.

Let us not be content with dealing in governmental abstractions. While we would guard with unerring vigilance and with a firm voice and a steady, determined purpose defend at every hazard every vital principle of our Government involved in international and domestic policy affecting territorial rights and interests, it is well if at the same time we would wipe from our statute books every vestige of legislation by whomsoever placed there which stands as a menace to the promotion and healthy growth of the great industries of this country, and which tends to degrade the husbandman, the tiller of the soil, the day laborer of America, to the level of the menial hordes of Asiatic and other foreign countries.

THE POLICY OF GREAT BRITAIN.

The history of legislation in Great Britain bearing upon the wool and woolen industry, running through a period of more than three centuries, sometimes ill advised and oftener otherwise, shows in a most remarkable manner the disposition upon the part of the British Parliament and sovereigns of that Kingdom to protect and encourage the growth of these industries by legislative and imperial decrees, and at the same time indicates in the strongest possible sense the importance placed by the people of that country and their rulers upon the wool industry as a vital element in the promotion of civilization. In all of these various acts which in any manner had any relation to the subject of wool or woolen manufactures the intention was always clearly manifest of promoting home production and home industry at the expense, not only of alien foreign countries, but also very often of her own colonial dependencies.

Prior to the time of Edward III English wool was in large demand on the Continent, where it was excelled only by the Spanish wools, which for ages preceding had supplied Europe with the best cloth-making material known to man, and during this time the export duty levied on wool constituted an important part of the revenues of Great Britain. But Edward III, regarding the policy of permitting wool to be exported from England as a restraint on the development of English woolen manufactures, prohibited by royal decree, under pain of life and limb, the further exportation of English wool, and imposed high rates of duty on imported wool. He imported weavers, dyers, and fullers from Flanders, and, for the purpose of setting an example, he himself wore Flemish cloth.

This character of legislation continued down until the reign of Elizabeth, when the free exportation of English wool was permitted; but in 1660 the absolute prohibition of the export of English wool was again decreed, and this continued for a period of one hundred and sixty-five years, until 1825, when this prohibitory law was repealed. And it is interesting to note the reasons assigned by history for the long continuance of this embargo upon English wool. It is that there existed a belief upon the part of English rulers and of the English Parliament that England possessed the monopoly of the finest kinds of wool, and that by withholding it from foreign competition the home manufacturers would command the markets of the world. It is true this prohibitory policy, which for a time responded to the purposes had in view and stimulated home manufactures, in the end had a contrary effect. It so stimulated the production of wool that eventually, the export being prohibited, it far exceeded the demand for English consumption, and as a necessary consequence the price of the raw material fell.

Smuggling in wool became one of the recognized illicit industries of the time, and, as a result, the industry became disarranged. Then it was that most unusual, extraordinary, and, in a sense, ridiculous measures were resorted to by the English rulers for the purpose of promoting woolen manufactures and stimulating the demand for English woolen products. The manufacture of woolens was absolutely prohibited in Ireland. The most ghastly of these acts, intended to stimulate the demand for English woolens, was an act passed during the reign of Charles II, to the effect that all dead bodies should, under pains and penalties to be inflicted on the relatives of the deceased, be buried in woolen shrouds. And it is a remarkable historical fact that this somber enactment remained unrepealed on the statute books of England for a period of one hundred and twenty years, although it is proper, perhaps, to state that it had long prior to its actual repeal fallen into innocuous desuetude.

So important, indeed, was wool considered by the English people and by the Parliament and sovereigns of Great Britain, as an influential and powerful factor in the development of the civilization of the age, that the historian makes this declaration:

Wool was indeed the flower and strength and revenue and blood of England.

And further:

Until the development of the cotton trade, toward the close of the eighteenth century, the woolen industries were beyond comparison the most important sources of wealth in the country.

But as time went on not only the production of English wool, but the capacity to produce sufficient to meet the English demand fell off, as was the fact in 1825, when the British Parliament provided that colonial wool might be imported free of duty, the duty on colonial wool having been for a long period prior to that date, since 1802, as high as 6d. per pound, and in 1844 the duty was remitted on all foreign wools.

Thus it will be seen the Parliament of Great Britain, with the varying conditions of her manufacturing industries and her domestic and foreign trade, changed from time to time the customs policy of England, but always with an eye single, whether the policy was one of protection or free trade, of export or import duty or no duty at all on wool, to the protection, encouragement, and growth of her agricultural and manufacturing interests rather than the matter of revenue alone.

THE CONDITION OF THE TREASURY.

The present condition of the Treasury, occasioned mainly by the failure of the Wilson tariff act of 1894 to produce sufficient revenue to meet current expenses, and the mad effort to maintain the single gold standard and absolutely eliminate and destroy bimetallism by saddling the taxpayers of this country with hundreds of millions of high interest bearing bonds, has compelled the President and the Secretary of the Treasury to appeal to the Congress in the midst of the holiday season in terms and in tone sounding much like Cæsar's appeal to Cassius, in his extremity:

Help me, Cassius, or I sink!

Whatever may have been the cause or combination of causes which resulted in this unfortunate condition of affairs, the appeal of the President is one which no patriotic man, whatever may be his politics, can disregard.

At all times, under all circumstances, upon every occasion, the credit of this Government must be sustained. Every one of its obligations must be promptly met when due and demanded, at the time, and in the kind of money specified in the contract. Not one of these obligations, even though it cost millions, must be permitted to go to protest. The President's hands must be and will be sustained by Congress in every proper way. The House of Representatives has promptly responded with a revenue bill, and it is here for the consideration and action of the Senate. It should receive the prompt consideration and action of the Senate. But we should not proceed with such a degree of haste in its consideration as to cause us to overlook for one moment great industrial interests which can just as well as not, now that the opportunity is suddenly presented through the emergency to which I have alluded, be properly guarded and protected. While, therefore, providing at the earliest possible moment legislation which will produce sufficient revenue to relieve the Administration of its present embarrassment, other important questions should not be lost sight of in the performance of our patriotic response to the President, and we should so legislate as to relieve from imminent danger of destruction some of the great industries of the country so mercilessly stricken down by the Wilson tariff act.

This necessitates an inquiry into the effect which the operation of the existing tariff act has had, not only on the revenues of the Government, but also on the industries and labor of the country. This I shall attempt to do at this time only in the briefest and most perfunctory manner, and shall postpone more elaborate discussion until the bill is reported from the committee.

THE POLICY OF THE PRESENT ADMINISTRATION.

The policy of the present Administration, including, of course, the Wilson tariff act, so far from providing a means of raising revenue, has proven beyond all controversy to be a policy of deficits. For the two fiscal years ending July 1, 1895, the revenues of the Government have been less than the expenditures to the extent of $128,324,524.30, as follows:

First four months, surplus	$329,672.32
Fiscal year 1894, deficit	69,803,260.58
Fiscal year 1895, deficit	42,805,223.18
First four months fiscal year 1896, deficit	16,045,722.66
Total deficit Cleveland Administration	128,324,524.30

But not only so. During the year about to close the deficiency has been constantly growing until now, since July 1, 1893, it reaches the enormous sum of over $133,000,000, $20,000,000 of which amount has arisen during the last six months, and no less than about $2,000,000 of this amount during the present month of December; and still the gap between receipts and expenditures not only does not contract, but continues to expand. And yet the President and the Secretary of the Treasury tell us that none of the fearful embarrassments in which the Administration finds itself in carrying on the ordinary operations of the Government are attributable to a lack of revenue.

This, it seems to me, is a most remarkable claim on the part of the President and the Secretary. And based on such a claim, untenable as it would seem in every particular, the demand is made upon Congress to retire $346,000,000 of legal-tender notes and $140,000,000 of Sherman Treasury notes, all redeemable in either gold or silver coin, by an issue of nearly $500,000,000—to be accurate, $486,000,000—of interest-bearing bonds, not redeemable in coin, but in gold coin. No such character of bonds was ever issued by this Government in all its long history, not even when involved in the terrible convulsions of civil war. And this claim that there is no lack of revenue and this demand for authority to issue bonds come, moreover, after the Secretary of the Treasury has within the past twenty months issued and sold a fraction over $162,000,000 of 5 per cent ten-year, and 4 per cent thirty-year bonds, from which was realized over $182,000,000, and out of one issue of $62,000,000 of which the New York and London syndicate realized some $11,000,000 of profits.

What has become of this money? This is a most pertinent inquiry at this time. If it is claimed that no part of this vast sum was necessary or was not used to meet current expenses, then that is, it occurs to me, a somewhat disingenuous statement, and one not borne out by the facts. It is simply a play upon words. What are the facts?

With the $182,000,000 realized from the sale of these bonds the redemption of about $182,000,000 of United States legal-tender notes was made; but owing to a lack of sufficient revenue arising from customs duties and excise taxes to meet the current expenses the Secretary was compelled to and did immediately reissue and pay out for the purpose of meeting current expenses about $133,000,000 of the $182,000,000 of these legal-tender demand notes so redeemed. It is undoubtedly true the Secretary had the right under the law, and moreover it was his duty under the law, to reissue these legal-tender notes when required to meet current expenses, but still the great fact confronts us that had our revenue laws been so constructed—and they were not—that a sufficient revenue to meet expenses would have been brought into the Treasury from month to month, then the necessity for the immediate reissue of these $133,000,000 of legal-tender notes to meet current expenses would not have existed.

As the revenue was insufficient to meet such expenses, the immediate reissue of this vast amount of legal-tender notes afforded immediate further opportunity to the New York and London syndicate to draw gold from the Treasury. This opportunity is created by the vicious policy of the Treasury Department, to redeem all notes and demands in gold coin, although by the very terms of such demands they are redeemable, not in gold coin merely, not in silver coin, but in coin; that is, in either gold or silver coin.

The redemption of $133,000,000 legal-tender notes in gold coin arising from the sale of bonds, and immediately paying out this vast sum to meet the current expenses of the Government, is simply equivalent to selling bonds for gold and applying the proceeds in payment of current expenses to meet a deficiency occasioned by a lack of monthly revenue from customs duties and excise taxes for such purpose. When, therefore, the President and his Secretary of the Treasury insist there is no need for raising more revenue by increasing customs duties, they are simply emphasizing a demand upon their part for another issue of interest-bearing bonds. And we are now told the Administration, without awaiting the action of Congress to enact legislation that will supply the requisite revenue to meet expenses, and which would operate as a check on the demands of the gold syndicate, will, before the close of the present year, less than twelve hours of which now remains, issue to that syndicate another $100,000,000, or perhaps greater amount, in bonds, and thus add this additional amount of interest-bearing debt of this Government to that which has already been increased since this Administration came into power to the extent of $168,202,879.55.

The revenue bill recently passed by the House of Representatives and now pending in the Finance Committee of the Senate will, it is estimated, even without amendment, bring in an increase of $40,000,000 a year. Amended, as in my judgment it should be and will be if my vote will accomplish the purpose, by affording wool, lumber, barley, hops, and other agricultural products reasonable and proper protection, it will give an additional revenue annually of $60,000,000, and will at once place a padlock on the "endless chain," so called, by which gold is drawn from the Treasury, will stop all necessity or pretense of necessity for the further issue of bonds in time of profound peace, and will at the same time rescue from impending ruin the wool and other agricultural interests of this country.

This House bill is called "an emergency revenue bill"; and so it is; a bill made absolutely necessary by the condition in which our Treasury has been plunged, mainly by the lack of efficiency of the Wilson tariff act to bring in revenue to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government; and second, by the failure upon the part of the Secretary of the Treasury to meet the avaricious and Government-wrecking demands of the gold syndicate in the manner he should have met such a raid on the Treasury, and that is by exercising the discretion with which the law clothed him, to redeem the notes presented, or offer to redeem them, in coin, not necessarily in gold coin, but in either gold or silver coin, in either of which such notes are by law redeemable.

Such a brave and patriotic stand as this upon the part of the Secretary of the Treasury, authorized as he was and sustained as he would have been by the supreme law of the land, and as I believe, outside of those enveloped by the tainted atmosphere of the Wall and Lombard streets gold syndicate, by the intelligent and patriotic sentiment of the American people, would, in my judgment, have stopped all demand for the redemption in any considerable quantities of legal-tender or Treasury notes. And furthermore, in my judgment, the financial credit and standing of the Government would not have been in the slightest manner adversely affected by such a course; most certainly would such a policy not have affected the financial standing of our Government infinitely as much as does the policy which compels the issue of $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 of bonds every six months in time of profound peace, and which places this country and our Government virtually in the hands of a receiver, composed of a foreign syndicate.

Why even the New York bankers, those of them outside of the enchanted circle of the gold syndicate and who are not permitted to share in its benefits, thoroughly understand this whole business. They know full well it was not the Sherman law, that it is not the greenback that drove or is driving gold from the country by the tens of millions, which has depleted the Treasury of gold, led to bond issues, and involved our Government in deplorable embarrassments. They know, and now frankly admit, that one of the great causes of these financial embarrassments is the insufficiency of our revenue laws, and inferentially they do not hesitate to say that one other great cause is our failure to give full recognition to the money metals of the Constitution, and withholding from one of them the full equal mintage privileges accorded to the other and full legal tender purchasing power and debt-paying functions.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I wish to ask whether it is not a fact that ever since 1879 it has been the custom under all Secretaries of the Treasury to pay the greenbacks in gold when demanded?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That perhaps has been the custom, but it is a very bad one, in my judgment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Beginning in October, 1891, and never before.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Beginning in October, 1891? Is that the fact?

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the fact.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Then I stand corrected by the Senator from Missouri.

I know that has been the custom during recent Administrations, but I am firmly of opinion that if the demand for the redemption of those notes, coming as it did to a large extent within the last few years, had been promptly met by the Secretary of the Treasury, whoever he might have been at the time, by a statement of the gentlemen presenting the notes to this effect: "I am authorized to redeem these notes either in gold or silver coin; it is not convenient to redeem the whole amount in gold, and therefore I shall either redeem half in gold and half in silver, or all in silver or all in gold, as it suits my convenience and as I am authorized to do under the law," then a stop would have been put at once to any considerable demand for the redemption of the legal-tender notes. That is what I think about it.

Mr. HILL. It is not a question as to what policy the Senator from Oregon thinks ought to have been pursued. That to which I desire to call attention is a question of fact—what has been done by all Secretaries of the Treasury since 1879; and upon that I disagree with the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

I do not recall any criticism of that policy upon the part of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] during his career in the Senate with reference to the Republican Secretaries of the Treasury who pursued that course.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. In October, 1893, in response to a telegram sent by me to Secretary Carlisle, he stated that the first Treasury notes of 1890 were redeemed in gold in 1891 by Secretary Foster.

Mr. HILL. I assumed that the Senator was not talking about Treasury notes. We were talking about what are called United States notes—the greenbacks.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I was talking about both. They are both alike so far as the power of redemption is concerned.

Mr. HILL. I assumed that the Senator was talking about United States notes. Now I will ask the Senator from Missouri whether it is not true, so far as the United States notes are concerned, those which are commonly called greenbacks, that since 1879 they have always been redeemed in gold by all Secretaries of the Treasury, when gold has been demanded?

Mr. COCKRELL. They were never presented and there was no demand for gold, and the Senator can not show by the records that such was the case. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] since that time proposed to redeem, retire, and cancel every one of the greenback notes with silver dollars. The amendment is here on record in which he proposed to substitute silver dollars for every one of the greenbacks.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am very much obliged for this contribution.

Mr. COCKRELL. In addition, I wish to say that in January, 1895, Mr. Secretary Carlisle stated to the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives that if in the beginning the Secretaries of the Treasury had exercised the discretion of paying in silver and gold conjointly it would have operated well and would have been a great benefit, but that according to all the prophecies it would be dangerous now to reverse the policy.

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask either the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from Oregon whether Secretary Foster did not redeem any of the United States notes in gold. Will the Senator from Missouri state as a fact that Secretary Foster did not redeem any of the United States notes and redeem them in gold?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know. Possibly he may have done so.

Mr. HILL. I understood the Senator to say that it had not been done.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was not done upon demand, and I repeat it. No Secretary of the Treasury, until October, 1891, ever yielded the option to the holder of the note and paid gold regardless of consequences.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will allow me, my point is that the Secretary of the Treasury has repeatedly done so; that it has been the custom to redeem the greenbacks in gold when gold was demanded.

Mr. COCKRELL. The option was never given to the holder of the note until 1891.

Mr. HILL. I am not speaking of what ought to have been done; I speak of it as a fact. I assert that it is the fact, and the records will show it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am very much obliged both to the Senator from New York and the Senator from Missouri for their contributions to the question.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to make a suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. STEWART. On the 17th of November, 1891, Secretary Foster, at a dinner at Delmonico's, was interrogated by the bankers, particularly by those bankers who export gold, as to what was to be done under the act of 1890. The provision of the act which puzzled them, and which they regarded as a barrier to the Secretary in his operations, made it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to coin sufficient of the bullion purchased to provide for the redemption of the notes issued under the act. That was the matter which was under consideration at the dinner.

Secretary Foster informed the bankers that it was the policy of the Government to pay gold whenever demanded and that it would do so. Then the President of the United States, in his annual message, referring to this matter, stated that that policy had done much to sustain the business of the country and would be carried out to the full power of the Government. Then the Austrian deal followed.

Mr. HILL. I am glad the Senator from Nevada has made that statement, for it shows that the Secretary of the Treasury not only redeemed the greenbacks in gold, but also the United States Treasury notes.

Mr. STEWART. I did not say anything about greenbacks.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Coming back to the question of revenue and the view taken by leading New York bankers who are not in sympathy with the gold syndicate, I desire to attract the attention of the Senate to the following article, which I find in the Chicago Inter Ocean of November 26 last:

THE NEW YORK BANKERS ON CARLISLE'S FINANCIAL POLICY.

Eli Perkins passed through Chicago yesterday, fresh from Wall street. When asked what the shrewd bankers who handle billions of money were saying about Carlisle and the deficit in the revenue, he said:

"Hepburn, of the Third National; Cannon, of the Chase National; Garland, of the First, listened to Carlisle respectfully, but they didn't take any stock in his theory that greenbacks were the cause of the bad times. Mr. Cannon said to Mr. Carlisle in a private conversation afterwards:

"'No, Mr. Carlisle, we made the innocent Sherman bill a scapegoat once, when we now know the hard times were caused by lowering the tariff. The Government is doing a losing business. We are not earning enough to pay our expenses. We have run behind $300,000,000, and we might as well be honest and say so. Why make another scapegoat out of greenbacks?'

"'We have been using greenbacks,' said the president of the Second National Bank, 'for thirty-three years, and always had prosperity. We had greenbacks and the Sherman bill when we paid off $2,000,000,000 of the national debt. We had prosperity all that time. Now, what we want to do is to raise the revenue high enough to meet our expenses. We must put back that tariff again. We must own up that we have made a wretched mistake and right it as soon as we can. We must quit politics, let money alone, and fix the revenue.'

"George W. Williams, of the Chemical National, said he was sick of dodging the real cause of hard times. He said, with A. P. Hepburn, of the Third National, that we had better put the tariff back on wool and woolen goods.

"'Yes,' said Henry Clews, 'the $81,000,000 we have paid to Asia for wool during the last year took $81,000,000 in gold out of the country, and that gold had to come out of the Treasury. If we had paid that gold to Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, we would have been better off—it would have been here. We are not politicians on Wall street,' continued Mr. Clews, 'we are business men; and when the expenses of the Government in four years are $400,000,000, less our receipts, we must expect gold to go out to pay the balance.'

"'The importers in New York,' said Mr. Perkins, 'are laughing at Carlisle. They know they are buying about all their woolen cloth in Bradford. They know the Rhode Island, Massachusetts, and Connecticut worsted mills are loaded with unsold goods on which they will have to lose money, and that most of these mills are stopped. They know that the lace factories in New Jersey and Pennsylvania, which made Nottingham lace under the McKinley tariff, are idle, while the Nottingham factories are getting Carlisle's gold. They know the Jersey potteries are stopped and will have to cut wages again before they ever start, and gold that they used to get is going to England and Germany.'"

"Then the Sherman bill and Carlisle's greenback scare are both hoaxes, you think?" was asked.

"Why, of course. But Carlisle hates to admit it. He hates to admit that the Wilson tariff is a failure and if continued long enough will destroy the nation's credit, make wages still lower, stop our mills, and clean the last gold dollar out of the Treasury. Everything we buy in Europe must be paid for in gold, or money as good as gold, and if we buy more stuff from them than we sell we must balance up with gold.

"Yes," continued Mr. Perkins, "we have let the low-wage nations into our eleven-billion-dollar market, and we will never supply their market until we have their low wages, plus the freight. Our 7,000,000 bales of cotton, at $50 a bale, are worth $350,000,000. Our meat and grain is worth $400,000,000. What do we do with the $750,000,000? Why, we send it back to Europe for kid gloves, wool, champagne, silks, laces, pottery, tin, and glass, when we can, and used to, make them at home. The Wilson bill gives Europe our market, but we don't get theirs. We are balancing up with gold, and Carlisle and Grover lie and say hard times and loss of gold were caused by the silver bill and are still caused by the poor old greenback."

While, therefore, believing Congress, irrespective of party, should come to the relief of the Government and the President and Secretary of the Treasury, not, however, by authorizing a further issue of bonds, but by a revenue bill that will provide the necessary revenue, and thus avoid the necessity for a further bond issue, I am heartily in favor of the bill as it passed the House, but with amendments of the character I have suggested. Furthermore, I would favor an amendment striking out the provision which limits its operation to two and a half years. The bill, of course, shall have my support, whether we shall succeed in amending it or not; but there are, aside from its failure to give proper protection to wool and other agricultural products, certain vices in the measure which, in my judgment, should be eliminated, or at least which ought not to receive the sanction of the Republican party, and nothing except a great emergency would excuse, much less justify, the Republican party in giving them its sanction.

First, the horizontal feature of section 4 of the bill is highly objectionable, as it in a measure recognizes—

First. The ad valorem system adopted in the main by the Wilson bill;

Second. The classification of rates in the schedules covered by said section;

Third. It fails to deal fully, as it should, with the free list of the present law; and Fourth. The act, in my judgment, should not be limited to two and a half years or any other time. If it is a good thing it ought to come to stay; if it is a bad thing we ought not to enact it at all.

The first section of the bill as it passed the House imposes a duty on all imported wools of classes 1 and 2, as defined in the McKinley Act, approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations thereof, and on all hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, except as otherwise provided, and on all noils, shoddy, garnetted waste, top waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, yarn waste, and all other wastes composed wholly or in part of wool, and on woolen rags, mungo, and flocks, a duty equivalent to 60 per cent of the duty imposed on each of such articles by the McKinley Act of 1890.

This provision, should it remain unchanged and become a law, will, it is claimed, give a specific duty of 6.6 cents per pound on these classes of wools, the duty under the McKinley Act being 11 cents. This section further provides that on all wools and Russian camel's hair of class 3, as defined in the McKinley Act, and subject to all the conditions and limitations thereof, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the several duties provided by such act.

This relates to carpet wools, and it restores the full duty of the McKinley Act of 32 per cent ad valorem.

This whole section should, in my judgment, give way to the provisions incorporated in my resolution of instructions to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SQUIRE. I wish to ask the Senator from Oregon whether the all-controlling and important fact in the consideration of a tariff measure at this time is not as to what kind of a tariff measure can probably be enacted into law, considering the fact that we have a Democratic Executive; and whether, taking that fact into consideration, it is not probable that the action which has been taken in the other body has been taken directly with the view of meeting the emergency as to the condition of the Treasury, in view of the fact that the Executive has well-known views on the subject of the tariff, and the great improbability of a thorough and proper Republican measure being enacted into law at this time?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In answer to the Senator from Washington, I will state that I have no right to know, and if I did know I should have no right to state, what were the motives which influenced the House of Representatives in its action. I only believe that so far as the Senate is concerned we should proceed to do our duty as we understand it, and enact such legislation as we, in our judgment, think ought to be enacted, without reference to the views either of the House of Representatives or of the President of the United States.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. Has the Senator made any estimate as to the amount of increased revenue that will be derived from the increased duties upon the wool schedule?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. As levied in the bill which was passed by the other House?

Mr. VEST. Yes; as the bill comes to us.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have made no estimate myself, but I take the estimate of the House committee, which is about $40,000,000.

Mr. VEST. Not upon the wool schedule.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. On wool alone?

Mr. VEST. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I did not understand the Senator. About $12,000,000 on wool.

Mr. VEST. I think it is $18,000,000.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think it is $12,000,000.

Mr. VEST. I thought possibly the Senator had made an estimate. I beg leave to state that I differ entirely with the estimate made by the House committee on the wool schedule.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think it is about $12,000,000, but I may be mistaken. I have not the report before me.

Mr. VEST. My recollection is that it is $18,000,000. However, I only read the report once. But that is a very important consideration in regard to legislation of this kind, and I thought, as the Senator was speaking specifically on the subject of wool, that he had made some estimate of the amount of duties to be derived from this increase.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I speak of the figures of the House committee's report.

HOW THE PRICE OF WOOL HAS BEEN RUINOUSLY AFFECTED BY THE WILSON TARIFF ACT.

The effect of the wool policy of the present Administration must be regarded as commencing to operate, subject, however, to the checks that policy received in the next Presidential election, as of the date of President Cleveland's annual message of December 6, 1887, when he gave sanction to the declaration in favor of free wool contained in the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury of the previous year, December 6, 1886. That policy, with others of like nature, however, was repudiated and rejected by the American people in the election of Benjamin Harrison as President in November, 1888. Hence the price of wool, while materially depressed in 1888 by this declaration of a free-wool policy upon the part of the President and his Secretary of the Treasury of the previous year, was not affected adversely materially beyond this single year of 1888 immediately following this declaration.

But the price again advanced at once on the election of a Republican President and continued at living rates until the result of the election of 1892 was known, when Mr. Cleveland was again called to the Presidential chair, when prices again went down, and the decline in the price of American wools in the last two years has been an average of 39 per cent. True, this decline can not be wholly charged to legislation placing wool on the free list, but it is chargeable mainly to the combined operating causes of the increase of foreign sheep and the withholding of all duties of foreign wool. Of course there has been a general decline in the prices of all commodities the world over, occasioned in a great measure, as I believe, by the erection and maintenance of the single gold standard. The difference in the decline of the price of foreign wools and that of American wools in the past two years, the decline in the former being 12 per cent and in the latter about 39 per cent, will demonstrate pretty clearly to the satisfaction of any unprejudiced mind to what extent the decline in the price of American wools is chargeable to the free-wool policy of the present Administration.

The following table, taken from the wool circular of Justice, Bateman & Co., of Philadelphia, of date January 1, 1895, is both interesting and instructive, and as an argument against a free-wool policy is unanswerable:

The following table, giving the prices of a few grades of American wool and the corresponding grades of foreign, is arranged to show a comparison of prices here and in Europe on January 1, 1893 (which was immediately preceding the attack upon the McKinley wool duties), and January 1, 1895 (more than four months after the duties were removed). The table also shows the percentage of decline which has taken place in domestic and in foreign wool. The greater fall in prices of American over foreign wools was owing to the removal of the duty on wool. In other words, foreign wools have declined in two years from about 10 to 14 per cent, while the same kind of American wool during the same time has declined about 38 to 40 per cent.

I also beg to insert at this point, from the circular of Justice, Bateman & Co., the following statement and table of prices showing rates at different dates.

PRICES THEN AND NOW.

After one year's experience with free wool prices are still lower than at this time last year, when the new tariff law went into effect, as will be seen by the following Table A, giving a number of the principal grades of American wool, none of which are higher, while the majority are from 1 to 2 cents per pound lower than at this time last year:

In order to show how domestic wool prices compare after one year of actual practice with each of the last two tariff laws, we publish in Table B the prices for the principal grades of American wool on October 1, 1891, when the McKinley law had been in force one year, and the prices at this date, when the Wilson law with free wool has been in force one year. In the outside column is the number of cents per pound that wool is lower after one year of actual trial with free trade than after one year of actual trial of McKinley protection. Below the quotations for American wool will be found the London quotations of similar grades of foreign. It will thus be seen that the leading grades of American wools under free trade were from 7½ to 15 cents per pound lower on fleeces and from 15 to 27½ cents per pound lower on scoured under one year of free trade than under one year of the McKinley law, while foreign wools were either unchanged or only from 1 to 2 cents per pound lower.

For the purpose of showing the effect of the Wilson tariff act upon importations, I beg to submit the following table, taken from an article prepared by Albion E. Shepard, of Texas, believed to be reliable, and indorsed by the National Wool Growers' Association:

THE RUINOUS EFFECTS OF THE FREE-WOOL POLICY.

The damaging effects of this free-wool policy have been exemplified in a multiform manner. It has damaged flockmasters, who, having become discouraged by reason of the policy, have driven their sheep to the slaughterhouse and abandoned the business, thus diminishing rapidly and vastly the number of sheep and the amount of wool produced, and, as a further result, throwing out of employment hundreds of thousands of men, herders, shearers, and others connected with the industry.

Again, it has, while reducing the product, reduced the price. January 1, 1894, according to reliable statistics, we had in this country 45,048,017 head of sheep, while on April 1, 1894, there were 43,501,904, and the estimated number at the present time is only about 40,000,000, or a decrease in the number of sheep in this country in the last two years, under the free-trade wool policy of this Administration, of over 5,000,000 head.

According to the official report of the comptroller's office of the State of Texas the number of sheep in that State in 1893 was 3,366,257, valued at $4,776,848; while the number in 1895, the present year, is but 2,386,822, of the value of but $2,442,162, or a falling off in number in the last two years of 979,435 and in value of $2,334,686.

But still further. According to this same report the average price per pound of wool in the State of Texas in 1892 was 15.72 cents; while in 1893 the average price was but 9.82 cents; in 1894, 7.44 cents, and in 1895, 7.89 cents.

In the State of Ohio, according to the memorial of the National Woolgrowers' Association, there were on January 1, 1894, 3,765,704 head of sheep; while on April 1, 1894, under the threat of free wool, this number was reduced 112,271; and in the past two years it is alleged the woolgrowers of that State have lost in the value of sheep about $6,000,000 and in the value of the wool clip of 1894 below a fair price more than $2,000,000.

In the State of Oregon, according to the report of the Department of Agriculture, the value of sheep has decreased from $5,903,182 in 1893, but two years ago, to $2,945,905 in 1895, or a decrease in value in two years of free-wool policy of $2,957,297.

The following table shows the values, respectively, of sheep in the three years 1893, 1894, and 1895 in nine States and three Territories:

FREE WOOL DOES NOT GIVE CHEAPER NOR BETTER CLOTHING.

We are told free wool gives the poor man cheap woolen clothing, but the very same law that provides for free wool and takes from the farmer and woolgrower all protection imposes a duty of 42.82 per cent on woolen manufactures—this upon the basis of the importations of 1893—thus giving protection to the manufacturer of nearly 50 per cent, and on the Democratic theory that the tariff is a tax to be paid by the consumer, imposing a tax to this amount on the backs of the people who wear woolen goods.

As bearing upon the question of free wool bringing cheap clothing and better clothing by excluding shoddy, the theory having been urged that foreign wool would be so cheap that the temptation to make shoddy would be removed, it is a fact worthy of note that shoddy importations have been overwhelmingly increased under the free-trade policy, and much of it doubtless finds its way into our domestic product.

The following extract from the memorial of the National Wool Growers' Association (Senate Document No. 17, present Congress), which bears upon the subject of imports of shoddy, is interesting, and I ask to incorporate it in my remarks:

The total imports of shoddy, waste, rags, etc., under the McKinley law were as follows, in pounds:

October, 1890		406,681
November, 1890		9,396
December, 1890		47,492
January, 1891		5,319
February, 1891		10,001
March, 1891		59,542
April, 1891		22,701
May, 1891		11,576
June, 1891		21,828
Total for nine months		594,536
Year ending June 30—
1892		262,992
1893		333,376
1894		143,002
July, 1894	12,008
August, 1894	4,854
September, 1894	1,653
Total for three months		18,515
Total imported under McKinley law		1,352,421

And the following, on the subject of shoddy, is from the wool circular of Justice, Bateman & Co., November 1, 1895:

"In our last circular we showed an increase of over 17,000,000 pounds in the imports of shoddy, waste, etc., during the first year of the Wilson law.

"The entire amount of these wool adulterants imported under the four years of the McKinley law was but slightly over 1,300,000 pounds, but the imports in the first year of the Wilson law were over 17,600,000 pounds. The increase in the year ended September 30, 1895, over the previous four years was over 16,300,000 pounds, a quantity greater than all the clean scoured wool that was produced last year from our two largest woolgrowing States."

The Philadelphia Press of November 2, 1895, gives the following:

"A prominent woolen manufacturer, writing on this shoddy question, says:

"'The wool contained in all forms of waste is washed and scoured wool, and most of it has been one or more times spun, woven, and, in the case of shoddy, worn out, and perhaps respun and rewoven and reworn out.

"'While these facts deprive the wool of its staple or length, destroy its adhesive "kink," and render the cloth which is made of it relatively "rotten" and worthless, at least so far as it is used in the way of warp, they do not deprive it of the advantage it possesses relatively to new wool of having been washed and scoured, and therefore counting each pound as 3 pounds in its rivalry with unwashed and unscoured wool in the quantity of cloth it will make. Hence every pound of these "wastes" displaces 3 pounds of American wool in the quantity of cloth it will make, and only 1 pound of American wool in the length of time the cloth will wear. The real price of the shoddy for each pound of the raw wool which has entered into it is therefore only 4 cents a pound, instead of the 12 cents which the Record thinks makes it so respectable.

"'American farmers and the American Congress are likely to say before long whether 4-cent wool in 12-cent shoddy is the sort of stuff which they care to see substituted for American flocks. What it will mean in clothing will be that American working men and women will soon be clad in woolen clothing which will fall off their backs in the first rain. General Sherman declared that this was the kind of clothing the free-trade tariffs of 1846 and 1857 gave the soldiers when they first went into the Army in 1861. But by the time the war closed, he said, they were all clad in American woolens, made of American wool, which would defy a hundred storms.'"

The eminent secretary of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, in an article in the bulletin of the association for June, 1895, says:

"Practically all the wool that passes into daily consumption comes back again into the mills in the course of time, revamped as shoddy or mungo or 'wool extract,' to again pass into consumption in a cheaper grade of goods. The life of the wool fiber is long; it is converted and reconverted until it finally disappears. No approximate estimate is possible of the amount of old wool which takes the place of the new, but it is enormous, and grows larger yearly as the mechanical methods of handling it improve."

THE PERILS OF GOODS MADE OF FOREIGN RAG SHODDY.

A reliable authority treats of the perils of goods made from these adulterants as follows:

"Shoddy always was, now is, and always must be, an unwholesome article of dress. It is made from waste woolens, the rags worn by foreign lepers, discarded from hospitals, or worn out on the backs of beggars being no small part of its makeup. No shred of wool is too frayed, too coarse, or too dirty for conversion into shoddy. The rags of the mop that has cleansed the floor of the most loathsome saloon on which the drunkenest of the lowest class of residents of a great city have trodden and spat, the cast-off stocking of the dirtiest tramp, the skirt of the most diseased drab that walks the streets in nightly quest of whom she may allure, all go to the shoddy mill, and all come out as material for the manufacture of 'cheap clothing, all wool.'

"Under tariffs that were as protective of health as of industry heavy duties were laid on the importation of foreign shoddy and of the foreign rags from which American shoddy is made. All this is changed, so that during the twelve months ended August 31, 1895, the vast amount of 17,666,563 pounds of shoddy and of rags for its manufacture were imported to the United States, against no more than 201,404 pounds in the preceding year.

"From this plague and possible pestilence that the Wilson bill has invited to our shores delivery is needed. Heavy duties should be laid upon foreign shoddy and foreign rags, or, if the President refuse to sign a bill designed to prevent further increase of this dangerous class of importation, Congress at least should enact a law that will compel venders of shoddy-made goods to label them as shoddy. No one should be in danger of infection to himself or family by the purchase of garments made of contaminated shoddy, but purchased as 'cheap all-woolen goods.'"

THE INEQUALITIES OF THE WILSON TARIFF ACT.

The Wilson tariff act of 1894, said to have been enacted in the interest of the people and to reduce taxation, takes from foreign wool duties to the amount of a fraction over $8,000,000, but imposes a tax of over $40,000,000 on the sugar which every man, woman, and child in the country consumes more or less of every day, and this is called a reduction of customs taxation in the interest of all the people.

But not only so. The Wilson tariff act, while denying to the farmer all protection on wool, imposes duties equal to ad valorem duties on clean rice of 83.89 per cent; cotton manufactures, 36 to 45 per cent; woolen cloths, flannels, etc., 40 to 50 per cent; dress goods, 50 per cent; carpets, 30 to 40 per cent; bar iron, 27.22 per cent; iron ore, 22.97 per cent; iron beams, 49.76 per cent, and pig iron, $4 per ton.

THE EFFECT OF THE WILSON ACT ON AGRICULTURAL IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

The effect of the Wilson tariff act during the short time it has been in operation, in increasing agricultural importations and diminishing agricultural exports, is clearly indicated by the following table from the latest Statistical Abstract.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. From the tenor of the remarks of the Senator from Oregon, in speaking of the decline in the price of wool, it might be inferred that he attributed all of that decline to the reduction of the tariff. There has been a decline in all commodities in this country in the past three years to a very large extent, and I suppose 15 or 20 per cent would be a moderate estimate. I inquire of the Senator if wool would not be affected as other commodities, the tariff to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Undoubtedly, and I distinctly stated, as the Senator would have known if he had listened carefully, that I did not attribute the decline in the price of wool wholly to tariff legislation.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Nevada makes the Senator from Oregon state that there has been a decline in the price of wool since the passage of what is called the Wilson Act. Does he make that statement?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That there is a decline in the price of wool?

Mr. VEST. Yes; in the market of New York—the principal market.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I certainly do, unqualifiedly.

Mr. VEST. In all classes of wool?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The tables which I shall incorporate in my remarks fully bear out my statement.

Mr. VEST. That there has been a decline in all classes of wool?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Yes; in all classes of wool, and particularly in those classes in which this country is most interested.

Mr. VEST. Since the passage of the Wilson Act, as compared with the prices in preceding years?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. As compared with prices under the McKinley Act, which of course had effect up to the time the Wilson law went into operation in August, 1894? Do I understand the Senator to state that the prices have fallen since that act took effect?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I say the prices have fallen, and they commenced falling, as the statistics show, as soon as the threat of free wool was made by the incoming Administration; in fact, as soon as it was known that Mr. Cleveland had been elected President of the United States a decline followed. There have been some occasional upward spurts in the price of wool, but, taken on the whole, there has been a decline in price of 39 per cent in American wools.

In 1892 we imported only $36,000,000 worth of woolen goods, while in the present calendar year the importations will exceed $60,000,000.

According to the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department, the production of wool in this country in 1894 was 54,000,000 pounds less than it was in 1892.

A CHINESE DANGER.

It is not, perhaps, generally known that the wool industry of America is being seriously threatened, not only from the rapid increase in the production of sheep in the Argentine Republic, Australia, Canada, and some European countries, but also in China.

Twenty-five years ago there were no imports into this country of China wools. In 1870 there were 9,016 pounds of China wool imported, of the value of but $1,312, the import price per pound then being 10.45 cents; whereas in the present year (1895) the imports of China wool have reached 26,089,418 pounds, of the value of $1,699,414, the import price per pound being 5.15 cents. This China wool, moreover, has been demonstrated to be equal to our low-grade of merino wool.

The following table indicates the rapid increase in Chinese wool imports:

Year.	Quantity.	Value.	Import price per pound.
	Pounds.		Cents.
1870	9,016	$1,312	10.45
1880	66,751	9,188	13.76
1890	8,587,575	814,264	9.48
1893	20,753,893	1,812,250	8.74
1894	10,186,264	818,157	8.03
1895	26,089,418	1,699,414	5.15

THE WILSON ACT HAS DRIVEN MILLIONS OF SHEEP TO THE SLAUGHTER-HOUSE.

The annual increase in the slaughter of sheep in this country during the last two years has been immense. The four great slaughterhouses of the West are Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, and Omaha. In 1886, prior to the passage of the McKinley Act, the aggregate number of sheep slaughtered at these four points was but 979,000, while in 1894 the number was 3,564,000, or nearly treble the number of only eight years before. In 1885 Chicago alone slaughtered only 743,000 sheep, while in 1894 2,766,000 were killed, or nearly four times the number of nine years previous.

The four great Eastern cities, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, slaughtered 3,274,000 sheep in 1890, but increased the number slaughtered four years later, in 1894, to 4,079,000.

AMERICAN MANUFACTURERS NOT BENEFITED BY FREE WOOL; EUROPEAN MANUFACTURERS BENEFITED BY IT.

The manufacturers of this country must surely realize by this time that their interests are not advanced by free wool. It is recently authoritatively stated that 1,000,000 pounds of South American wool and half a million pounds of Montana wool were recently exported from Boston to Bradford, England. Why is it? Simply because our manufacturers have been unable to compete with foreign mills. Our factories are not prospering, not running, as a rule, on full time, but on short orders, while the English mills are running on full time and on full orders for home consumption and export. The price of foreign wool has been advanced, and they are thus enabled to ship wool from Boston to Bradford.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me an observation?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator makes the suggestion that probably the manufacturers of woolen goods in this country have ascertained that free wool is not desirable. I want to say to the Senator that a little time ago some of our New England manufacturers were clamoring for free wool, but at the present time it is an impossible thing, I think, to find a single one of them who does not want the duty on wool restored.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to say furthermore that two months ago I met an intelligent Englishman in the city of Manchester, N. H. He said to me that he was representing certain woolen manufacturing establishments in England, and he knew of a great many large establishments in that country that would not accept an order for woolen goods to be delivered prior to January 1, 1897. He said their mills were running day and night, and they did not care very much for additional orders, while our woolen mills in New England are on the verge of bankruptcy, and are praying that the duty on wool may be restored, and of course they believe that we ought to have a compensatory duty on woolen manufactures.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire for his statement. It confirms all for which I contend.

THE MAGNITUDE AND IMPORTANCE OF THE WOOL INDUSTRY.

It will not do to underestimate the magnitude or attempt to minimize the importance of the wool industry in this country. It is of infinitely too much importance in a variety of senses to be overlooked in legislation. An industry which engages more than 1,000,000 men, aside from hundreds of thousands of employees, owning over 40,000,000 sheep, of the value, under normal conditions, of more than $150,000,000, and including lands and fixtures for sheep husbandry, with a total capital of $500,000,000, giving to labor, including services of flockmasters, $85,000,000 annually, with an annual product in wool, mutton, and pelts, at fair prices, of more than $110,000,000, is one which deserves a better fate than receiving a fatal legislative blow at the hands of the American Congress, as it certainly did in the free-wool provisions of the Wilson tariff act.

CONCLUSION.

Had the wise provisions relating to wool incorporated in the act of March 2, 1867, been permitted to stand, with only such modifications from time to time as the changed condition of the country warranted—had the modification of 1883 never been made, it is more than probable that our annual product would to-day be equal to our consumption. Estimating on the basis of the increase of sheep in this country during the sixteen years that act was in operation, it is confidently claimed by those thoroughly conversant with the subject that now, instead of 40,000,000 sheep, we would have in this country not less than 110,000,000, producing, instead of 264,000,000 pounds, the product of 1895, 650,000,000 pounds of wool. What a saving of gold which goes to foreign countries each year to pay for imported wool this would have been, to say nothing of the manifold blessings an industry of that character and magnitude would be to the people of this country.

But a glance at the other side of the ledger, based on strong probabilities also, will show a widely different state of affairs. Continue the free-wool heresy indefinitely, and what inevitably must be the result?

First, the sheep industry of this country, now discouraged and languishing, will eventually and at no distant day be entirely annihilated, except, perhaps, as to occasional small flocks on still smaller farms. The mutton supply of our country will vanish. Instead of importing, as we do now, one-half the wool we consume we will soon be compelled to import all.

Another result will undoubtedly follow. The foreign flock masters, having thus obtained absolute control of our market, will advance the price of wool; the woolen manufacturers of the country will be at the mercy of the foreign wool producer; the price of woolen cloth will advance, and our country will be annually drained of millions of gold to pay for foreign wool.

I desire to have printed as a part of my speech, and as its conclusion, a communication signed by William Lawrence, president of the National Wool Growers' Association, of date December 26, 1895, received by me this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, such will be the order of the Senate.

The communication referred to is as follows:

WOOLGROWERS—JUDGE LAWRENCE ON THE WOOL TARIFF—AN INTERESTING STATEMENT ON IT—THE PROPOSED TARIFF AND THE AMOUNT OF PROTECTION IT GIVES.

BELLEFONTAINE, OHIO, December 26, 1895.

To the Woolgrowers of the United States:

The National Wool Growers' Association held a session of five days in Washington, D. C., commencing December 4, and agreed on a memorial to Congress, printed as Senate Document No. 17, which can be procured from members of Congress. It did not reach the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives in time to enable them to fully consider it, and the committee, deeming it necessary to speedily report a tariff bill, declined to give the woolgrowers an oral hearing. The bill reported by the committee and passed by the House this day prescribes as duties on merino wool 60 per cent of the rates of the McKinley Act of 1890, or 6.6 cents per pound unwashed, and on class 3 wools the ad valorem rate of that act, 32 per cent on the only wools that will be imported under the bill if it becomes a law.

To those who do not understand the operation of the act of 1890, the new bill apparently gives the specific rate mentioned. The McKinley Act gave a duty of 11 cents per pound on unwashed merino, 22 cents per pound on washed, and 33 cents on scoured. Most people supposed this gave protective benefit to the woolgrowers of these rates, and certainly Congress intended, and woolgrowers so expected. But it is shown in the memorial (page 49) that the "protective benefit" was in practice on merino similar to that grown in Ohio only 6 cents on washed and 13½ on scoured, in competition with the Australian merino. This was the result of two causes, first, the fatal "skirting clause," which added all of 2 cents to the value of each skirted pound, and saved most of the expense of "sorting," shown to be nearly one-tenth of the pay roll in some factories. (Memorial, page 47.) The second cause was the light shrinkage in scouring of Australian merino.

Thus the nominal duty of 11 cents on unwashed was in practice only equal to 6 cents in favor of Ohio washed, and not more than 4 or 5 cents on much of the wools of Texas and the Western States. The nominal duty of 6 cents in the new bill will only give a protective benefit of 3.6 cents on Ohio washed merino, and from 2 to 2.5 cents on much of the Texas and far West State wools. This is no protection at all. Inadequate protection is no better than free wool. Evidently the Committee on Ways and Means for want of time and mature consideration did not understand this, or their bill would have been so framed as to give some measure of protection.

The report of the Committee on Ways and Means says their bill will give "6.6 cents per pound on unwashed wool." This proves they did not understand its effect.

But this is not the worst feature of the bill. When Mr. McKinley reported the tariff bill of 1890 it proposed specific duties of 2.5 cents and 8 cents, according to value on third-class wools. The bill reported by Senator ALLISON in 1888 as a substitute for the Mills free wool bill proposed specific duties of 2.5 cents and 6 cents, according to value. But certain carpet manufacturers succeeded in getting an ad valorem duty of only 32 per cent in the act of 1890 on such wools as are now chiefly imported as third class. These wools produce more ruin to our woolgrowers than all others. They supplant our American merino and the long wools of the mutton breeds. Their imports in the fiscal year 1895 were 144,488,265 pounds, while the imports of all other wools for consumption were only 121,237,612.

These wools are of such light shrinkage that they would equal nearly 200,000,000 pounds of our unwashed merino. Of these imports in 1895 there were of China wools 26,089,418 pounds, at an import price of only 5.15 cents per pound. This is a new and the cheapest source of supply, almost unknown prior to the act of 1890. The import price of all third class from August 28, 1894, to June 30, 1895, was only 9.13 cents. The duty of 32 per cent on China wools would be less than 1.65 cents per pound, and, on an average of all, would be only 2.92 cents, and this is on wools shrinking in scouring not over 40 per cent; so that the protective benefit of the new bill on our unwashed merino is less than 2 cents per pound.

The China wools, by reason of light shrinkage, would supplant the use of 40,000,000 pounds of unwashed merino. The memorial, page 38, produces evidence that these wools are used in the manufacture of clothing goods, and that "fashion" has made it popular to use the very coarse wool goods.

American woolgrowers can not compete with these wools, imported at these low prices and with these low duties. The report of the committee says "the duty on carpet wools is left at 32 per cent ad valorem, as we raise very few carpet wools." The law does not describe any "carpet wools," because all wools are now used to make clothing goods. We do raise carpet wools, and can raise all needed, as shown in our memorial, page 76. The report says the bill is framed "mainly on revenue ground." Why, then, did not the committee adopt as a temporary expedient the less than low revenue rates of the bill in our memorial, page 218? The committee bill does give protective rates to iron and other industries, but not to wool.

The report says the bill gives manufactures "a compensatory duty equivalent to the duty on wool." The fact is it is largely more than an equivalent. Woolgrowers are discriminated against. Since the McKinley Act was passed the prices of wools in all foreign countries have declined materially. See memorial, page 60, etc. This, of course, was not foreseen when the McKinley bill was passed.

A new law should meet these new conditions. By reason of the combined operation of these causes—(1) the skirting clause; (2) the light shrinkage of Australian merino; (3) the new and enlarged use of third-class wools for clothing goods, formerly used only for carpets, and (4) the decline in the world's wool prices—the McKinley Act ceased to accomplish the purpose intended by it. Under it prices of wools constantly declined, and the inevitable result would soon have been a failure to secure prosperity to American sheep husbandry. Even in Texas, where the cost of growing wool is as low if not less than any other State, sheep declined in numbers from 4,218,812 in 1890 to 2,859,269 in 1894.

These new and unexpected results and conditions call for increased protection, not for reduction. The duties of the act of 1890 are now even less than low-revenue duties. No other industry has suffered from such a combination of causes of ruin, and hence the new bill should have recognized this fact and made provision accordingly. The new tariff bill gives the ruinous ad valorem duties to woolgrowers, the specific duties to all other industries. Why continue this unjust discrimination?

Under the new bill most other industries can live by reducing wages, but under it the wool industry is doomed to ruin only a little less speedy than by free wool. Woolgrowers in every State are urged to send delegates to appeal to the Senate to amend the bill. I remained in Washington for three weeks, until refused a hearing before the committee on December 24. I will return again to Washington on January 20, when the National Woolgrowers' Association will again meet. I am in receipt of letters so numerous that I can not answer all, and take this method of stating what has been done and what remains to be done. Papers friendly to justice for woolgrowers are requested to present the facts to their readers.

If the new bill becomes a law, wool growers can never get adequate wool duties. It is an outrageous wrong to woolgrowers. Enough of Eastern wool manufacturers to defeat us will repeat the cry, "Give the tariff a rest!" while they prosper and our wool industry will be in ruins.

The Ohio Wool Growers' Association will meet at Columbus January 15, 1896, to act on the subject. Let there be a full attendance at this the most important meeting ever held.

WILLIAM LAWRENCE,
President of the National Wool Growers' Association.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. ELKINS. Will the Senator from Minnesota permit me to offer a resolution?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

SALE OF BONDS.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that hereafter no bonds of the United States shall be sold at private sale or under private contract. And in case of any sale of bonds under existing laws, the same shall be made only after due advertisement of such sale and proposals invited, and then only to the highest bidder.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. VEST. Let the resolution be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the resolution will be printed, and go over under the rule.

Mr. VEST subsequently said: I ask that the resolution offered by the Senator from West Virginia be read. I could not hear the reading of it, and that is the reason why I asked that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution submitted by Mr. ELKINS.

Mr. HILL. I think the terms of the resolution might in some way reflect upon the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who, when Secretary of the Treasury, was constantly making these private contracts; and he being absent, I think the resolution had better lie over.

Mr. ELKINS. I think the Senator from New York ought to allow the Senator from Ohio to speak for himself. If the Senator wants to object to the resolution, let him do it openly.

Mr. HILL. The Senator is entirely competent to speak for himself.

Mr. ELKINS. I think so.

Mr. HILL. But the Senator from West Virginia does not seem to quite see the point of the criticism.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not, I confess.

Mr. HILL. I can not explain it further than I have done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. HILL. Let it lie over.

Mr. SEWELL. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask leave to submit a few remarks on the resolution of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], which I understand to be still before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. NELSON. It is conceded on all sides that our currency is in an unstable and embarrassed condition. Various causes are assigned for the disorder and various remedies are prescribed. The silver men affect to believe that the source of the difficulty lies in the suspension of the free coinage of silver, and on all occasions, out of season as well as in season, they urge, as an ample and plenary relief, the unconditional and unlimited free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, regardless of the course that other nations may take in the premises. The President and Secretary of the Treasury, on the other hand, ascribe all our financial ills to our paper currency, especially to our Treasury notes, commonly called greenbacks; and they urge and insist that substantial relief can be obtained only by the permanent retirement of these notes, even if it has to be done without substituting other paper currency in their stead.

Since we resumed specie payment in 1879 the integrity of these notes has, in part, been sustained by a gold reserve, the amount of which has been fixed by custom rather than by law at $100,000,000. And it is this fact—that these notes have been used as the apparent instrument to effect large withdrawals of gold from the Treasury—that forms the basis and ground of the claim for their permanent retirement.

While these notes have been the instrumentality they have not been the real cause for such withdrawals. The causes are other, lie deeper, and have not been confessed nor disclosed by the President or Secretary. Neither of them has pointed out the true source and origin of the gold withdrawal.

The right of issuing proper money and making it a legal tender is one of the most important attributes of sovereignty, inherent in every free and independent nation, and it is a right which no nation should ever forego or abdicate. This is the lesson of history, and one of the important and never-to-be-forgotten lessons taught us by our great civil war.

The people prefer in their daily business and for their everyday wants a paper rather than a metallic currency. Our own conscious experience in the transaction of commerce and trade, the great volume of our check and clearing-house currency, and the make-up of our circulating medium leave no doubt on this point.

On the 1st day of November, 1895, our total money circulation was $1,598,859,316, and was made up of the following items:

Gold coin	$475,181,593
Silver:
Standard dollars	58,354,092
Subsidiary	63,832,759
Notes:
United States	$338,986,280
Treasury, act July 14, 1890	114,526,669
National-bank	207,364,028
Certificates:
Gold	50,417,659
Silver	333,456,236
Currency	56,740,000

While the foregoing statement shows that there was gold coin to the amount of $475,181,593 in circulation—that is, outside of the Treasury vaults—yet scarcely none of it was in active use in traffic or in transit from hand to hand like other money, but nearly all of it was hoarded by the banks, national and State, as a part of their reserve.

If the people are content with and desire to use a convertible paper currency as money, as working capital, with a proper gold redemption reserve, the use of the excess of paper over the gold reserve is, under ordinary and normal conditions, a saving and a profit which ought to inure to the Government and to the whole people and not to private parties.

Treasury notes are the noninterest-bearing demand notes of the Government, redeemable on presentation in gold. They maintain themselves in circulation under normal conditions, not so much because the Government has the actual gold on hand to redeem on demand at one and the same time every outstanding paper dollar as because of confidence in the resources, the Administration, the business methods, and the integrity of the Government.

The gold in the vaults is only a part of the reserve for the outstanding circulation. The chief reserve is confidence in the Government. It is so with the National Treasury; it is so with the banks. And whenever the Government handicaps itself so as to suffer a loss of confidence, so as to diminish this reserve, the burden shifts to the metallic reserve, and that becomes the chief point of tension; and this is precisely what the Government has done within the last three years.

From the time of the resumption of specie payment, in 1879, till the year 1894, the receipts of the Government largely exceeded its expenditures. The aggregate of such excess for the five years next preceding 1894 was $242,611,467. Since that time—since the end of the fiscal year 1893 up to the end of December, 1895—the expenditures of the Government have exceeded its income to the extent of $128,390,388.70.

From the time of the resumption of specie payment until the end of the fiscal year 1894 the balance of trade, under our then existing system of tariff protection, was, with the exception of a slight adverse balance for three years, largely in our favor. The total aggregate of such balance of trade in our favor for the entire period was $1,622,683,859, which was equal to an annual average of $101,417,741.

Since 1894 the balance of trade has been against us. For the ten months ending October 31, 1895, the aggregate of such balance was $31,057,171. In short, since 1894 the country has labored under an adverse balance of trade and under an insufficient revenue, both superinduced and brought about by the tariff law of 1894.

In 1893 an era of hard times set in, which has continued with but slight improvement ever since. I shall not here undertake to enumerate the various causes which brought about this condition. Some were, undoubtedly, of a political nature, and arose from a change of Administration and a threatened change in the then existing revenue and tariff system. The situation, too, was aggravated by a forced inflation of silver currency under the act of 1890, but this cause was removed more than two years ago by the repealing act of November, 1893. This act would have perhaps afforded substantial and permanent relief had the industrial situation not been threatened and afflicted with another danger.

In 1894, notwithstanding the great depression still existing in all industrial and manufacturing enterprises, and at a time when, above all others, confidence and rest from disturbing and hostile legislation were needed, the country was afflicted with a long-drawn-out legislative tariff contest, which finally culminated in the so-called Wilson-Gorman tariff law of 1894. And it is under this law and as a result of the same that we now have an insufficient revenue, and, worst of all, an adverse balance of trade. This legislation and these results have undermined that confidence which is even more valuable than a gold reserve.

As long as we had an ample revenue and an ample balance of trade in our favor there was but a limited and moderate withdrawal of gold. Public confidence guarded the vaults of the Treasury. From July 1, 1879, to July 1, 1892, the total withdrawal was only $43,310,896, while during the year ended January 28, 1895—the year of the tariff agitation and tariff legislation—there was a withdrawal of over $172,000,000. And since that time, except during the period when the country was under the protecting wings of the bond syndicate, who reaped a golden harvest of over $8,000,000, the withdrawals have been at an equally rapid rate.

So that now we are again face to face with another bond issue, on perhaps even more unfavorable terms than the last one; and at a time when another loan was so imminent the money-loaning syndicates have been favored with a war scare to give them a plausible and apparently fair excuse for exacting higher rates and more severe terms.

From July 1, 1892, till December 1, 1895, the withdrawals of gold from the Treasury amounted to the sum of $360,266,512, and the entire export of gold from the country during that period amounted to $305,617,419, showing that only $54,649,093 of the withdrawals found a lodgment and were hoarded in this country. Thus it appears that this heavy and continuing demand upon our gold supply comes not from our own people, but from foreign countries, and it comes from there not so much from want of confidence—for they are to-day as anxious to take our Government bonds as ever—as to meet an adverse balance of trade. And by this balance of trade I mean not only the matter of merchandise, but I also include the whole system of credits. The balance of trade between our country and foreign countries is the difference between what we pay them and what we receive from them upon all current transactions, whether in credits or in merchandise.

It is estimated that we have to pay Europe yearly from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000 in dividends and interest on mortgages, stocks, and bonds. Add to this an adverse balance in the matter of merchandise alone of upwards of $40,000,000 a year, and also take into account the large sums spent abroad by American tourists, and it is safe to say that even under normal conditions we have an adverse balance of at least $100,000,000 a year which we have to liquidate in the universal money of the world—gold. This balance is often abnormally increased when investors, either as a matter of speculation or for the purposes of change, or through a panicky feeling, call in or sell their stocks, securities, and bonds. This adverse balance of $100,000,000 a year or more upon credits alone we overcame and more than liquidated by the balance of trade in our favor upon goods and merchandise in the five-year period next preceding 1894, which balance, as I have already pointed out, was more than $100,000,000 of annual average.

It was this fact, the fact that our merchandise exported in those years more than liquidated the credit balance against us, that limited the withdrawals of gold in that period to such a moderate quantity as compared with the period following.

Our currency system was no better then than now—in fact, not as good, for we were then laboring under the load of a forced silver inflation, a burden of which we were relieved more than two years ago. Is it not clear—clear to all candid minds who are disposed to look beneath the surface of things—that it is this ever-increasing adverse balance of trade that is the ultimate and controlling force which impels gold withdrawal and disturbs our financial system? It is this hostile balance of trade, and not the now downtrodden greenback, that caused the great outflow of gold in 1894 and 1895. Had the balance of trade been ever so little in our favor, the stream of gold would inevitably, as by the law of gravitation, have flown our way. Our claims against foreign countries in those two years have been insufficient to liquidate their claims against us, and we have had to make up the difference in gold; hence the outflow.

Manifestly and palpably, then, our greenbacks have been the instruments and not the real cause of gold withdrawals. Had these instruments not existed, others would have been found. The burden would simply have shifted to other shoulders.

Our national-bank notes are, under existing laws, redeemable in greenbacks, or in so-called Sherman notes; in fact, in any legal-tender money. But if the greenbacks and the Sherman notes are retired, are destroyed, then the national-bank notes will become redeemable in gold, and their 25 or 15 per cent reserves and their 5 per cent redemption fund will all have to be made up of gold, and they will have to bear nearly all the gold burden which the Treasury now bears on behalf of the greenbacks and the Sherman notes.

International balances would still have to be liquidated in gold, and importers and others having occasion to use gold for shipment abroad would then, armed with national-bank notes, draw the money from these banks instead of from the Treasury, as now. The burden which this great Government of ours, with all its resources and great credit, has staggered under would be more than the banks could bear. Within two or three years, under the existing adverse balance of trade, they would succumb and inevitably have to suspend specie payment, for in four or five years at the present rate the entire gold supply would escape from the country and the banks could not, like the Government, replenish their vaults by the recurring sale of bonds to foreign syndicates, for the "endless chain," of which we have heard so much, would still exist, but not where the Administration places it. It will exist until the balance of trade upon the aggregate of all our transactions with foreign countries is restored to our favor. Selling bonds to foreign syndicates increases the credit balance against us by the annual interest charge and ultimately by the principal—to meet which, unless we can overcome it with a merchandise balance in our favor, we shall have to ship gold abroad.

The outward flow of gold can not be stopped permanently either by the sale of bonds to foreign syndicates nor by the retirement of the greenbacks and other Treasury notes. The flow can only be permanently and steadily checked by restoring the ultimate balance of trade in our favor. For years to come Europe must of necessity continue to have upon our stocks, mortgages, and bonds a large credit balance in her favor. This balance we should meet and overcome, not by the shipment of gold, but by the balance of traffic in merchandise in our favor. Our tariff and revenue laws should be so adjusted as to leave us a creditor rather than a debtor nation, with a merchandise balance sufficient to meet and liquidate the adverse credit balance, and with a revenue ample to meet all the expenses of the Government. Ample revenues and a clear balance of trade in our favor can alone stop the flow of gold and effect permanent and substantial relief.

To shift the entire gold burden from the Government to the banks at this time would be a most hazardous experiment. In the present situation and under existing conditions no institutions and no interests are more vitally interested in the continued existence of the greenback dollars or would be so injuriously affected by their permanent retirement as our own national banks. They can now say what they could no longer say if the policy of the Administration should prevail, "I know that my redeemer—the greenback—liveth."

To retire at this time the greenbacks and the 1890 coin notes would not only lead to the dangerous consequences I have already pointed out, but to make such retirement without making suitable provisions for a sound paper currency of equal volume to take the place of the retired notes would lead to a contraction of our currency almost as fatal and as dangerous as the contraction which would result from the isolated free coinage of silver on the ratio of 16 to 1. In the one case $500,000,000 of paper currency would be driven out of circulation—a currency, too, much better liked by the people at large than any other—and in the other case $560,000,000 of gold would disappear and the parity of our currency would be destroyed. But while I believe it would be hazardous, especially at this time, and unjust and unwise to shift the entire gold burden from the Treasury to the banks, yet I think that as a matter of justice and fair play, and as a matter of self-interest and self-protection, the banks should share a part of the gold burden with the Treasury.

The Government has granted to them a part of its sovereign attribute, that of issuing notes and circulating them as money, and with this prerogative they should also carry the burden justly incident to a sound paper currency, that of redeeming their notes in gold. They are in a shape to assume this burden now, for with a circulation of about $213,000,000 they carry a gold reserve of over $160,000,000. Let them convert the 5 per cent redemption fund into a gold fund, and maintain it as such, and let their 25 and 15 per cent reserve be a permanent gold reserve. By this plan they would merely be carrying the gold burden incident to their own paper, while the Government would still be carrying the gold burden incident to $346,000,000 greenbacks, $141,000,000 coin Treasury notes, and $343,000,000 silver certificates.

In round numbers, out of a total paper currency of $1,000,000,000, the banks would be carrying about one-fifth of the gold burden and the Government four-fifths. It is strange that neither the Secretary of the Treasury nor the Comptroller of the Currency, while they have advocated so many currency reforms, have never thought of advising or recommending that the banks bear their just, fair, and proportionate share of the gold burden.

In consideration of the banks assuming this burden, they should be permitted to carry a circulation equal to the par value of the bonds deposited, and the tax upon their circulation should be reduced to one-fourth of 1 per cent. The banks ought to be willing for the purpose of fortifying the Government in protecting and maintaining our vast paper currency on a parity with gold, especially at this juncture, to assume their fair proportionate share of the burden.

Aside from a few extremists here and there, the great body of the American people are not hostile to the banks. We sometimes, some of us, feel that they are not always as patriotic as they might be, and that sometimes they are a little selfish and lack a little of the milk of human kindness. But be this as it may, for better or worse, they are a part of our financial system, and we are anxious to have their cooperation and aid, especially now, in maintaining the integrity and greatness of our common country at home and abroad. Now is the accepted time.

As a feeble, but honest and well-meaning spokesman of the common people, I hope that the banks will rise to the emergency that is now upon us, and will be willing to bear their just share and portion of that gold redemption burden incident to the integrity of our paper currency. Take your share of the burden voluntarily and with good grace, and then the American people will never permit the Administration to cast the entire gold burden of the country on your shoulders.

Mr. President, on behalf of the common people of this country I beg leave to enter this brief, plain, and unvarnished plea to the indictment preferred by the Administration against our greenbacks—that currency that was so near and so helpful to us in the days of our greatest adversity, the days of 1861–1865.

During the delivery of Mr. NELSON's remarks,

The PRESIDING OFFICER said: The Senator from Minnesota will kindly suspend for a few minutes. It becomes the duty of the Chair, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, to place before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed.

Mr. MILLS. I ask so, too.

Mr. HOAR. What is the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the unfinished business will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 236) to provide for proper disposition of the remains of deceased members of the Senate and House of Representatives who die at the capital during the sessions of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked that the Senator from Minnesota may finish his remarks.

Mr. PEFFER. And that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And that the unfinished business may go over without prejudice. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Minnesota will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. NELSON's remarks,

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon said: I move that the resolution which I offered be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

SALE OF BONDS.

Mr. SEWELL. I withdraw my objection to the resolution offered a short time since by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

Mr. ELKINS. The Senator from New Jersey having withdrawn his objection to the resolution, I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from West Virginia has offered this most extraordinary resolution at this time. An objection was made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] to its present consideration, and then subsequently withdrawn. The Senator from West Virginia desires its present consideration. I desire simply to state why I do not think it should be entertained, and I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment. The other House has passed a bill which is now in the possession of the Finance Committee of this body. I do not know whether it is to be reported within a very reasonable time or not.

Mr. ALDRICH. Unquestionably it will be reported either adversely or favorably.

Mr. HILL. I said within a reasonable time.

Mr. ALDRICH. Unquestionably.

Mr. HILL. That leaves a pretty wide margin, Mr. President. The Senator from West Virginia undoubtedly thinks that there may be some delay possible in the reporting of that bill, because he has seen fit to offer this resolution now. I read a clause from that bill:

> Whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall offer any of the bonds authorized for sale by this act or by the resumption act of 1875, he shall advertise the same and authorize subscriptions therefor to be made at the Treasury Department and at the subtreasuries and designated depositories of the United States.

That covers all the points suggested in the resolution now presented for consideration. I conceive no good reason why the resolution should be taken up at this time and pending the consideration of the bill which we are assured by the Senator from Rhode Island is very soon, in some form or other, to be reported to the Senate.

Mr. President, for that reason and because of the further reason that if it should be considered I desire to offer some remarks to the Senate upon the general subject involved in the resolution and in the bill, and there is no time to-day—for those reasons altogether I object to the consideration of the resolution to-day.

Mr. ELKINS. If in order to do so, I shall move to take up the resolution notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from New York.

Mr. ALDRICH. I take it for granted that a motion to take up the resolution would not now be in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Such a motion can not be entertained. The resolution having been introduced to-day, an objection carries it over.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Friday, January 3, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. LEWIS for two weeks, on account of important business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

> Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, under the direction of the Department of the Interior, 6,000 copies of a paper contained in the Sixteenth Annual Report of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, entitled "The public lands and their water supply," together with the accompanying maps and illustrations, of which number 1,500 copies shall be for the use of members of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of members of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 for the use of the Geological Survey.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw the papers filed before the Committee on War Claims in the matter of the Episcopal Church at Franklin, Tenn., without leaving copies, there being no adverse report.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

While I am in favor of conferring the right of suffrage on women, I have supposed that it would be hardly worth while for Congress to make a proposal of that kind to the States, which would require the assent of three-fourths of the States, until a larger number of the States have adopted it for themselves, as they have a right to do. But I introduce the joint resolution out of respect to the petitioners.

The joint resolution (S. R. 38) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE ALASKAN BOUNDARY.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be read at length.

The joint resolution (S. R. 39) making an appropriation to defray the joint expense of locating the boundary line between the Territory of Alaska and the British North American territory was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in view of the expediency of forthwith negotiating a convention with Great Britain for marking convenient points upon the one hundred and forty-first meridian of west longitude where it forms, under existing treaty provisions, the boundary line between the Territory of Alaska and the British North American territory, and to enable the President to execute the provisions of such convention without delay, when concluded, the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, under the direction of the President, to defray the share of the United States in the joint expense of locating said meridian and marking said boundary by an international commission.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I will state in explanation of the joint resolution that the people of the Pacific Coast desire a speedy settlement of the boundary question in Alaska. I have had representations made to me on that subject of the most urgent character. People whose homes are in the State of Washington are engaged in mining in the Territory of Alaska. They are engaged in transporting supplies for their subsistence while conducting their operations in mining. Others are engaged in trading as merchants between the ports on Puget Sound and the ports of Alaska.

From a report publihsed by the Coast Survey in 1893 I quote the following extracts, as showing the extent and importance of this great Territory:

It is regrettable that our sources of information for late Alaskan statistics are confined to the brief summaries of the governor's reports, and that for a comprehensive study of all the wealth-producing industries of the Territory we have to go to the publications of the census for 1890.

The extraordinary growth of this but partially explored Territory, with its valuable resources on land and the almost limitless wealth in its waters, demands greater attention than has heretofore been accorded it, and makes imperative that general and comprehensive aids to its navigation and commerce be supplied.

This vast region contains about 600,000 square miles, being about twelve and a half times the area of the State of New York. It has approximately 26,000 miles of shore line, which exceeds that of the Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf coasts of the United States by over 11,200 miles, while the islands along its coast are estimated to be 1,100 in number. A course parallel with the trend of its shore from Cape Muzon, its most southerly point, to Point Barrow, its most northerly one, is about 2,800 miles. The Aleutian chain of islands is about 1,100 miles long, and Attu, the most westerly one of this group, is about 2,200 miles west of Sitka.

There are immense forests in Alaska, densely covering every part of the country and climbing steep mountain sides to heights of 2,000 and 2,500 feet above sea level, and which extend as far west as Kadiak Island, being a continuous stretch of a thousand miles.

They consist mainly of spruce, hemlock, and cedar, one variety of the latter, the yellow, being very valuable in the construction of small vessels on account of its durable qualities.

The commerce of Alaska is and doubtless always will be carried on by water, owing to the peculiar formation of the country; and being so varied and largely conducted by nonresidents and by vessels hailing from so many different ports, it is difficult to obtain an exact idea of its extent. The internal commerce is carried on through about 126 agencies, located in 104 towns and settlements, situated along its coast and among its islands.

The exports consist mainly of furs, ivory, Indian curios, gold and silver bullion and ore, and the products of the whale, cod, and salmon fisheries.

During the earlier occupancy of the country its commerce depended almost exclusively on the fur trade, but since other industries dependent upon the actual necessities of man sprang up this important factor, although of great value, has already fallen to a third place in importance. From 1868 to 1891 the total value of the furs exported is estimated at $50,124,500, and the annual yield for the last-mentioned year amounted to about $1,605,000.

In 1892 there were sixteen gold and silver mines in operation, and up to that date the total output amounted to about $6,000,000. The traffic dependent upon the necessities of the small army already engaged in this comparatively new enterprise is considerable and will undoubtedly increase.

The salmon industry commenced in 1878, and from that date up to 1890 the pack had amounted to $9,612,000. In 1878 the entire product was valued at $59,416, while that of 1890 was $2,731,000. The salmon-canning industry of this country is confined to the waters of California, Oregon, Washington, and Alaska. In years past the Columbia River has been the principal source of supply, but the run in all the sections south of British Columbia has become smaller from year to year. In the year 1887 the total pack for the entire Pacific Coast was 969,200 cases, of which the Columbia River furnished 430,000. In 1890 the output of the western coast was about 1,223,955 cases, of which Alaska alone furnished 688,322, or more than half the entire product of the United States. The capital invested in the Alaska salmon fisheries, including permanent improvements, vessels, etc., is something more than $4,000,000. There were, in 1890, 37 canneries between Dixon Entrance and Bristol Bay, 25 of which are west of Sitka, and about 6,000 persons were employed during the fishing season, using 66 vessels for the purpose.

Judging from the rate of increase during the past ten years and the enormous field yet to be developed, the commerce depending upon this single industry will be one of the most notable interests of the Pacific Coast. Three-fourths of it is now beyond the region reconnoitered, and is rapidly crowding northward into unchartered localities enormously rich in fish. It is interesting to note that the two newer industries, mining and salmon fishing, have grown so rapidly that while in 1880 both these industries were insignificant and completely overshadowed by the fur trade, by 1890 their products amounted in value to $15,000,000, or more than twice the purchase price of the Territory.

The Pacific and Arctic whaling catch, though not confined strictly to Alaskan waters, is conducted by American vessels, and all but a very small percentage of it is secured in waters contiguous to the Alaskan coast. The total value of oil, bone, and ivory of the catch between 1874 and 1890 was $11,204,465. There are about fifty vessels engaged in this industry, their port of call being Port Clarence. The charts of the tracks and rendezvous of these vessels are simply compilations of early explorations and are very crude and inaccurate.

Of the food fish of Alaska the cod-fish stand next in commercial importance to the salmon. The eastern part of Bering Sea is a great reservoir of cod, and the area within the limits of 50 fathoms depth is no less than 18,000 square miles. In this sea fishing must be done as it is off Newfoundland, without harbors of refuge, but in a much less depth of water. The fishing banks along the south shores of the Aleutian chain will add about 45,000 more square miles, making a total of 63,000 square miles, this being about four times the area of the banks in the region of Newfoundland. Though over twenty years have elapsed since the inception of this industry, it must still be considered in its infancy. The value of the catch during the last twenty-seven years has amounted to about $8,900,000. It is carried on without regard to the abundant supply, but solely in accordance with the demands of the local and limited market on the Pacific coast of America.

It is evident, with the numerous transcontinental railways and with the increasing population along their lines and growing tributaries, that the demand will constantly and permanently increase, so that this interest will alone crowd the waters of the Gulf of Alaska and Bering Sea with sails.

In this report too much stress is not laid on the importance of the fishing industry alone, and this will be appreciated if we reflect that a great historical fact has been epitomized in the statement that "Amsterdam is built on herring bones."

Sundry questions have arisen to cause grave solicitude and anxiety on the subject of the boundary line. It has even been intimated to me that there is a strong probability that some conflict or strife may take place between the miners I have referred to or the others who are engaged in taking in supplies and those who would collect duties from them on the frontier.

Mr. President, I believe that this question is an important one; even more important, perhaps, than the decision of the Venezuelan boundary, because this question relates to the boundaries of our own country. It relates to peace between our own citizens and the citizens of the adjoining British possessions. In my judgment, it is the duty of this Congress to facilitate in every proper way the adjustment of the question relating to this boundary line.

It may be appropriate to give here a brief sketch of the history of the boundary survey. In 1872 General Grant, then President of the United States, anticipating that a postponement of the definite marking of the boundary might involve future disputes, recommended in his annual message the creation of a commission for settling the boundary line. But the matter was allowed to drop, and nothing was done until President Cleveland, about fifteen years later, again brought the subject forward by a reference to it in his message.

In 1887 the Department of State inserted an item of $100,000 in the estimates for a preliminary survey of the boundary, but on this item no action was taken.

In 1888, however, an appropriation of $20,000 was made for a preliminary survey, to be conducted by the Coast and Geodetic Survey in accordance with projects to be approved by the Secretary of State. Under this act two parties were organized in the spring of 1889 to ascend the Yukon and its affluent, the Porcupine, to determine by astronomical observations the intersection of the one hundred and forty-first meridian with these rivers. The party on the Porcupine accomplished its purpose during the following winter, while the party on the Yukon was compelled by adverse circumstances to spend two winters there.

Small appropriations were annually made under the same wording as the act of October 2, 1888, referred to above, until the year 1892, when a convention was concluded at Washington, on July 22, 1892, for conducting a coincident or joint survey "with a view to the ascertainment of the facts and data necessary to the permanent delimitation of said boundary line," that is, from latitude 54° 40′ north to the point where it encounters the one hundred and forty-first meridian west of Greenwich.

Under this convention commissioners were appointed by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, respectively.

It was prescribed that the commissioners should complete their duties within two years from the date of their first meeting, but as this was found impracticable the time was extended to December 31, 1895, by supplementary convention of February 3, 1894.

The total amount appropriated under this convention was $60,000, and the surveys were conducted on behalf of the United States under the direction of the Superintendents of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The Alaskan boundary is conveniently divisible into two sections: The first where it follows the contour of the coast from the southernmost point of Prince of Wales Island until it strikes the one hundred and forty-first meridian at or near the summit of Mount St. Elias; the second where it is formed by the one hundred and forty-first meridian, which it follows from that intersecting point to the Frozen Ocean.

The determination of the exact limits of the first coastwise section is in progress, or has been in progress until recently, through a preliminary survey by American and British expeditions acting separately or coincidentally, as convenience might dictate, under the provisions of the convention of July 22, 1892, and the supplementary convention of February 3, 1894, between the United States and Great Britain. The object of this preliminary survey has been to obtain for the information of their respective Governments affirmative data from which they may by conventional agreement determine the true boundary described in the Anglo-Russian treaty of 1825, and redescribed in the first article of the treaty between the United States and Russia of March, 1867, whereby the Russian territory of Alaska was ceded to this country.

As before stated, this preliminary examination had been taking place until the 31st day of December, 1895, to which date it was extended by supplementary convention of February 3, 1894. It seems that, referring to the President's message, a further extension of time will be necessary, as well as an additional appropriation for the completion of this work.

It has been erroneously stated in the public prints, as I am informed upon good authority, that some agreement has been signed by the respective commissioners in the past few days. This seems to be a misapprehension. These commissioners were not created for the purpose of coming to any agreement. They had no power relative to coming to any such agreement so as to bind their Governments. They were simply to examine and report for the information of their respective Governments, and to furnish the necessary data to afford the basis for a treaty between the United States and Great Britain relative to the southeastern boundary of Alaska. I doubt not there should be an appropriation for the continuation of the work of the commission, and I believe it is expected that the present commission will be continued by a convention between the two Governments extending the term of its existence and its labors.

As the Alaskan coast is steadily becoming settled and an extensive development of interests of great magnitude is taking place, it seems needful that provision be made for the settlement of both these boundary questions. The second question, and the one to which the joint resolution refers more particularly, is in relation to the one hundred and forty-first meridian. It seems as to this that all the preliminaries are completed, so that a conventional agreement can now be made between the United States and Great Britain. The theoretical existence of this boundary on the one hundred and forty-first meridian is an undoubted fact, and is not at all in question, but the physical location of the boundary line remains to be established. I am informed by those who have given this subject great attention that the ascertainment of a given meridian at any given point is a work depending upon the precision of the scientific instruments employed and the accuracy of the astronomical and geodetic observation, so that it needs much time and care to reduce the remaining amount of error to so small a degree that it will be practically immaterial and of no consequence. Such observations and surveys were undertaken by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey in 1890 and 1891, and the points where the one hundred and forty-first meridian crosses the Yukon River, also where it intersects Forty Mile Creek, and again where it passes by the summit of Mount St. Elias, have been marked with some degree of accuracy. Similar surveys in some quarters under British auspices are believed to give nearly coincident results. I am informed that there is a difference of perhaps not more than 450 feet between the location by the respective Governments on the Yukon River where that is intersected by the one hundred and forty-first meridian, and that there is but a slight difference at the intersection of the meridian with what is known as Forty Mile Creek, where active mining operations are conducted.

It seems to be practicable to reach an agreement along this line, inasmuch as the difference is so slight. These surveys by the respective Governments have been independently conducted, and no international agreement has yet been made to mark those or any other parts of the one hundred and forty-first meridian by permanent monuments.

The going in of the miners and the development of the country has been such that the valley of the Yukon is becoming a highway through the hitherto unexplored wilds of Alaska. This region has great mineral resources recently discovered, especially at or near the junction of the boundary meridian with the Yukon and its tributaries. What is known as the Porcupine River is another of the tributaries upon which surveys have been made. The outposts of civilization and enterprise are springing up, and under these circumstances it seems exceedingly important, and, indeed, necessary that the jurisdictional limits of the respective Governments in this new region should be determined. It is understood that Her Britannic Majesty's Government has already proposed a joint delimitation of the one hundred and forty-first meridian by an international commission of experts, and if Congress should create this commission, and make provision therefor, the necessary result can be accomplished with no unreasonable delay by means of the convention which is contemplated to that end.

I fear that there has been at times a degree of indistinctness in the conception of my fellow-citizens in regard to the Alaskan boundary question. There has been a mixing of the two separate and distinct questions, the one relating to the one hundred and forty-first meridian and the other relating to the line starting from the southernmost end of Prince of Wales Island and following along the contour of the coast (I mean the mainland), at a distance of not more than 30 geographical miles from the ocean. There has been a degree of uncertainty and confusion in the public mind on this subject—a commingling of the questions. They are easily separated. The question that is dealt with in the joint resolution I have introduced this morning relates solely to the boundary line along the one hundred and forty-first meridian. As to the other question, I understand that the examination which has been made by the commission in reference to southeastern Alaska is purely preliminary and relates principally to the character and description of the region.

The people of the city in which I reside have recently forwarded to me a very carefully prepared report, going into the history of this whole Alaskan boundary question. It shows the interest of my people in this question. It has been prepared with much care and research. I deem it to be of great value and interest at the present time, when this subject is so prominent in the public mind. I believe there is one error in the paper toward the close, in which it is stated that it is understood that the reports provided for by the convention referred to "have been submitted to the respective Governments and await further action, in pursuance of the terms of the convention of 1892 and the supplemental convention of 1894." The report of the commission may have been presented to the Canadian Government, but I have to-day learned that it has not yet been presented to the Government of the United States, and, as I before stated, this report can only present data for the information of the respective Governments, upon which, when the entire examination shall be completed, the two nations may be duly advised, so as to enable them more intelligently to enter into a treaty. With the exception of this paragraph, I believe the representations set forth in the following report are mainly correct. I ask that the report which was made by a committee of the Chamber of Commerce of Seattle be appended and made part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, without objection.

The paper referred to is as follows:

ALASKAN BOUNDARY—SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT.

To the BOARD OF TRUSTEES,
Chamber of Commerce, Seattle, Wash.

GENTLEMEN: Since the report submitted to your honorable body under date of April 1, 1895, the committee has pursued its search for further information which would tend to assist the Government of the United States to firmly maintain the integrity of our Alaskan possessions. The boundary line of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada dividing the Territory of Alaska from the Province of British Columbia and the Northwest Territory of Canada has, by reason of its extraordinary length, developed two subjects for investigation, which may be pursued and determined separately, while the permanent delimitation of the entire boundary involves the satisfactory settlement of each. The one comprehends the physical location of the one hundred and forty-first meridian as produced northwardly from Mount St. Elias to the frozen ocean.

The controversy over the above-mentioned part of the boundary has, by the separate efforts of the Governments of the United States and Canada, been brought more nearly to a determination than that over southeastern Alaska, and which, it appears to the committee, will be attended with more vexatious incidents. This report, therefore, is submitted in support of the eastern boundary of the strip which begins south of Mount St. Elias and runs southeasterly as far as Portland Channel, and which boundary it is emphatically contended has been conceded by Canada for more than sixty years, and ecrtainly, as far as the investigation of the committee has extended, has never been questioned by that Government until comparatively a recent date.

It is necessary, for a clear understanding of the points at issue, to carefully peruse the description of the boundary line as expressly defined in Article I of the convention concluded March 30, 1867, between the United States of America and Russia. The line of demarcation as set forth therein is as follows:

"ARTICLE I.

"His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias agrees to cede to the United States, by this convention, immediately upon the exchange of the ratifications thereof, all the territory and dominion now possessed by his said Majesty on the continent of America and in the adjacent islands, the same being contained within the geographical limits herein set forth, to wit: The eastern limit is the line of demarcation between the Russian and the British possessions in North America as established by the convention between Russia and Great Britain of February 28–16, 1825, and described in Articles III and IV of said convention in the following terms:

"'Commencing from the southernmost point of the island called Prince of Wales Island, which point lies in the parallel of 54° 40′ north latitude, and between the one hundred and thirty-first and the one hundred and thirty-third degree of west longitude (meridian of Greenwich), the said line shall ascend to the north along the channel called Portland Channel as far as the point of the continent where it strikes the fifty-sixth degree of north latitude; from this last-mentioned point the line of demarcation shall follow the summit of the mountains situated parallel to the coast as far as the point of intersection of the one hundred and forty-first degree of west longitude (of the same meridian), and finally, from the said point of intersection, the said meridian line of the one hundred and forty-first degree, in its prolongation as far as the frozen ocean.

"'IV. With reference to the line of demarcation laid down in the preceding article, it is understood—

"'First. That the island called Prince of Wales Island shall belong wholly to Russia,' (now, by this cession, to the United States).

"'Second. That whenever the summit of the mountains which extend in a direction parallel to the coast from the fifty-sixth degree of north latitude to the point of intersection of the one hundred and forty-first degree of west longitude shall prove to be at a distance of more than 10 marine leagues from the ocean, the limit between the British possessions and the line of coast which is to belong to Russia as above mentioned (that is to say, the limit to the possessions ceded by this convention) shall be formed by a line parallel to the winding of the coast, and which shall never exceed the distance of 10 marine leagues therefrom.'"—United States Statutes at Large, volume 15, pages 539–540.

The wording of the description of the boundary line, as above given, is identical with that contained in the convention between Russia and Great Britain of February 28–16, 1825, in Articles III and IV thereof, save the following words "(now, by this cession, to the United States)," which occurs in the first paragraph of Article IV above.

The diplomatic language used in the Russian-English convention of 1825 is here given, in order that the accuracy of the translation may be compared, and is as follows:

"ARTICLE III.

"La ligne de démarcation entre les Possessions des Hautes Parties contractantes sur la côte du continent et les îles de l'Amerique nord-ouest, sera tracée ainsi qu'il suit:

"'A partir du point le plus méridional de l'île dite Prince of Wales, lequel point se trouve sous la parallèle du 54 degré 40 minutes de latitude nord, et entre le 131 et le 133 degré de longitude ouest (méridien de Greenwich). La dite ligne remontera au nord le long de la passe dite Portland Channel, jusqu'au point de la terre ferme ou elle atteint le 56 degré latitude nord; de ce dernier point, la ligne de démarcation suivra la crête des montagnes situées parallèlement à la côte, jusqu'au point d'intersection du 141 degré de longitude ouest (même méridien); et, finalement, du dit point d'intersection la même ligne méridienne du 141 degré formera dans son prolongement jusqu'à la Mer Glaciale la limite entre les Possessions Russes et Britanniques sur le continent de l'Amérique nord-ouest.'

"ARTICLE IV.

"Il est entendu, par rapport à la ligne de démarcation déterminée dans l'Article précédent:

"'1. Que l'île dite Prince of Wales appartiendra toute entière à la Russie.

"'2. Que partout ou la crête des montagnes qui s'étendent dans une direction parallèle à la côte depuis le 56 degré de latitude nord au point d'intersection du 141 degré de longitude ouest, se trouverait à la distance de plus de 10 lieues marines de l'océan, la limite entre les Possessions Britanniques et la lisière de côte mentionnée ci-dessus comme devant appartenir à la Russie, sera formée par une ligne parallèle aux sinuosités de la côte et qui ne pourra jamais en être éloignée que de 10 lieues marines.'"

The subject of the controversy between Russia and Great Britain which culminated in the convention of 1825, above referred to, was the celebrated ukase of September 4, 1821, issued by the Emperor Alexander, and which prohibited foreign vessels not only from landing upon the coasts and islands of the northwest belonging to Russia, but also the coast and islands of Siberia, or to approach them in less than 100 Italian miles. It was intended to protect all commerce, whaling, and fishery at such places from foreign competition, as an exclusive franchise, in all such industries at such places, was thereby granted to Russian subjects.

Mention is here made of this ukase because of the diplomatic correspondence which ensued and was carried on for several years between the British and Russian Governments, in which the settlement of this identical boundary line was the most prominent subject of the controversy.

Throughout this most interesting correspondence the intent of the high contracting parties is clearly and unmistakably laid bare as to the physical location of the eastern boundary of the Alaskan strip, and when read together with the description set forth above, annihilates the pretensions of Canada to any of the canals, bays, or inlets to which claims are now being set up.

The alleged claims of the Dominion of Canada to portions of the Alaskan strip arises, first, from the strained construction given to the description of the boundary line as hereinabove set forth; and, second, from a real or pretended belief in the existence of a fact which is emphatically controverted by the engineers of the United States.

CANADIAN CLAIMS.

The Parliamentary papers and the leading journals of the Dominion of Canada, and particularly of the Province of British Columbia, vigorously contend, in support of the construction referred to, that—

First. That "Behm Canal," and not "Portland Canal," is the channel intended through which the boundary line commencing at the southernmost portion of Prince of Wales Island "shall ascend to the north * * * as far as the point of the continent where it strikes the fifty-sixth degree of north latitude."

Second. That the eastern boundary line, in its extension from the point where it strikes the fifty-sixth degree of north latitude, shall follow an alleged range of mountains, arbitrarily crossing and cutting off the heads of bays and inlets the ownership of which by the United States has hitherto been unquestioned.

Third. That the said eastern boundary line is not a line following the sinuosities of the coast, and giving to the terms "windings of the coast" an interpretation which concedes to British Columbia not only parts of the inland waters, but a large area of the most valuable portions of the coast-line strip known as southeastern Alaska.

Fourth. That neither Portland nor Behm Canal was named when the British-Russian convention of 1825 was acted upon.

That these, among other points inimical to the proprietorship of the United States, are vigorously contended for by the press of Canada and are supported by semiofficial utterances may be safely inferred from the following facts:

Twenty of the mounted police of the Dominion of Canada passed through the city of Seattle last July to enforce customs regulations of that Government in Alaska.

Mr. William Ogilvie, the well-known Canadian surveyor, and who had charge, in part, of the corps of engineers engaged in the "joint or coincident survey" hereinafter spoken of, is quoted as to the boundary line through "Portland Canal" as follows: "This, by the way, * * * is objected to by the Province of British Columbia, and with reason, for in strict conformity with the wording of the article of the treaty a northerly line from the southernmost point of Prince of Wales Island would never reach Portland Canal at all, but would go up the channel known as Behm Canal."

Provincial Premier Turner (Province of British Columbia), in a recently published interview, says: "From what I learned during my stay in England, it is plain to me that if something is not done immediatly this country [Canada] runs a great risk of losing forever a great and valuable block of territory that was stipulated as being part of British America at the time of the enactment of the British-Russian treaty of 1825. The Americans have quietly issued maps in which this territory, in reality belonging to Canada as much as historic Quebec, is represented as forming part of Alaska, and, sorry to say, some of our own map makers have fallen into the snare, and, taking it for granted that the American claim is a valid one, have 'corrected' Canadian maps accordingly."

The very latest official map of the Province of British Columbia, issued under governmental authority and purporting to be compiled under direction of Hon. G. B. Martin, chief commissioner of lands and works at Victoria, British Columbia, shows the boundary line as proceeding up through Behm Canal, and, further, places in British Columbia the heads of the most valuable bays and inlets and an area of valuable territory heretofore regarded as and tacitly conceded by Canada to be the possessions of the United States, a part of which has been the subject of recent special legislation by our Federal Government.

The committee has earnestly and diligently endeavored to ascertain upon what sound reasoning these pretensions are founded and in what manner the Dominion of Canada can logically establish its claim to this rich territory, as said claim is manifested by official maps and the foregoing assertions.

An exhaustive examination of the evidence that is material or relevant, which the committee has been able to obtain, leads to the conclusion that these claims, with the exception hereinafter mentioned, are founded on neither fact nor reason, and that the controversy, when once clearly understood, will be in a great measure stripped of its perplexities. The exception referred to is whether or not there exists a range of mountains "which extend in a direction parallel to the coast, from the fifty-sixth degree of north latitude to the point of intersection of the one hundred and forty-first degree of west longitude," within the 10 marine league limit.

To set forth in extenso the evidence which in the judgment of the committee would establish the conclusion that the Canadian claims are untenable would demand a report of too great length, and a reference to the same will be sufficient to invite the confidence of the Chamber in its reliability.

First. In the first place, the charts and maps of both Governments, for near a quarter of a century, show the boundary line is drawn thereon to follow the sinuosities of the coast, equidistant therefrom, beginning at the head of Portland Canal and reaching to Mount St. Elias; and that this line, so drawn, has been recognized by the civilized world from 1825 to about 1884, and has been so recognized by British Columbia on the official maps of that Government as late as the date last mentioned.

Second. That this line was so recognized at the time Alaska was purchased by the United States from Russia in 1867, and United States troops were soon thereafter stationed at Fort Tongass, at the mouth of Portland Canal, and United States customs officials maintained at said point as late as 1889, meeting with no protest from the Canadian Government or other powers of the world.

Third. That Behm Canal and Portland Canal were both well known at the time of the convention of 1825 between Great Britain and Russia, and that Portland Canal was so named by that eminent British navigator, Capt. George Vancouver, in 1793, and was one of the subjects of diplomatic correspondence between England and Russia for several years immediately preceding the convention of 1825.

Fourth. That for many years prior to the purchase of Alaska by the United States, that powerful English commercial institution, the Hudson Bay Fur Company, paid the Russian Government an annual stipend for the privilege of trading in the very inlets that the Dominion of Canada now claims; that the compact between that company and the first-named Government it is believed can be found among the Russian archives.

Fifth. That if written evidence of such a compact can not be found, there are now living witnesses who can testify that the Hudson Bay Company paid the annual compensation referred to as late as the year 1857, as the following letters from the Rev. William Duncan and the Indian secretary of the Metlakahtla Indians will show:

ON BOARD CITY OF TOPEKA, ALASKAN WATERS, May 3, 1895.

Before leaving home for a trip to Sitka I received a letter from Mr. Miner Bruce, the explorer, asking me to write you any particulars I might happen to know regarding the question of the boundary between Alaska and British Columbia. Most likely the little information I have on the subject is already known to you, but it can do no harm to write what I know.

First. In 1857 I was located at Fort Simpson, and was in constant daily intercourse with the officers of the Hudson Bay Company, who had a monopoly of the country at that time. From this intercourse I learned that all the country north of Portland Canal belonged to Russia, and for the privilege of trading with the Indians from that point, and as far as Chilcat, the Hudson Bay Company paid a rent to the Russian Government of 1,000 otter skins each year. It is not at all likely that a company of such proportions as the Hudson Bay Company would consent to pay rent for territory of which there was uncertainty as to ownership. That company would most assuredly be well acquainted with the maps which assigned the territory to Russia, or it would have never made the agreement with Russia which it did. Nor did those officers during all the years I was in daily intercourse with them ever hint at a doubt as to the boundary from which Russian claims started.

Second. I have known lawbreakers to escape to Tongass from justice, being, while there, out of the jurisdiction of British Columbia.

Third. When the United States purchased Alaska, a corps of soldiers was stationed at Tongass and continued there for years in undisputed control.

Fourth. On my migrating with over 800 Indians from British Columbia in 1887, we had to call at Fort Tongass and give an account of our belongings. I paid the customs officers over $1,000 to bring my goods into Alaska. The customs authorities resided at Tongass, just over the inlet called Portland Canal.

Yours, truly, WM. DUNCAN.

J. B. METCALFE, Esq., Seattle, Wash.

METLAKAHTLA, ALASKA, May 31, 1895.

DEAR SIR: Since the report reached us of the controversy which is going on between Canada and the United States concerning the boundary line between British Columbia and Alaska, we have met to discuss the matter.

The information which we have to offer on the subject is:

First. When we left our old home in British Columbia we were regarded as foreigners by the Canadian authorities.

Second. In the summer of 1887, when we migrated to Alaska, Fort Tongass, just over Portland Inlet, was a port of entry. We had to pay duty to a custom-house officer residing there on all dutiable articles we brought over to this country.

Third. We employed three small steamers to convey over our belongings, one of which the custom-house officer at Port Simpson tried to detain as coming from a foreign country. We had to receive our clearance papers at Port Simpson before coming over to Alaska.

Fourth. Having got over to Annette Island, the Canadian Indian agent at Metlakahtla, British Columbia, ceased to have any control over us, which would not have been the case (such was the animus of the man) if the boundary line had been doubtful.

We remain, truly yours,

THE PEOPLE OF METLAKAHTLA, ALASKA,
D. LEASK, Secretary.

J. B. METCALFE, Esq., Seattle, Wash.

Sixth. That the Rev. Mr. Duncan, having become engaged in a controversy with his religious superiors sent out to overlook his charge of the Metlakahtla Indians, appealed to the Congress of the United States for a haven for himself and his 800 Indians away from their control or molestation, and that by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891 (chapter 561, section 15, United States Statutes at Large, volume 26, page 1101), Annette Island was set aside for his use. The new Metlakahtla is now a thriving community, with churches and schools, and self-sustaining industries carried on by these Indians, and that Canada had not at that time announced the present claim or any claim to this island.

Seventh. That it can be shown that the process of the British Columbia courts were never attempted to be served on the north side of Portland Canal on offenders against British Columbia laws.

Eighth. That it is conceded by the press, and also officials of British Columbia, that some one has blundered and that the official maps of that province, recognized by Canada, have to be "corrected," and say that "the Dominion officials have followed, sheep like, in the track of the United States diplomatists. Luckily, their stupidity in lazily copying the blunder of the public servants of the United States did not legalize what is manifestly an error. It is not too late to correct the mistake that has been made." The utterance of Premier Turner is to the same effect, "The Canadians will have to repudiate some of their own maps."

The foregoing references are made to show that the facts therein set forth reasonably constitute a tacit admission by Canada of the proprietorship of the United States in the now contested territory, since during all the time mentioned the open and well-known possession thereof and the exercise of governmental control over the same by the United States has never been, until recently, assailed nor questioned.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE CONVENTION OF 1825.

The committee has heretofore alluded to what appears to be an illogical construction given to the terms of Article III and IV of the convention of 1825, which are identical with those of Article I of the convention of 1867, wherein the description of the boundary line is recited. A careful perusal of the description fixes the initial point at Cape Chacon, at the southernmost point of Prince of Wales Island. The first call of the description then reads, "The said line shall ascend to the north along the channel called Portland Channel, as far as the point of the continent where it strikes the fifty-sixth degree of north latitude."

The southernmost point of Prince of Wales Island is on the line of 54° 40′ north latitude, and the entrance of Portland Canal is due east from said point about 50 or 60 miles. The Canadian contention is that Behm Canal is meant, because you can only "ascend to the north" from the initial point through that channel. Literally this is true, but the construction disregards the object to which the line is carried by the words "shall ascend to the north along the channel called Portland Channel." The familiar doctrine that courses and distances will be controlled by monuments does not seem to have been taken into consideration.

Again, it is contended that Portland Canal is not intended, because Portland Canal does not "strike the fifty-sixth degree of north latitude," and that Behm Canal does, and was therefore intended. This interpretation is also unwarranted by the language used, for the plain reading shows that the line is the subject, and not the canal. In other words, the line "shall ascend to the north," etc., as far as the point of the continent where it, the line, strikes the fifty-sixth degree of north latitude.

The boundary line from this point northwesterly to Mount St. Elias, as shown by the official map of British Columbia, is arbitrarily drawn, and seems not only to hold in contempt the language of the description in Article IV, before mentioned, but takes no note of the physical facts. The language, it appears to the committee, can sustain no other interpretation than that "whenever the summit of the mountains which extend in a direction parallel to the coast * * * shall prove to be at a distance of more than 10 marine leagues from the ocean, * * * the limit * * * shall be formed by a line parallel to the windings of the coast, and which shall never exceed the distance of 10 marine leagues therefrom." How this line, which must follow the summit of the mountains which extend in a direction parallel to the coast, and where no mountains exist within the prescribed 10 marine leagues, must be parallel with the "windings of the coast," can, with uncontrolled license, sever the heads of the great bays and inlets, spring from shore to shore, and leap across the great arms of these inland waters, the committee has not yet been able to grasp.

To the words "ten marine leagues from the ocean" is also given the construction that this distance should be measured from the outlying islands. This can not be sustained, because the point where the line strikes the fifty-sixth degree of north latitude at the head of Portland Canal is about the prescribed distance, and it then follows the windings of the coast of the continent and not that of the islands.

The committee is persuaded that this entire interpretation can be safely overthrown and the contention of the United States established before any impartial tribunal. An examination of the diplomatic correspondence carried on between the distinguished representatives of the Russian and British Governments conclusively establishes the intention of both the high contracting parties as to this very line. This correspondence was carried on from the cities of St. Petersburg and London for the space of several years, and culminated in the convention of 1825. At the beginning of these communications the Russian chancellor directs the Russian ambassador at London as follows:

"In order not to cut the island of Prince of Wales, which, according to that arrangement, should rest with Russia, we would propose to take the southern frontier of our domain to 54° 40′ of latitude, and to make it abut on the continent at the Portland Canal, of which the embouchere into the ocean is off the island of Prince of Wales, and its origin is in the continent between the fifty-fifth and fifty-sixth degrees of latitude."

This proposition is practically maintained throughout the many negotiations which occurred, and is fairly admitted by the British plenipotentiary in his final communication to his Government at the time of the execution of said convention.

As to the disagreement upon the facts: If the reports in the press of British Columbia be true, it is strenuously contended that there exists a range of mountains within the 10 marine leagues limit, and it is stated that the main efforts of the Canadian engineers are directed to the establishment of that range. In this connection, the committee called upon Mr. Phillip A. Walker, one of the corps of engineers which has been engaged on the part of the United States in surveying the disputed territory, and he informed us a few days since that the result of their labors established, without doubt, that no range of mountains exists.

The output from the resources of Alaska since its purchase by the United States runs into the millions far in excess of its purchase price, and its commerce with the States is now great, and increasing yearly. The Alaskan trade with the city of Seattle in the past year has reached nearly a million dollars, and with the present increase of trade will double within the next year.

The committee respectfully submits the above as some of the results of its labors, and believes that no efforts should be spared by this chamber to bring to the aid of our Government all evidence which will enable it to establish our rights over the disputed territory.

The convention of 1892 between the United States of America and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland provided for the appointment of commissioners by the high contracting parties "with a view to the ascertainment of the facts and data necessary to the permanent delimitation of the said boundary line," etc. To secure such facts and data a coincident or joint survey of the territory adjacent to the boundary line was agreed upon, and the commissioners were to make a joint report to each of the two Governments upon such facts as they were able to agree upon, and to jointly or severally report to each Government such points as they were unable to agree upon. As soon as the reports shall have been received, then the high contracting parties further agree that "they will proceed to consider and establish the boundary line in question."

The committee learns through the press dispatches that the reports provided for by the above convention have been submitted to the respective Governments, and await further action, in pursuance of the terms of the convention of 1892 and the supplemental convention of 1894.

Sincerely hoping that the efforts of the committee may aid a peaceful and satisfactory solution of the controversy, this report is herewith respectfully submitted.

J. B. METCALFE,
Chairman of Committee.

Mr. SQUIRE. I trust that early action may be taken upon the joint resolution. I do not deem it necessary that it should be referred to any committee for action, but if it is thought best it may be referred.

Several SENATORS. Let it be referred.

Mr. SQUIRE. Very well. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

PROOF OF LOYALTY IN BOUNTY LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. GEORGE introduced a bill (S. 1340) to repeal in part and to limit section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill, and I desire to call the attention of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to what I am about to say.

During the last Congress a similar bill, a copy of which I hold in my hand, passed the House of Representatives. It was referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate and reported favorably without amendment July 16 of last year.

The object of the bill is to remove a bar now created by law and to enable soldiers of the United States who served in the Mexican war and are entitled to pensions to get them without making proof of loyalty as required by section 3480 of the Revised Statutes. The sole effect of the bill, which I have shown to the Senator from Massachusetts, is to allow men who served the United States in a military capacity, and who by law are entitled to bounty lands, except where they have forfeited them, under the statute to which I have referred, for want of loyalty to obtain them. I ask that the bill be read at length, and then I shall ask unanimous consent of the Senate that it may be considered and passed.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, so far, and no further, modified and repealed as to dispense with proof of loyalty during the late war of the rebellion as a prerequisite in any application for bounty land where the proof otherwise shows that the applicant is entitled thereto.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. Has the bill been considered by a committee?

Mr. GEORGE. It was passed by the other House during the last Congress, and referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate and reported favorably by that committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. At the present session?

Mr. GEORGE. At the last session. The bill is in the exact words in which it was reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate after it had passed the House of Representatives in the last Congress.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the Revised Statutes of the United States (in that respect following a previous statute) prohibit among other things the issuance of any bounty land warrants not only without full proof of loyalty, but proof that the claimants were in sentiment desirous of the suppression of the rebellion. The bill introduced by the Senator from Mississippi dispenses with that proof so far as it relates to bounty lands. In the nature of the case, as the bounty lands were all taken substantially before the war of 1860, the committee did not see any reason why the statute should be enforced against the few old soldiers who did not get their bounty lands at the time. The committee were unanimous in the last Congress, and I myself do not see any objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. It will give me pleasure to support any measure of reconciliation or conciliation which has the favor of both the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Mississippi at the same moment.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I do not suppose that there are a half dozen cases where old soldiers of the Mexican war will be the beneficiaries of this act enabling them to get these bounty lands. I presume there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUE OF BONDS.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill. The matter is so simple, so plain, and yet so important that the Senate, I think, will agree to pass the bill, and I make the request.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the issuance of interest-bearing bonds of the United States for any purpose whatever, without further authority of Congress, is hereby prohibited.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HILL. That bill will lead to some discussion. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is ready, I think, very soon to address the Senate upon the whole general financial question. I think it would be unwise to precipitate the discussion upon this particular measure. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to withhold his request for the present. Perhaps after the Senator from Ohio concludes his remarks it might be advisable to take up the bill. I merely make that suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BUTLER. There should be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the bill ought to go to the Committee on Finance, and I object to its consideration.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection to the request made by the Senator from New York except to say that this is a matter which needs no discussion because it is distinctly understood now. Every Senator knows now as well as he will know a year from now how he will vote on this question. It has been discussed ably, pro and con, as I see from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, for years. There are two distinct sets of opinion in this country as to this plain, simple bill. It is as plain as that two and two make four or do not make four. Therefore it needs no discussion. I have no remarks myself to make upon it unless there should be some remarks presented against it. It is perfectly plain. Everyone knows how he would vote now. This country is appalled with the fact that we are about to have a tremendous issue of bonds.

It is seriously questioned whether under the present law the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury have the power to issue bonds. The bill says simply that the bonds shall not be issued without the consent of Congress. Can any Senator object to referring this matter to Congress? Congress is the power invested by the Constitution with the control of our finances. Can any Senator object to Congress being consulted about so important a matter?

The bill requires no discussion, Mr. President. But, as the Senator from New York has made the request, I will let the bill go over until we can hear the Senator from Ohio, and then I shall ask unanimous consent for its consideration. I ask that the bill may lie on the table for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. GEAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2749) to temporarily increase the revenue to meet the expenses of the Government and provide against a deficiency; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2904) to maintain and protect the coin redemption fund, and to authorize the issue of certificates of indebtedness to meet temporary deficiencies of the revenue, the amendment proposing to provide for the issue of legal-tender Treasury notes of the United States to be exchanged for gold and bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. BURROWS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2749) to temporarily increase revenue to meet the expenses of Government and provide against a deficiency; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS' HOME REPORTS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, in addition to the number authorized by resolution adopted December 30, 1895, 600 copies of the report of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and 600 copies of the report of the assistant inspector-general of State Homes for the use of Congress, 200 copies of each report to be for the use of the Senate and 400 copies of each report for the use of the House of Representatives.

THE GOLD RESERVE.

Mr. ALLEN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate if the sum of $100,000,000, or any part thereof, has at any time since the establishment of the so-called gold reserve been actually segregated or set apart from the other currency or money in the Treasury Department, in gold coin or gold coin and gold certificates or either, for the redemption of the legal-tender notes and different forms of paper money of the Government, and when and by what act of Congress, giving the title of the act and the date of its approval, said so-called gold reserve was established, and if not established by act of Congress, state by what authority, if any, it was established.

PNEUMATIC DYNAMITE GUNS.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate what disposition has been made of the appropriation made in the act "making appropriations for the support of the Army," approved September 22, 1888, for pneumatic dynamite guns, whether any batteries have been established under said act at any of the ports of the United States, and whether it would be possible to establish such a battery at Fort Warren, Boston Harbor.

EQUIPMENT OF MONITORS.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to inform the Senate what it would cost to equip with guns and machinery and to put in suitable condition for purposes of harbor defense all monitors not now in commission or undergoing repairs.

ISLANDS OF ST. CROIX, ST. JOHN, AND ST. THOMAS.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be directed to inquire and report to the Senate whether the islands of St. Croix, St. John, and St. Thomas, in the West Indies, can be now purchased from the Danish Government, as provided by the treaty signed at Copenhagen in October, 1867, and whether if these islands are not purchased by the United States it is probable that they will be sold by the Danish Government to some other power.

MESSENGER FOR INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Be it resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to appoint a messenger for the Committee on Interstate Commerce, who shall be paid at the rate of $1,440 per annum, from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, until otherwise ordered.

GEN. NAPOLEON J. T. DANA.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill (S. 4) for the relief of Gen. Napoleon J. T. Dana has been introduced and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. A bill in precisely similar terms was passed in the last Congress. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF COIN OBLIGATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution, submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. BUTLER December 21, 1895, as follows:

Whereas it was the purpose of Congress to keep gold and silver coin at a parity by investing the Secretary of the Treasury with the discretion of paying the coin obligations of the Government as they mature in either metal: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed, when liquidating either the interest or principal of the Government's coin obligations, to make such payment in gold coin whenever the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold is less than the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver, and to continue to pay in such gold coin until the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold shall be equal to the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver, but when the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold shall be greater than the market value of 412½ grains of pure silver he shall pay said coin obligations as they mature in silver coin, and continue to pay the same in silver coin until the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver shall be equal to the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I will not ask for the present consideration of the resolution, although I believe if the resolution were passed and observed by the Secretary of the Treasury there would be no necessity for the issue of bonds, even from his standpoint. I believe it is all due to a disregard of the law as some of us understand it, and as a majority of the people, I think, understand it. But inasmuch as we have a bill now before the body to prohibit the further issue of bonds without the consent of Congress, and inasmuch as the Senator from Ohio wishes to speak today on the financial question, I ask that the resolution go over subject to call, without losing its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], coming over from a previous day.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the several resolutions introduced by me may lie over under the rule without prejudice, retaining their place.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Florida to ask that the several resolutions introduced by him lie on the table subject to his call, instead of having the Chair lay them before the Senate every morning. I hope he will adopt that course.

Mr. CALL. I suppose that is just what will be done. The resolutions will lie over without losing their place.

Mr. HARRIS. Under that order it is the duty of the Chair to lay the resolutions before the Senate every morning during the morning hour, when under the other order the resolutions lie on the table subject to his call.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to that course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands the order. The resolutions will lie on the table until called up by the Senator from Florida.

PROPOSED DUTY ON RAW SUGAR.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PERKINS December 31, 1895, as follows:

Whereas the conditions of soil and climate in the United States are so peculiarly favorable to the growth of the sugar beet and sugar cane that the manufacture of sugar should be the most important industry of the country; and

Whereas under the operation of the tariff law of 1890 the sugar industry was greatly encouraged and promoted, to the benefit not only of the persons directly interested, but of all of the people of the United States; and

Whereas the operations of said law were fast making the manufacture of sugar the most important industry of the country, causing vast tracts of land to be put under cultivation, and affording employment to many thousands of persons in field and manufactory; and

Whereas the effect of the changes made by the tariff law of 1894 has been to stop the development of this great industry, to retard its progress, to hamper it in every way, to discourage the planting of large tracts of land by reducing the price of raw material, to take away the means of livelihood from farmers and farm laborers, and to close the manufactories against the laborers who had been employed therein; and

Whereas without some further protection granted by Congress for a few years, or until the industry becomes solidly established, it will not be possible to long continue the cultivation of the sugar beet or even, perhaps, of the sugar cane, or to manufacture sugar in this country in competition with foreign farmers and manufacturers who employ cheaper labor than can be procured in the United States; and

Whereas there is now pending before the Finance Committee of the Senate a bill to increase the revenue by laying additional duties on a large number of articles, but not on sugar: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and it is hereby, instructed to report an amendment to said revenue bill providing for an additional duty on raw sugar equal to the proposed increase on other articles enumerated in the said bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution which I think will relieve it from any objection by Senators, and as thus amended I shall ask the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the resolution by striking out all after the preamble and inserting:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and it is hereby, requested to consider the advisability and expediency of reporting an amendment to said revenue bill, providing for an additional duty on articles embraced in Schedule E, relating to customs duty on sugar, equal to the proposed increase on other articles enumerated in said bill, or for a specific tax upon the same.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the amendment be adopted and that the resolution as amended, with its preamble, be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California?

Mr. BERRY. I move that the resolution, without adopting the amendment, be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MILLS. The resolution and amendment?

Mr. BERRY. I moved that the resolution and amendment be referred.

Mr. PERKINS. I have no objection, so that the subject-matter can be brought to the consideration of the Committee on Finance. There is no reason, in my opinion, why there should not be a duty levied upon sugar, and as there is an emergency for revenue, such a duty would bring in a revenue which would be less a burden upon our people than any article that is named in the schedule. If the Senator from Arkansas is willing, let the whole subject-matter be referred to the Committee on Finance without further discussion.

Mr. MILLS. That is right.

Mr. BERRY. That was my motion. I think there is a very great objection to an increase of revenue by a duty on sugar, or an increase of duty on any other article. I do not want to adopt the resolution and thereby commit the Senate to that course this morning. Therefore, I move that both the resolution and amendment be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance. The Senator from California can modify his resolution in the manner suggested.

THE GOLD RESERVE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN December 31, 1895, as follows:

Resolved, That by injurious legislation by the Fifty-third Congress the revenues of the Government were reduced below its necessary expenditure and the fund created by law for the redemption of United States notes has been invaded to supply such deficiencies of reserve; that such a misapplication of the resumption fund is of doubtful legality and greatly injurious to the public credit, and should be prevented by restoring said fund to the sum of not less than $100,000,000, in gold coin or bullion, to be segregated from all other funds, to be paid out only in the redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes; and such notes when redeemed to be reissued only in exchange for gold coin and bullion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I intend to do what I have rarely if ever done in the Senate, read a speech to this body. I have felt that on account of the importance of the subject-matter and the necessity of brevity it would be better for me to reduce my remarks to writing, and I have done so in order to save the time of the Senate more than for any other purpose.

The President, in his annual message to Congress, confined himself to two important subjects, one our foreign relations and the other the condition of our national finances. He followed it by another message on the application of the Monroe doctrine to the controversy between Great Britain and Venezuela.

While Congress has heartily, perhaps too hastily, but with entire unanimity, supported him in maintaining the interests and honor of our country in the field of diplomacy, it has not and will not approve his recommendations on the more important subject of our financial policy, and especially of our currency. He has mistaken the cause of our present financial condition in attributing it to the demand for gold for United States notes instead of to the deficiency of revenue caused by the legislation of the last Congress. He places the effect before the cause. He proposes as a remedy the conversion of the United States notes and the Treasury notes into interest-bearing bonds, thus increasing the interest-bearing debt nearly $500,000,000. He proposes a line of public policy that will produce a sharp contraction of our currency, add greatly to the burden of existing debts, and arrest the progress of almost every American industry which now competes with foreign productions.

The President is supported in these views by Mr. Carlisle, his able Secretary of the Treasury, in his report to Congress. It is with diffidence I undertake to controvert their opinions; but my convictions are so strong that they are in error that I hope the strength of the facts I will submit to the Senate will convince it that the true line of public policy is to supply the Government with ample means to meet current expenditures and to pay each year a portion of the public debt. The gold reserve provided for the redemption of United States notes can then be easily maintained without cost except the loss of interest on the gold in the Treasury, but with a saving of interest on United States notes and Treasury notes of five times the interest lost by the gold held in reserve. A vastly greater benefit than saving interest is secured to our people by a national paper currency at par with coin supported by the credit of the United States and redeemed on demand in coin at the Treasury in the principal city of the United States.

The only difficulty in the way of an easy maninteance of our notes at par with coin is the fact that during this Administration the revenues of the Government have not been sufficient to meet the expenditures authorized by Congress. If Congress had provided necessary revenue, or if the President and Mr. Carlisle had refused to expend appropriations not mandatory in form, but permissive, so as to confine expenditures within receipts, they would have had no difficulty with the reserve. This would have been a stalwart act in harmony with the President's character and plainly within his power. All appropriations which are not provided to carry into effect existing law are permissive, but not mandatory, and his refusal to expend money in excess of the revenues of the Government would not only be justified by public policy, but would have been heartily approved by the people of the United States. He knew as well as anyone that since the close of the civil war to the date of his inauguration the expenditures of the Government had been less than its receipts. I have here a table which shows the receipts and expenditures each year from 1866 to 1893.

Receipts and expenditures of the Government from July 1, 1865, to June 30, 1895.

* Excess of expenditures over receipts.

From this official statement it appears that each and every year during that long period there was a surplus, which was applied to the reduction of the public debt bearing interest. This debt amounted August 31, 1865, to $2,381,530,294. On the 1st of March, 1893, it was $585,034,260, thus showing a reduction of the interest-bearing debt of $1,796,496,034. The public faith was pledged to this reduction in our loan laws and by the act creating a sinking fund, and, though in some years we did not comply with the terms of the sinking fund, yet in other years we exceeded its requirements, and prior to this Administration the aggregate reduction of debt was greater than the law required. Now, for the first time since 1866, we have deficiencies of revenue. Since the 1st of March, 1893, to the 1st of December, 1895, the national debt has been increased $162,602,245. I insert an official table showing in detail the reduction of the public debt in periods of four years from August, 1865, to March 1, 1893, and its increase from that date to December 1, 1895.

The President, in his recent annual message, complains that the law of October 6, 1890, known as the McKinley Act, was "inefficient for the purposes of revenue." That law, though it largely reduced taxation by placing many articles on the free list and granted a bounty for the production of sugar, yet did not reduce revenues below expenditures, but provided a surplus of $37,239,762.57 June 30, 1891, and $9,914,453.66 June 30, 1892, and $2,341,674.29 on the 30th of June, 1893, when Mr. Cleveland was President and a Democratic majority in both Houses of Congress had been elected, all pledged to repeal the McKinley Act and to reduce duties. That the McKinley Act did not produce more revenue in 1893 and 1894 is not a matter of surprise. Any tariff law denounced by the party in power, with a promise to repeal it and to reduce duties, would prevent importations under the old law and thus lower the revenue. Early in December, 1893, at the first regular session of Congress during Mr. Cleveland's term, a bill was formulated, and as soon as practicable passed the House of Representatives.

That bill met the hearty approval of the President. If it had become a law as originally presented, the deficiency in revenue proved the House bill, added other duties and changed the scope of the measure. With these amendments it became a law. The President refused to sign it, expressing his opposition to the Senate amendments, and yet now supports it when deficiencies have been greatly increased, when the public debt is increasing, and doubts are expressed as to the ability of the Government to maintain its notes at par with coin. The President makes no mention in his message of these deficiencies; no mention of the issue of interest-bearing bonds to meet them. The Secretary of the Treasury is more frank in his statement. He reports a deficiency of $69,803,260.58 during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1894, and for the year ended June 30, 1895, $42,805,223.18, and for the six months prior to December 1, 1895, $17,613,539.24; in all, $130,221,023.

No complaint was made that the McKinley law "was inefficient for the purposes of revenue" when the Wilson bill was pending. The objection to the McKinley law was that it was a "protective tariff," and the Wilson bill was a "revenue tariff." I have a statement showing the receipts and expenditures under each law each month, the McKinley law from its passage to the election of Cleveland, and the Wilson law from its passage to December 1, 1895. During the twenty-five months of the McKinley law the average monthly surplus was $1,129,821. During the existence of the Wilson law the average monthly deficiency was $4,699,603. If the McKinley law was, in the opinion of the President, inefficient for revenue, he should have said of the Wilson law that it was bounteous in deficiencies.

I beg the attention of Senators to the statistics I have presented. They are authentic and official. During the first year of the Wilson law the agricultural imports, all of which are such as are produced in the United States, the most common products of our farms, were of the value of $107,342,522. During the last year of the McKinley law the imports of the same farm products were of the value of $51,414,844. So, under the Wilson law the imports of agricultural products, which we produce in the greatest abundance, were doubled in amount as compared with the amount imported under the McKinley law.

Notably, during the same time, the importation of two articles (that we can produce in the United States) under the Wilson law were wool, valued at $32,589,791, and hides, $24,623,239. Under the McKinley law wool valued at $6,299,934 and hides valued at $10,480,562 were imported. Importations of wool were increased under the Wilson law sixfold. It is no wonder that our sheep are being destroyed. The importation of hides under the present act increased two and one-half fold. The American farmer was thus deprived of his home market.

Other importations made during a year under the Wilson law of articles which we can readily produce in this country were valued at $263,684,513, while under the McKinley law the value of the same articles imported was $172,743,601.

The enormous importations under the Wilson law, for which we had to pay gold, necessarily diminished the exports of the United States. Our chief reliance in our foreign trade is to export our products, mainly agricultural, in sufficient quantity or more to pay for our imports, so that the balance of trade shall be in our favor. Under the Wilson law we exported in a year agricultural productions valued at $301,578,885, while during the last year of the McKinley law we exported similar productions valued at $371,125,299.

It will thus be seen that under the McKinley law we exported more and under the other act less, the difference amounting to about $70,000,000. Therefore, the balance of trade necessarily turned against us.

Mr. GEORGE. Which two years are compared?

Mr. SHERMAN. We compare the last year under the McKinley Act with the first year under the Wilson Act; they follow each other.

I could pursue the analysis of these two laws further, but I have said enough to explain the preference by the President of the Wilson bill. He believes in large importations at the lowest cost, without regard to the industries and labor of our countrymen, while I believe in a careful discrimination and the imposition of such duties on articles that compete with home productions as will diversify our employments and protect and foster impartially all industries, whether of the farm, the workshop, the mine, the forest, or the sea. I have not been satisfied with any tariff law made during my public life, though I have shared in framing many. I prefer a law that will impartially protect and encourage all home industries, and regard the McKinley law as infinitely better than the Wilson law, which I believe is the cause of all the evils which we now encounter by adverse balance of trade, by exportation of gold and derangement of our monetary system. The Wilson law has produced a deficiency in every hour and day that it has been on the statute book, while the McKinley law has always produced a surplus until after the incoming of this Administration, and if administered since that time by friendly agents would have furnished the Government all the revenue needed.

The deficiency of revenue was the primary cause of the demand for gold for United States notes. The gold hoarded for resumption purposes was not separated from the money received for current revenue, and this revenue being insufficient to meet expenses, the gold accumulated for redemption purposes was drawn upon to make good deficiencies. This created a doubt of the ability of the Government to maintain the parity of United States notes with coin, and led to their presentation for redemption in coin. The draft on the Treasury for coin during this Administration has been greater than the amount of deficiency of revenue during the same period. In every aspect in which the subject presents itself to my mind I come to no other conclusion than that the deficiency of revenue and the consequent encroachment upon the redemption fund is the cause of our present financial condition and that the only remedies are either a radical reduction of expenditures or an increase of taxation, and perhaps both. I do not believe that the condition requires a suspension of public works or a postponement of measures now in progress to strengthen the Army and Navy.

It is strange that the President in dealing with our financial condition should ignore entirely the pregnant and controlling fact that during his term of office thus far three issues of bonds have been made, amounting in the aggregate to $162,315,400, to meet current expenses in time of profound peace. He attributes all our financial difficulties to the continued circulation of United States notes and Treasury notes, debts bearing no interest, amounting to nearly $500,000,000. His statement of the origin and history of the United States notes is strongly tinged with prejudice, for though these notes were irredeemable for a time, they were convertible into bonds bearing interest payable in coin. They replaced notes issued by banks chartered by the several States.

They were the best possible substitute for coin, and, in connection with the bonds of the United States, they furnished the means by which alone the Army and Navy could have been sustained during the war. After the war was over the question of the retirement of United States notes was mooted, but no party or section of our country demanded a cancellation of these notes, but differed as to the amount to be retained in circulation. The Democratic party then demanded the largest amount named, while a new party called the "Greenback party," demanded an unlimited issue without any provision for their redemption in coin. The Republican party provided, by the resumption act of 1875, for the reduction of United States notes to the maximum of $300,000,000, and their redemption in coin on and after the 1st day of January, 1879.

This reduction was arrested by Congress when the amount of United States notes had been reduced to $346,681,016, when both Houses of Congress had Democratic majorities. Provision was made for the redemption of the United States notes by coin on demand and for their reissue, and authority was given to sell United States bonds for that purpose.

From the 1st day of January, 1879, to the election of Mr. Cleveland in November, 1892, there was no disturbance of the orderly receipt and exchange of gold and currency. The gold deposited in the Treasury in exchange for bonds in the summer and fall of 1878 amounted to $95,500,000. The ordinary current revenue in the Treasury conducted the vast operations of the Government without friction or trouble for nearly fourteen years. United States notes were at par with coin not only in every part of the United States, but in every country in the world. During all that long period United States notes were presented for redemption, but in amounts comparatively insignificant. I have here a table, prepared by the Treasury Department, by which it appears that during thirteen years, from the 1st of July, 1879, to the 1st of July, 1892, the redemption of United States notes in gold averaged less than $3,000,000 a year, while during the last three and one-half years the redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes exceeded $100,000,000 for each year. During the first thirteen years gold was exported in large quantities, but it was not drawn from the reserve; but during the past three and a half years $360,000,000 was drawn from the reserve and $305,000,000 exported. The balance, with the domestic supply of gold, was hoarded in the United States. I here insert a table showing the redemption of notes each year and the exports of gold.

The recent report of Secretary Carlisle shows that prior to 1891 the demand for coin for United States notes during a period of thirteen years, from July 1, 1879, to July 1, 1892, was only $43,310,896, while the receipts of gold for United States notes during the same period amounted to $160,000,000. Gold was deposited and any kind of paper money was demanded. The withdrawals from the Treasury from July 1, 1892, to December 1, 1895, have amounted to $360,266,512.

I will read what he says in his report:

> The withdrawals from the Treasury between July 1, 1879, and July 1, 1892, amounted to $43,310,896, while the gross exports during the same time amounted to $389,354,757, showing that $346,043,861 was supplied from sources outside of the Treasury—

He is speaking of gold—

> but the withdrawals from July 1, 1892, to December 1, 1895, have amounted to $360,266,512 and the gross exports have amounted to $305,617,419, from which it appears that the Government has furnished a sum equal to the whole export and $54,649,093 in addition. While the Government has thus been compelled during the last three and a half years not only to furnish gold from the Treasury for export to other countries, but also a large amount for the use of our people at home, its receipts of gold on account of customs and other taxes have been constantly diminishing since July 12, 1890, and have now entirely ceased.

I have a graphic map attached to the Secretary's report of 1894, which shows the amount of gold in the Treasury from 1879 to July 1, 1894. It steadily and almost continuously increased from $140,000,000 on the 1st of January, 1879, to $300,000,000 on the 1st of January, 1891. It then steadily decreased to the 1st of July, 1894, when it was reduced to $125,000,000, and, though replenished by the large sale of bonds, it was reduced December 31, 1895, to the sum of $64,204,651.

During the first term of Mr. Cleveland, when he was powerless to affect our currency and tariff policy, the Senate being Republican, the gold increased from $240,000,000 on the 1st of April, 1885, to $320,000,000 on the 1st of April, 1889. This gold came into the Treasury without cost in exchange for United States notes or gold certificates.

It is just to Mr. Carlisle to say that he attributes the withdrawal of gold to silver legislation, yet the Bland-Allison Act was in force from 1878 to 1890, when the accumulation of gold occurred, and the great body of gold was withdrawn after the act of July 14, 1890, was repealed. In 1880, while I was Secretary of the Treasury, the Government received over $60,000,000 of gold in exchange for silver certificates and United States notes; and yet this was done after the Bland-Allison Act was in force and the silver certificates had been issued under that act. United States notes and silver certificates were more convenient to purchase cotton and corn, and when maintained at parity with coin will always be preferred in large commercial transactions as well as in the current business of life.

In view of these official facts can any fair man doubt as to the cause of our financial condition? What other cause can be stated than that unwise legislation reduced our revenues below our expenditures, impaired confidence in our ability to maintain our currency at par, and compelled the Government to sell bonds provided for the redemption of United States notes in order to meet would have been much greater than now; but conservative Democratic Senators, with the aid of Republican Senators, greatly imdeficiencies? What other remedy is there for our financial difficulties except to borrow money on the best terms possible to pay current deficiencies and to provide additional revenue for future wants? To this extent and for these purposes I am willing to support this Administration, however much I may disagree with its general policy.

But the President is not satisfied. He demands the retirement and cancellation of all the United States notes and Treasury notes by the sale of bonds of the United States bearing interest. In his annual message he says:

In anticipation of impending trouble, I had, on the 28th day of January, 1895, addressed a communication to the Congress fully setting forth our difficulties and dangerous position, and earnestly recommending that authority be given the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds bearing a low rate of interest, payable by their terms in gold, for the purpose of maintaining a sufficient gold reserve, and—also for the redemption and cancellation of outstanding United States notes and the Treasury notes issued for the purchase of silver under the law of 1890. This recommendation did not, however, meet with legislative approval.

He might have said that it was rejected by both Houses of Congress, each containing a majority of his political friends. With the experience of fourteen years, the people of the United States, as well as their representatives, were almost unanimously in favor of a currency so easily maintained at par in coin by the promise of the United States to pay it in coin and by holding in the Treasury $100,000,000 gold coin for its redemption when presented. No one contemplated that this reserve would be used to pay current expenditures. In all our legislation since the war ample means were provided to meet current expenditures without trenching upon this reserve, and it was not encroached upon until Mr. Cleveland became President. Instead of demanding more revenue, he urged the reduction of duties and secured the passage of a law which reduced the revenue and forced the Treasury to encroach upon the redemption fund to meet current obligations. If this policy is adopted to compel the people of the United States to surrender the best paper currency they have ever enjoyed, it will fail. If revenue is wanted to meet current expenditures, it will be furnished, either by taxation or by borrowing, or by both; but to create deficiencies in order to compel the cancellation of United States notes by the issue of bonds will not, in the language of the President, "meet with legislative approval."

Mr. Cleveland in his message complains that when notes are presented for redemption and are redeemed the law requires that they—

Shall belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed, but they shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation.

The right to reissue is a necessary incident to a circulating note. The United States does what every bank does. By this provision it furnishes a note for circulation better than any other yet devised by mortal man.

He also says:

The Government was put in the anomalous situation of owing to the holders of its notes debts payable in gold on demand which could neither be retired by receiving such notes in discharge of obligations due the Government, nor canceled by actual payment in gold. It was forced to redeem without redemption and to pay without acquittance.

It seems to me that when the Government redeems its note the former holder of the note has no right to say whether it shall be reissued or not. The last sentence is without meaning. After the United States redeems its note the holder has nothing more to say, and when the United States pays out a note it always takes a receipt, which is an acquittance.

The President says that—

In April, 1893, for the first time since its establishment, this reserve amounted to less than $100,000,000, containing at that date only $97,011,330.

This significant statement made as to the earliest days of his Administration should have excited in the mind of the President an inquiry into the cause of the reduction of the reserve. The real reserve for redemption purposes was the proceeds of $95,500,000 bonds and no more. In addition to this reserve it is necessary to have on hand to meet current expenditures the sum of from twenty to forty million dollars. At certain periods a large balance is accumulated to pay the interest of the public debt and other large disbursements for the Army and Navy. Any excess should be at once applied to the reduction of the principal of the public debt. This line of public policy was continued from the 1st of January, 1879, to the 4th of March, 1893, including the first Administration of Mr. Cleveland. During this period many times more gold was deposited in the Treasury than was paid out. Large amounts of gold were deposited in the Treasury for gold certificates. The public debt was largely diminished. Not a shadow of doubt had been cast upon the ability of the Government to redeem its notes or to maintain its reserves. The minimum never fell below $100,000,000. I have here an official statement of the net gold in the Treasury each month to November, 1895.

The reserve would not have fallen below the minimum of $100,000,000 during and after 1893 but for the known policy of the President to reduce duties on imported goods, followed soon by the enactment of the tariff law now in force, resulting in a large reduction of revenue and in deficiencies that could only be paid out of the resumption fund.

It is but fair to state that the resumption act of 1875 did not segregate the resumption fund from the general balance, nor did it provide that notes redeemed should be held in place of the coin paid out. The then Secretary of the Treasury, in his annual report to Congress on the 6th of December, 1880, pointed out these defects in the resumption law. He said:

> The Secretary expresses the utmost confidence that without new legislation the entire amount of United States notes now authorized and outstanding can be easily maintained at par in coin, even if the present favorable financial condition should change; but in order to accomplish this the coin reserve must be kept unimpaired, except by such payments as may be made from it in redemption of notes. Notes redeemed should be temporarily held, in place of the coin paid out, especially if it appears that the call for coin is greater in amount than the coin coming in due course into the Treasury or the mints.

> It is suggested that Congress might define and set apart the coin reserve as a special fund for resumption purposes. The general available balance is now treated as such a fund; but as this balance may, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be unduly drawn upon for the purchase or payment of bonds, it would appear advisable that Congress prescribe the maximum and minimum of the fund.

This advice, given in 1880, was not needed, at least until the present Administration came into power, and now it is very sorely needed by them. Congress neglected to enact into law the measures proposed, but neither the Congress nor the Secretary of the Treasury anticipated that the time would come when this fund would be applied to pay current deficiencies in the revenue amounting in two and a half years to $162,000,000. Both the President and the Secretary say that no provision had been made by law for the happening of such deficiencies and that their only resort was the general fund in the Treasury, composed of the resumption fund and the general balance in the Treasury. But it is due to truth to say that in February, 1893, a short time before the close of the Fifty-second Congress, when Mr. Carlisle was a member of the Committee on Finance of the Senate and it was known that he was to be Secretary of the Treasury, and when the probabilities of a deficiency became apparent, that committee, upon my motion, with the approbation of Mr. Carlisle, reported an amendment to an appropriation bill as follows:

> To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide for and to maintain the redemption of United States notes according to the provisions of the act approved January 14, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," $50,000; and, at the discretion of the Secretary, he is authorized to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par in coin, either of the description of bonds authorized in said act, or bonds of the United States bearing not to exceed 3 per cent interest, payable semiannually and redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after five years from their date with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions provided in said act for the bonds therein authorized, to the extent necessary to carry said resumption act into full effect, and to use the proceeds thereof for the purposes provided in said act and none other.

This amendment is practically and substantially the bill now pending in the Senate. The amendment was adopted by the Senate. It went to the House of Representatives and was there referred, without a vote, to a committee of conference, which rejected it, and, as it was understood at the time, with the approval of Mr. Carlisle, who said it was unnecessary. No deficiency at that time existed, but it was manifest that the policy of the incoming Administration would create a deficiency. If that amendment had become a law the Secretary could easily have maintained the reserve and met deficiencies as they occurred by the proceeds of the bonds described in it.

Nor would deficiencies have occurred had not the President and both Houses of the Fifty-third Congress, then in political sympathy, united in passing a law reducing the revenue below expenditures for the first time since the close of the war, and compelled the executive authorities to apply a fund created for the redemption of United States notes to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government. This demonstrated fact is the source and fountain of all our present financial difficulties.

I do not wish to criticise the sales of bonds authorized by the resumption act to meet these deficiencies. Under the circumstances the Administration was justified in doing this, even to the impairment of the resumption fund, but it ought frankly to say that the cause of the invasion of the resumption fund was the deficiency of revenue created by faulty tariff legislation by the last Congress.

Such a deficiency is discreditable to the United States, with its vast wealth and resources. There is no difficulty in collecting by taxation all and more money than is necessary for its expenditures. It is humiliating to read in the newspapers of the day that our Government is negotiating for money from associated bankers, and, like a distressed debtor in view of bankruptcy, is offered by a friendly power its accumulated gold to relieve us from our supposed financial distress. The true remedy is to supply additional revenue by taxation in some form, and, until this can be effected, to borrow from the people of the United States enough money to cover past and future deficiencies. This done, gold will readily be exchanged for United States notes, as was done from January, 1879, to the election of Mr. Cleveland.

The two defects in existing law relating to redemption are mentioned by the President.

First. That the notes presented for redemption must be reissued. It seems from the newspapers that he has found the power to hold notes redeemed until they can be exchanged for coin, a discovery that he should have made sooner.

Second. That the resumption fund is a part of the general balance in the Treasury and may be applied to current expenditures.

Congress neglected to cure the defects pointed out by me as Secretary of the Treasury in December, 1880, but I hope will correct them now at the request of the President. It was not then anticipated that a deficiency of revenue would occur or that if it did occur the Government would use a fund specifically pledged for another purpose to meet current liabilities. Notes once redeemed should only be reissued for gold coin, and such reissues should be mandatory when coin is deposited in the Treasury. With this provision of law the scarcity of currency would create such a demand for it that coin would be freely deposited in exchange for the more portable and current notes of the United States.

The resumption fund should be segregated from all other moneys of the United States and paid out only in redemption of United States notes. With such provisions in the law the resumption fund could not be invaded to meet deficiencies in the revenue. They should be provided for by bonds or certificates of indebtedness of small denominations at a low rate of interest, which would be readily taken by the people through national banks, subtreasuries, and post-offices.

There seems to be a misapprehension of the difficulties of maintaining the redemption of United States notes. The nominal volume of these is $346,681,016. This is the reduced volume from the maximum outstanding during the civil war of $450,000,000. But this sum of $346,000,000 includes all the notes lost and destroyed by casualty since the first issue in 1862. The amount thus lost has been estimated from twenty to forty million dollars, reducing the notes outstanding to $320,000,000, or less. The national banks in certain large cities are required to keep on hand in lawful money of the United States an amount equal to at least 25 per cent of the aggregate amount of their notes in circulation and their deposits, and all other banking associations are required at all times to have on hand in lawful money of the United States an amount equal to at least 15 per cent of the aggregate amount of their notes in circulation and of their deposits. Under this law the national banks now hold for the redemption of their notes and the security of their deposits the sum of over $93,000,000 in lawful money almost exclusively in United States notes, and this money can not be withdrawn by any bank without reducing their notes in circulation and their deposits from four to six fold the amount of their withdrawal. The actual amount of United States notes now in circulation among the people can not exceed $227,000,000, and this is scattered among 65,000,000 people who cherish this money with confidence and faith as the best money they have ever had. With a provision in the law that notes redeemed with coin shall not be reissued except for coin the value and stability of our currency can never be endangered.

As the term "lawful money" includes gold coin there is a disposition by timid banks to convert their United States notes into coin, thus aiding in depleting the redemption reserve. This has been done to the extent of forty to fifty million dollars. This ought to be prevented by a provision of law that the bank reserve of lawful money shall be United States notes or Treasury notes only. The banks can redeem their notes with Treasury notes and United States notes, because the law expressly makes those notes a legal tender for that purpose. It is a bad sign when the banks seek to embarrass the Government in order to convert their greenbacks into gold, and I trust it will be discontinued. It has not gone further than the amount I have mentioned, which is about $40,000,000.

National banks are the creation and instruments of the Government and ought not to be allowed to discredit the money with which they can redeem their own notes, nor should the Government itself be permitted in any way to weaken the credit and confidence of the people in their paper money by using it for current expenses in excess of current revenues.

It is a practical fraud for the Government to use these notes for such purposes, and it never has been done except during this Administration. Every dollar thus taken is an impairment of the redemption fund. It is the misapplication of a fund specially created by law for another purpose. The effect is to destroy confidence in the credit and safety of our paper currency. It has led to the demand for gold coin for United States notes. I do not believe that has been the design of the executive branch of the Government, but that has been its effect and should be prevented by the immediate action of Congress. The resumption fund is the safeguard of the money of the people, and its use for any other purpose is a practical repudiation of the public faith.

The President complains that the notes are presented and paid, reissued, and paid again and again, making a continuous circuit. When did this circuit commence? The only answer is, when this Administration, supported by the last Congress, created a deficiency. Why does the circuit continue? It is because the deficiency continues. The Government resorts to the financial policy of Micawber. It gives its bonds and thinks the debt paid. But the circuit continues. The money received for current revenue is paid to cover deficiencies and is returned for gold, and then more bonds. The Secretary hopes that in two or three years there will be no deficiency. What is the ground for this hope? It is that a new Administration will provide more revenue, and then the circuit will be broken. Why not apply the remedy now?

If deficiencies occur Congress should immediately supply the means to meet them, and Congress, and not the Administration, must be the judge of the mode and manner of relief. The invasion and misapplication of the resumption fund is of infinitely greater injury to our people than the imposition of ten times the amount of taxation.

It is said that the law for their continued reissue is mandatory. That is not a fair construction of the law. The plain meaning of it is that the redemption of the notes shall not cause their cancellation. They are placed on the footing of bank notes. What solvent bank would reissue its notes when there was a run upon it? It would hold them until the demand ceased. The Government ought to exercise the same prudence. The President is of the opinion that the United States notes and Treasury notes should be retired and give place to bank notes. This is a question for Congress to decide. It is certainly not of that opinion now, nor was the last Congress of that opinion. Outside of a few large cities where banking facilities are abundant and business is conducted by checks and commercial paper, there is no desire for the retirement of national paper money. It is not right for the executive authorities to discredit this money by using it for current deficiencies. It was the use and dispersion of the redemption fund that created the circle of which he complains.

I believe that under existing law the aggregate sum of United States notes and Treasury notes issued under the act of 1890, amounting to about $460,000,000, can be easily maintained at par with coin if the two amendments I have mentioned are adopted by Congress. These notes are a legal tender for all debts, public or private. They are a debt of the United States without interest and without other material cost to the Government than the interest on the cost of the coin or bullion held in the Treasury to redeem them. They are preferred by the people to any other form of paper money that has been devised. They have all the sanctions of law and all the security that has been or can be given to our bonds. They have the pledge of the public faith that they will be redeemed in coin. The substitution of these notes for State-bank paper money was one of the greatest benefits that has resulted from the civil war. These notes have all the sanction, protection, and security that has been or can be given to our national-bank notes, with the added benefit that the large saving derived from them inures to the people of the United States instead of to the bankers.

Another reason, founded upon belief, is that the national banking system could not long endure if the United States notes were withdrawn. I will not on this occasion discuss this, nor any other of the numerous financial questions involved, such as the policy of requiring the duties on imports to be paid in gold. Imports are purchased with gold, are paid for in gold, and we may require gold for duties. The disposition of silver certificates is a much more serious problem. They are in express terms redeemable in silver dollars. Ought they not to be redeemed by silver dollars? While the silver dollars are maintained at par with gold it would seem that there was no injustice in paying the silver dollars for silver certificates. Then comes up the question of free coinage of silver, which I regard as the most dangerous policy.

All these are vital questions I do not wish to mingle with the pressing recommendation of the President in his last annual message "that authority be given the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds of the United States bearing a low rate of interest payable by their terms in gold for the purpose of maintaining a sufficient gold reserve and also for the redemption and cancellation of outstanding United States notes and the Treasury notes issued for the purchase of silver under the law of 1890." He recommends the exchange of gold interest-bearing bonds for the legal-tender notes of the United States, and the substitution of national-bank notes as our only currency. He is supported in this by large and influential classes of our fellow-citizens, most of them engaged in banking or classed as capitalists. Their arguments mainly rest upon the difficulties encountered by this Administration in maintaining a reserve in coin to redeem United States notes. They forget that during a period of fourteen years when the revenues of the Government exceeded expenditures and when the public debt was being reduced with unexampled rapidity there was no difficulty in maintaining our notes at par with coin. There is scarcely a doubt but that in all conditions of trade or finance, except the contingency of war, the whole mass of United States notes and Treasury notes now in circulation can be maintained at par with coin if it is supported by a reserve of gold coin or bullion or silver bullion at market value in due proportions equal to one-third or one-fourth of the amount of such notes.

A careful study of the systems of banking, currency, and coinage adopted by the principal nations of Europe convinces me that our system, when cured of a few defects developed by time, founded upon the bimetallic coinage of gold and silver maintained at par with each other, with free national banks established in every city and town of importance in the United States, issuing their notes secured beyond doubt by United States bonds or some equivalent security, redeemable on demand in United States notes, and the issue of an amount of United States notes and Treasury notes equal to the amount now outstanding, with provision for a ratable increase with the increase of population, always redeemable in coin and supported by an ample reserve of coin in the Treasury, not to be invaded by deficiencies of revenue, and separated by the subtreasury system from all connection with the receipts and expenditures of the Government—such a system would make our money current in commercial circles in every land and clime, better than the best that now exists in Europe, better than that of Great Britain, which now holds the purse string of the world.

It is not given to man to foresee with certainty the future; but if we may judge the future by the past, the growth and progress of our country will continue, the diversity and extent of our industries will expand, the vast plains of our broad territory will be teeming with population. The rapid growth of our cities, unexampled in the history of mankind, will continue. A century spans the life of this Republic; what will the next century do? I have seen great changes in my life, but those who come after us will see greater changes still. I may on some proper occasion hereafter give the reasons for my faith in our present financial system. All I ask now is that you will not disturb it with your deficiencies, you will not rob it of its safeguards, you will not return to the days of wildcat money, you will not lessen the savings of prudent labor or the accumulations of the rich. Time makes all things even. Let us give to the executive authorities ample means to meet the appropriations you have made, but let us strengthen rather than weaken our monetary system, which lies at the foundation of our prosperity and progress.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, this morning I introduced a bill and asked unanimous consent for its present consideration. At the request of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], I allowed it to pass over until after the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] had addressed the Senate upon the financial question.

The burden of the speech of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], to which the Senate has listened with so much attention, is to charge the responsibility for the present bad financial condition of this country upon the Democratic party. Of course there will be replies to this charge. The People's Party would like to reply; the Democratic party would like to reply; but if we go into a discussion of this question of responsibility now we may prolong the discussion, and while it is prolonged the President may issue more bonds without the consent of Congress. The people are not interested now so much about who is responsible for the wrongs already committed as they are interested in stopping the fresh wrong that the President is now about to commit. This is no time to be playing politics—to be sparring for party advantage. It is the time to act. If we are opposed to this issue of bonds that the President is about to make, let us be honest and say so.

The Democratic Senators should at this hour put patriotism above party instead of wasting time in replying to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] as to who is responsible for the country being bankrupt. They should rise to the duty of the hour and pass this bill which I have offered calling upon the President of the United States and his Secretary of the Treasury not to issue more bonds without the consent of Congress. Every Senator should vote for this resolution; we can pass it in an hour, and we ought to do it.

I say we can not afford to discuss other questions here for party advantage when we see in the morning papers that the President is about to issue $200,000,000 of interest-bearing bonds. We are informed that he will wait a day or two to hear from Congress. Let us not keep him waiting. Let us give him our opinion, and do it unanimously. Let us tell him not to issue any more bonds without the consent of Congress. Let us call upon him not to bankrupt this country with debt. Let us repeal the Republican law under which this Democratic President is about to commit another great wrong upon the people. Let us call upon him to preserve the credit of this country by not plunging it deeper in debt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 236) to provide for proper disposition of remains of deceased members of the Senate and House of Representatives who die at the capital during the sessions of Congress.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not want to talk about funerals to-day. I am trying to prevent a funeral. I am trying to keep the liberty and prosperity of the people from being murdered. If this policy of contracting the currency and piling up debt in times of peace is not stopped, we will all soon be forced to attend the funeral of our republican form of government. If Congress will pass this bill (to prohibit the further issue of bonds without the consent of Congress) then the President will be forced to refer this whole matter to Congress.

Mr. President, there are two things which it is highly important for this Congress to consider now, and which in my judgment are more important than the questions raised by the Senator from Ohio or any other questions at this time: First, shall there be more interest-bearing bonds issued? Second, if they are to be issued, how, in what manner, and at what price? Congress is the sole power that should decide these questions. The Constitution delegated this power solely to Congress, and we have no right or power, in my opinion, to delegate it to another branch of the Government. In my opinion Congress has not done so; but the President claims that he has the power under an old law, the resumption act of 1875. Therefore if this bill is not passed the President will use his own judgment and go into this big transaction without the advice or consent of Congress. I am not willing to trust the judgment of the President. His bad judgment in the last bond deal cost the people of this country $16,000,000, and besides brought shame and disgrace upon this country.

The bill which I have introduced covers the resolution submitted by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] requiring that the bonds, if sold at all, shall be sold at public sale after having been duly advertised. That is proper; but it does not go far enough. This whole matter should be in the hands of Congress. This is the effect of the bill which I offer. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

A bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

Be it enacted, etc., That the issuance of interest-bearing bonds of the United States, for any purpose whatever, without further authority of Congress, is hereby prohibited.

Mr. BUTLER. This bill is perfectly plain and simple. Everybody understands what it means. It needs no discussion. It should be passed at once, and every Senator should vote for it.

It is perfectly clear from the wording of the bill that it makes no difference what a man's opinion may be about where the responsibility lies for the issuance of bonds. If they are necessary, he can not oppose this bill. It makes no difference whether a man is in favor of bonds or opposed to bonds, he can not oppose this bill. The bill is purposely drawn so as not to raise a discussion of those questions to-day. It is important for this bill to pass at once. How can any Senator object to it? It simply provides that the President and the Secretary of the Treasury shall get the advice and consent of Congress before issuing any more bonds. If there is any necessity to issue bonds, can not Congress trust itself to act? Do Senators think that Congress is not as patriotic as the President? Is not the credit of the country as safe in the hands of Congress as in the hands of the President? If it is not the right and duty of Congress to decide when a bond issue is necessary, then Congress had better delegate all of its power to the President and go home and let Cleveland make all the other laws. If Congress sits still and allows the President to issue these bonds, then Congress is just as responsible for the wrong as the President himself. This is a dangerous power which Congress has permitted the Executive to exercise.

The distinguished senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] said last year on the floor of the Senate—I quote from memory—that so long as the present law, the resumption act of 1875, remained on the statute books the President and the Secretary of the Treasury could, in his opinion, continue to issue bonds "so long as water runs down hill, so long as time lasts, unless Congress should prohibit them from doing so." That is his interpretation of the law. And it is on this interpretation of the act of 1875 that the President is about to issue more bonds. If this interpretation of the law is correct—which I deny—then the law should be repealed at once. If the President has the power to issue bonds without limit, then it is the most dangerous power that was ever given to any one man. It gives him the power to mortgage the whole country to foreign shylocks without asking the consent of the people or of Congress. Shall Congress intrust such tremendous and dangerous power in the hands of any one man? Nearly every Senator on this floor has criticised the President's course in the last bond deal. I hope that no one would approve such a shameful transaction, except those who made money out of it.

The new bond deal that the President is about to make is as great a swindle as the former one. Will Congress sit still and see this country mortgaged to death and besides see millions of the people's money filched into private pockets? It is our duty to stop this scandalous wrong, and to stop it now.

Let us pass this bill, and then the whole question of issuing bonds will come up before Congress, where it belongs. Then, if Congress finds that there is a necessity to issue bonds (which I do not believe), it can provide regulations, limitations, and conditions like those proposed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] in his resolution, or such others as may be necessary to prevent scandal and save the people's money. Certainly there can be no objection to this. Under the rule of the Senate this bill can not be voted on to-day without unanimous consent. Our duty in this matter is so plain that there is no need of discussion. Mr. President, I ask for a vote on this bill now, and I hope that there will be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York now in the chair objects to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few remarks in reply to some statements made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] while he was on the floor a few moments ago.

I confess that I was much surprised to hear the Senator from Ohio state that the present embarrassed condition of the Treasury was due to the tariff law passed by the Fifty-third Congress, and which went into effect on the 28th day of August, 1894. Let us appeal to the facts and see whether it is the Fifty-third or the Fifty-first Congress which is responsible. The Fifty-first was a Republican and the Fifty-third a Democratic Congress. I meet his charge with a countercharge that the guilt attaches to the skirts of the Fifty-first Congress, and the Senator from Ohio has as large a share of that responsibility as any citizen of the United States. He was a member, and a very influential member, of the Committee on Finance of the Senate then, as he is now.

When the Democratic Administration went out of power on the 4th day of March, 1889, it turned over to the Republican Administration the following funds:

Agency account	$64,502,445.02
Net balance in the Treasury	165,846,471.10
Total	230,348,916.12

In addition to this it turned over to the Republican Administration $100,000,000 of gold belonging to the so-called reserve fund. In addition to this there was a fund held in trust for the redemption of national-bank notes. This last fund, amounting to $54,207,975.75, was covered into the Treasury during the administration of President Harrison. On the 1st day of March, 1893, the available funds in the Treasury, exclusive of the $100,000,000 gold reserve, was—

Agency account	$38,365,832.90
Net balance in the Treasury	24,084,742.28
Total	62,450,575.18

The remainder of that large sum had disappeared by the 1st of March, 1893. On that day the receipts for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1892, amounted to $259,430,096, and the expenditures to $259,620,556, showing a deficit of $190,460. That deficit did not result from the Fifty-third Congress. It was not then in being. The Wilson tariff was not then in existence. This was the legitimate product of the McKinley law, which went into effect October 1, 1890, and remained in force till the 28th of August, 1894. It is very strange for a Senator so distinguished and so well informed as the Senator from Ohio to rise in his place here and condemn the Wilson tariff for reducing the revenues so as to produce a deficit when he knows and every Senator knows that the falling of the revenues occurred under the McKinley law, and that law was enacted with the deliberate intention to reduce the revenues.

When I say that it was the deliberate intention of the supporters of that measure to get rid of the enormous revenues turned over to them in March, 1893, and reduce the incoming revenues, I speak by the card. I will read from the report of the distinguished author of the McKinley Act, one of the boldest of the protectionist leaders, and a gentleman who never shunned responsibility for the just results of his political actions. If he is to be the standard bearer of his party in the coming contest, I am sure he will stand upon the doctrine that it is the duty of Congress to prohibit importations in order to give increased prices to domestic producers. When he presented his bill to Congress it was not entitled "An act to raise revenue," but "An act to reduce revenue." Our bill was an act to reduce taxation. His object was to raise taxes and reduce revenues by prohibiting the importation of the articles from which the revenues were to be raised.

That was then and is now the policy of the Republican party. There are two ways of raising revenues from imports—one by high and the other by low rates of duty. A 50 per cent duty on $100,000,000 of imports will bring $50,000,000 of revenue, and 25 per cent duty on $200,000,000 of imports will bring the same revenue to the Treasury. The first is the Republican, the last the Democratic contention. The Republican policy is to exclude importations as far as it can be done and yet obtain enough revenues for Government expenditures. In their eagerness to restrict in 1890 they overshot the mark, embarrassed the Treasury, and now charge the results to us. Our dutiable imports for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1890, three months before the passage of the McKinley law, amounted to $507,571,764, and brought revenue to the Government amounting to $229,668,584.

On the 30th of June, 1894, two months before the Wilson tariff law went into effect, our dutiable imports amounted to $257,645,703, bringing revenue to the Government amounting to $131,818,530. The dutiable imports had fallen off $249,926,061, and the revenues $97,850,054. And all this was before the Wilson tariff bill was born, and yet, in the face of these official returns, the Democratic tariff bill is charged with the guilt that attaches to this "humiliating" spectacle. In 1889, when Mr. Cleveland turned over the administration to Mr. Harrison, the revenues exceeded expenditures by $87,761,080. On June 30, 1893, the excess was only $2,341,674, and the Republican arithmetic charges the loss to the Cleveland Administration and the Wilson tariff. The next year, still under the McKinley tariff, the expenditures exceeded the revenues by $69,803,260. And the country is told that this is all due to the Wilson tariff and the Cleveland Administration. On the 30th of June, 1895, with ten months of the Wilson law, the excess of expenditures over receipts was $42,805,223.

The revenues under the Wilson bill had reduced the deficit $26,998,037. And if the Supreme Court had not declared unconstitutional the provisions of the Wilson law which imposed the tax on income there would have been no deficit at the end of that year, and a large surplus at the end of the fiscal year 1896. The revenues derived from customs the first year of the Wilson law exceeded the revenues derived from customs under the McKinley law the year preceding by $20,340,087, and with these figures standing in the official reports of the Government, known to all, the Wilson bill is arraigned and accused of producing a deficit in the National Treasury. This "humiliating" spectacle, to use the adjective of the Senator from Ohio, was the product not of the Wilson but of the McKinley law. In the report of Mr. McKinley, when he presented his bill to the House, he says:

> The exact effect upon the revenues of the Government of the proposed bill is difficult of ascertainment. That there will be a substantial reduction, as we shall show, admits of no doubt. It is not believed that the increase of duties upon wools and woolen goods and upon glassware will have the effect of increasing the revenues. That would, of course, follow if the importations of the last fiscal year were hereafter to be maintained, which, however, is altogether improbable. The result will be that importations will be decreased, and therefore the amount of revenue collected from these sources will be diminished. In every case of increased duty, except that imposed upon tin plate (which does not go into effect until July 1, 1891) and upon linen fabrics, the effect will be to reduce, rather than enlarge, the revenues, because importations will fall off. It was the aim of the committee to fix the duties upon that class of manufactured goods and farm products which can be supplied at home, so as to discourage the use of like foreign goods and products and secure to our own people and our own producers the home market, believing that competition among ourselves will secure reasonable prices to consumers in the future, as it has invariably done in the past.

Here was the policy of restriction of importation and reduction of revenues boldly proclaimed by the author of the tariff act of October 1, 1890. The purpose declared was to raise prices to consumers, not revenue to the Treasury. The law executed its purpose effectually, cut off importation, cut down revenues, raised prices, lowered wages, and sent distress throughout all the branches of our national industry. We told them in the Senate and House that they would raise prices, but not revenue. And now when the Treasury has been emptied of more than two hundred millions of surplus money and a deficit in receipts is presented, we are held up to the public as responsible for the miserable condition of our finances. There was not a Democratic Senator or a Democratic Representative who did not vote against the passage of the law that produced these pernicious results.

In the Fiftieth Congress when a Democratic House sent to the Senate a bill "to reduce taxation," the Senate, then with a Republican majority, adopted a substitute increasing taxation for the purpose of reducing revenue. The Finance Committee then said that it was necessary "to reduce the national revenues, which are now excessive"; "that no valid reason could be given why we should, under existing circumstances, continue to collect annually a sum approximating $60,000,000 in excess of the amount required to administer the Government economically and to keep the pledges of public faith." They said that reducing rates would get more money; that the acts of July 14, 1870, May 1 and June 6, 1872, were acts reducing rates. It was estimated, they said, that the reduction of revenues would exceed $57,000,000, but they increased the revenues more than $8,000,000. It was not increase but decrease of revenue they wanted, and when they got the power, as they did in 1890, they reduced the revenues, convulsed the business of the country, bankrupted the Treasury, and now say to the country that Democrats did it.

I have shown from the official reports of the Government that a Democratic Administration inherited this "humiliating" condition from its Republican predecessor. I will now show that a Cabinet officer admitted it to the Senate and House before the Democratic Administration came into power. In February, 1893, Secretary Foster was flitting between the Senate and House asking Congress to come to his relief. The McKinley bill had filled the pockets of manufacturers, but it had emptied the vaults of the Treasury. He was begging for authority to sell bonds to raise revenues to supply the deficiency made by the McKinley law. The Senator from Ohio came to his relief and had an amendment authorizing him to sell bonds put into an appropriation bill. This was nearly two years before the Wilson law. Mr. Foster went before the Ways and Means Committee of the House with his grievance, and appealed to them for assistance. When before that committee Mr. TURNER of Georgia asked him this question:

> Taking into consideration all these conditions which you anticipate, what, in your judgment, would be a fair conjecture of the condition of the Treasury at the end of the next fiscal year?
> Secretary FOSTER. I should say the next fiscal year would show a deficit.

When asked by Mr. TURNER of Georgia for an approximate estimate he replied:

> I will only say this, that if I was to have the management of the Treasury I should insist upon an increase of revenue to the extent of $50,000,000.

Here was an anticipated deficit of the next year of fifty millions. Who did it? Certainly not the Wilson Act. It was not the Fifty-third Congress, not yet in existence, but the Fifty-first Congress that passed the McKinley Act. The Secretary was then appealing for authority to sell bonds to raise revenues to meet the current expenditures of the Government. It was then too late to wait for Congress to increase revenues by decreasing taxes. Money must be bo henrtorwed. The authority to sell bonds was placed in the appropriation bill, and the Secretary sent the following letter to the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing:

> TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
> Washington, D. C., February 20, 1893.
> SIR: You are hereby authorized and directed to prepare designs for the 3 per cent bonds provided in a Senate amendment to the sundry civil bill now pending. The denominations which should first receive attention are 100s and 1,000s of the coupon bonds, and 100s, 1,000s, and 10,000s of the registered bonds.
> This authority is given in advance of the enactment in view of pressing contingencies, and you are directed to hasten the preparation of the designs and plates in every possible manner.
> I inclose a memorandum for your guidance in preparing the script for the body of the bond.
> Respectfully, yours, CHARLES FOSTER, Secretary.
> The CHIEF OF THE BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Inclosed in the letter were the following words to be printed on the face of the bonds:

> WASHINGTON, April 1, 1893.
> This bond is issued in accordance with the provisions of section — of an act entitled "An act making appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1893, and is redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of April, A. D. 1898, in coin of the standard value of the United States on said March 3, 1893, with interest in such coin from the day of the date hereof at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, payable semiannually on the 1st day of October and April in each year.
> The principal and interest are exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

The Secretary was in trouble; the Treasury had taken an overdose of McKinleyism. He urged his engraver and printer "to hasten." There were "pressing contingencies." Who made these "pressing contingencies"? Who had emptied the Treasury? The McKinley law, that public indignation swept from the statute books in 1894 and which a Republican Congress is now trying to reenact. The Senator from Ohio disowns the petted child of his party and charges the tariff law of 1894 with all the ills of the three years preceding. There was no Wilson law in February, 1893, when he was crying to Congress:

> Help me, Cassius, or I sink!

The authority to sell bonds asked for by the Secretary was refused by the House, and in a few days Mr. Foster turned over the Treasury and the deficit to Mr. Carlisle to deal with as best he could. The receipts for the four months preceding the 1st day of March, 1893, he says in his report, were $4,094,021.38 less than the expenditures. This was the condition that confronted him on entering upon his trust. The deficiency estimated by Secretary Foster at $50,000,000 for 1894 turned out to be $69,803,260.58. In 1895, with ten months of the Wilson law, the deficit went down to $42,805,223.18. The revenues are now increasing under the Wilson law. The revenues from customs already exceed $83,000,000 for the first six months of this fiscal year, and are estimated at $172,000,000 by June 30. The deficit will be reduced by that time to $17,000,000, and by June 30, 1897, it will be converted into a surplus.

These are the plain facts, and in spite of them the Senator from Ohio, the Nestor of the Republican party, deliberately arraigns a Democratic Administration for bankrupting the Treasury. This is a strange performance. After the Democratic people in the Senate and House, in the press, on the stump, and everywhere predicted this result and did everything in their power to prevent it, they are now solemnly charged with having produced it! I was a member of the House of Representatives when the McKinley bill passed that body over the protest and vote of every Democrat in it. In opposing its passage I said then:

I want you to meet the people whom you have "not hesitated" to tax from 1 to 200 per cent on the necessaries of life. We will content ourselves by giving our votes against it, and when you leave this House and Senate with this enormous load of guilt upon your heads and appear before the great tribunal for trial may "the Lord have mercy on your souls."

I thought I could see that keeping out imports would increase taxation, increase prices of manufactures, reduce wages and Government revenues. I thought I could see in the near future a day of reckoning, and it came. When I saw sugar, that was bringing to the Treasury more than fifty millions of revenue, put on the free list, and the Treasury charged with bounties for sugar production amounting to many millions, I felt sure the collapse would come. It did come, and when the people spoke their words of condemnation they did not speak with bated breath.

Now, Mr. President, when the Treasury is working out of the disaster in which it was placed by the McKinley law, when our revenues are increasing, it is being proposed to reenact into law the same duties and produce again the disasters from which we are emerging by the aid of smaller rates and larger revenues.

It is astonishing to me to see Republican leaders now proposing an "emergency" bill in order to help the Treasury to obtain more money by the same means they employed in 1890 to prevent the Treasury from getting so much money. In 1890 they said there is too much revenue. We will raise duties, prohibit importation, and reduce revenues. Now they say there is not enough revenue. We must replenish the Treasury. How? By the same means we used in 1890 to reduce the revenues.

The Secretary does not ask for more revenues. The President does not recommend increase of revenues. Republican statesmen in both Houses were grievously disappointed when the message of the Executive omitted mention of it. The message was criticised all round because the President did not invite them to send him a McKinley tariff. So they had to get up an "emergency" bill, when there was no emergency. They are repeating the rôle of 1890. Every well-informed Senator and Member of the House knows that duties ranging from 50 to 150 per cent are not revenue duties. One of the most distinguished Secretaries of the Treasury we ever had held that a majority of articles were at the revenue point at 20 per cent; under the present tariff, duties on woolen goods are above the revenue point. Many of them are over 50 per cent. Yet it is proposed as an emergency measure to put a duty on wool and a compensatory duty on woolen goods to restrict their importation and get more money.

I hope this bill will not pass. I do not believe it can pass without the support of our Populist friends, and I do not believe it can obtain their support. But if it does pass, and the people shall be again plunged into the horrors entailed on them by the McKinley law, I suppose our Republican friends will say "the Wilson bill did it." I will not enter upon the discussion of the different rates and phases of the new tariff bill. I will wait till the "emergency" comes out of the committee and enters the arena of discussion. I may then have something to say of the new idea of increasing revenues by prohibiting imports.

SALE OF BONDS.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I wish to call up the resolution I introduced on Tuesday last.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from West Virginia permit me to ask what has become of the resolution of the Senator from Ohio?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has gone to the Calendar.

Mr. VEST. I ask that that resolution may lie on the table, in order that it may be called up again when the Senate reassembles, as I desire to speak upon the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. What was the suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. ELKINS. I wish to call up the resolution I introduced on Tuesday last.

Mr. FAULKNER. I understand that my colleague proposes to call up the resolution for the purpose of submitting some remarks.

Mr. ELKINS. And to try to pass it, if I can.

Mr. FAULKNER. I shall not object to the resolution being taken up for the purpose of remarks, but I would object to its being called up for action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the junior Senator from West Virginia accept the suggestion of his colleague?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes, sir; I will call it up for remarks just now——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And not for passage?

Mr. ELKINS. Hoping to pass it later on. I ask that the resolution be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from West Virginia, which will now be taken up only for the purpose of some remarks. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. ELKINS December 31, 1895, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that hereafter no bonds of the United States shall be sold at private sale or under private contract. And in case of any sale of bonds under existing laws, the same shall be made only after due advertisement of such sale and proposals invited, and then only to the highest bidder.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, inasmuch as there seems to be some misapprehension or some misunderstanding in the minds of Senators as to the import of this resolution, I will try to explain it. It does not raise any question as to the policy of selling bonds. It does not question the action of the President of the United States in proposing to sell bonds. The simple question raised by the resolution is one as to the plan or method of selling bonds and as to what is best for the Government under the circumstances.

It appears from the newspapers that the President is about to conclude a contract at private sale for the disposal of $100,000,000 of 4 per cent bonds of the United States. My contention is that a sale of Government bonds under a private contract will not result as beneficially to the Government as if they should be sold after due notice and advertisement to the highest bidder. In other words, I think it best and to the interest of the Government that the bonds be sold directly to the people rather than at private sale.

LAW AND POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT IN SELLING PUBLIC PROPERTY.

We have on the statute books of the United States a law in regard to the disposition of public property in charge of officers of the Government. It has been the policy of the Government uniformly that in the sale of public property notice should first be given of the time and place as well as the conditions of sale, and that it should be to the highest bidder. The House bill which is now pending before the Finance Committee meets this question pointedly, and provides that in any sale of bonds it shall be done by advertisement.

Here we have the expression of the House of Representatives by a large majority on this subject. If a public officer of the Government, a quartermaster or any other officer in charge of public property, can not sell even one hundred or one thousand dollars' worth of property without giving notice of the sale and inviting proposals, or if an officer can not buy without first giving notice and asking bids, why is it or how is it that the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury should be hedged around by some privilege lifting them out of this policy or general rule? Surely if an officer of the United States can not sell a small amount of property without public advertisement and due notice, why should the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury be permitted to sell $100,000,000 of public property without giving notice of the time and place of the sale and inviting bids from the people?

This, sir, is the question raised by the resolution. I contend that the uniform policy of the Government of the United States and the law as well in regard to subordinate officers should be carried out in case of a sale of bonds. In all matters of public concern officers of the Government from the President down should take the people into account and take them into their confidence, especially in a transaction as large as one involving $100,000,000.

WAR LOANS.

Now, Mr. President, we are not without precedent in the matter of floating Government bonds. We can go back to the period during and following the war for precedents. Nearly all the great loans of the Government in the time of its peril were popular loans. The great war loans were generally floated on a commission to bankers, and in most cases these commissions did not exceed 1½ per cent.

It is said the total amount of commissions paid for floating the war loans, aggregating more than two thousand five hundred millions, was about $5,500,000, while the profits to the syndicate that purchased the sixty-two millions of bonds in February, 1895, under private contract with the Secretary of the Treasury, is estimated to be greater than this vast sum. Of the 5-20 loan of 1862 five hundred and fourteen millions was placed with the people, and the great 7-30 loan of 1864–65, amounting to $829,992,500, was a popular loan. As I understand, the cost to the Government in the way of commissions of floating these two great loans with the people, amounting to more than one thousand three hundred millions, was about one-half of the estimated profits made by the syndicate on the purchase of the sixty-two millions they bought in February under private contract.

These loans were first advertised. They were floated on the basis of a commission, and not by selling outright to a syndicate under private contract. If the Government, when it was in peril, could make popular loans on the basis of 1¼ per cent commission why can we not do the same now in a time of profound peace?

The commissions paid for floating the great war loans were in most cases about 1¼ per cent, and in those times I remember very well that this was considered a fair commission. I insist now that $1,000,000 would have been ample commission for selling the $62,000,000 of bonds of the Government that were sold at the last sale.

Now, Mr. President, I am not here to say how much the syndicate made under the private contract entered into last February. The trouble is we do not know the facts, and that is one of the objections to such a contract. The people should know all the facts. We only have the rumors and what is said in the newspapers. We have estimates. We can figure if the syndicate got these bonds at 104½ and sold them at 117—it is simply a matter of arithmetic to determine what the profit was. I only give the result of figuring on this subject. According to the estimates, it took more money to float the last loan of $62,000,000 of bonds than it took to float all of the great war loans combined. Are Senators prepared to sit here and not protest? We are a part of this Government as well as the President, and if we do not protest, if we do not indicate that we have some ideas as to the method of selling our bonds, he can readily turn to the country and say, "Congress was in session, and nothing was said—no objection was made."

LAST BOND SALE UNDER PRIVATE CONTRACT NOT FAVORABLE TO THE GOVERNMENT.

But, Mr. President, we are not without experience altogether in this matter. We have had under the various Secretaries of the Treasury sales of bonds from time to time; and I think I can assert, without fear of contradiction, that generally they have been made to the people after due advertisement and notice. I remember when the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] was Secretary of the Treasury and had occasion to float some loans that he insisted and contended that for thirty days the people should have the right to subscribe before a syndicate could take the bonds even on a commission.

If the Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States are to be believed as to the condition of the Treasury, the Government is not in a position to lose $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 by selling bonds under private contract to a syndicate. The Government needs this money if it is in a state of bankruptcy, as charged. No transaction in the history of the Government invited such adverse criticisms and comments all over the country as the bond transaction in February, 1895. Americans were humiliated to see a syndicate virtually take possession of and enter into a contract to manage the finances of the Government for six months. The best opinion of people on this subject was that this Government should have made the profit that the syndicate made; and I hold now that the people would have bought bonds from the Government just as readily as they did from the syndicate, only the opportunity was not offered them.

I am told—I do not know how true it is—that this contemplated loan of $100,000,000 has been already oversubscribed in New York, and the syndicate is even now counting on 10 per cent profit that it will make off the Government. Are we as American Senators to sit here silently and not protest against a transaction of this kind?

It is said in the New York Tribune of January 1, which I will read from, that one banker coming from New York to Washington and returning with the privilege to float this loan charged $1,000,000 for getting the contract, besides the profit that he and his colleagues in the syndicate will make, which will be about $10,000,000. These vast sums are beyond the comprehension of the plain people of the United States. Where are we drifting if a few men, under a private contract with the President, can make millions and tens of millions in a few days? And it is easy to be made if the great Government of the United States, the richest in the world, stands behind them with its wealth and enormous credit.

On this subject of the profits of the syndicate, I do not want to insist on my own judgment in the premises, but I want to read from the New York World, the leading Democratic paper in the United States. It gives every item of profit and every item of expense, and it figures out that on the transaction that was made and concluded in February there was $8,000,000 profit, and on the transaction that is now under consideration, the sale of $100,000,000, there will be $12,000,000 profit. The total will be $21,168,757. The World also in its issue of to-day offers to take $1,000,000 of the new loan at, I think, 117, and we all know Mr. Pulitzer, its able editor and owner, is amply able to make good any offer he makes.

[From the New York World of January 1, 1895.]

I know it will be said this is newspaper talk; but will any Senator deny it? The allegation is made. How is anyone going to deny it any more than I can prove it? The trouble is, as I said before, this comes from the vicious system of allowing even so great a man, and so great an officer as the President of the United States, to make a private contract to float a great loan. I hold that it would be far better not to sell Government bonds to a syndicate under a private contract, even if the Government should not make as much as is would realize under advertisement at public sale. The people would then have the satisfaction of knowing just what we are doing, and how the business of the Government is being conducted.

Can any Senator or any citizen tell anything about these enormous profits? The people should be taken into the confidence of the Executive. Public servants have no right to conclude such great transactions without letting the people know all of the facts. It seems to me that it would have been wiser and safer for the President to have said, as Congress was in session, "Whbelievllie e there is a great emergency, a great crisis, approaching us, I am here only as the Executive. I send to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, for their approval at least, or for such action as they may think proper, this private contract that is about to be made and entered into with the bankers for the disposal of $62,000,000 of bonds."

This contract should never have been made when Congress was in session except with its approval. The President should have given all the facts and asked the representatives of the people to divide with him this great responsibility. In a Republic there should be nothing secret, nothing hidden from the people by their public servants.

Now, Mr. President, I mean no reflection upon the Executive, nor upon his able Secretary of the Treasury. I mean no harsh criticism. I respect both of these great officers and have the fullest confidence in the purity of their motives. I stand here as a Senator and a business man interested in this Government simply to say that the method they propose, in my judgment, is not the best one and not in the best interests of the Government of the United States. Nor have I any reflection to make against the syndicate. It is composed of great and powerful men, great bankers, men of the highest integrity, character, and responsibility, known throughout the world. They are business men and will make money in an honorable way whenever an opportunity is offered.

Mr. President, to show you how strong the credit of the Government is and how eagerly this loan is sought for, I read from the New York Advertiser:

It is said that the price to be paid for the bonds will net the Government about 3¾ per cent.

* * * * * * *

The all-important point about the new deal is that the syndicate does not guarantee to maintain the Treasury gold reserve as it did in the other agreement. This was the cardinal feature of the previous loan.

* * * * * * *

So eager were the banks and other larger financial institutions to get an allotment that before 3 o'clock, if report is to be believed, the first $100,000,000 was more than subscribed.

Another paper says the bonds were subscribed for three times over.

The same bonds sold day before yesterday at 117¼. Complaints have been made by the bankers from Boston, from Philadelphia, and from all the great cities that they did not have a chance to take part of the bonds. How is it that only a few bankers have this right and privilege? Now, if the banks will subscribe to take these bonds from a syndicate, why will they not take them from the Government? It may be said that time is necessary, that we must have this money to-morrow, or next day, or the next day.

Why did not the Executive and Secretary of the Treasury advertise this loan thirty days in advance? Why wait until this moment and then make a private contract and let the profits be, as estimated, ten or twelve million dollars?

There have been three sales of bonds under the Cleveland Administration. The first two were under advertisement, in which bids were invited from the public, and were 5 per cent ten-year bonds. The first sale was January 17, 1894, for fifty millions of bonds, which were sold for $58,660,000, or about 117. The next sale was in November, 1894, and consisted of fifty millions of bonds, which were subscribed for three times over, 297 bids being received. The amount realized netted the Government $58,538,530, or about 117. The third sale was made February 8, 1895, under private contract. No bids were asked. The bonds amounted to $62,315,400, and were 4 per cent thirty-year bonds, for which the Government received only $65,116,244.62, or about 104½.

The following summary shows the results of the three bond sales—two to the public under advertisement, and one under private contract to a syndicate:

Date of bond.	Rate of interest.	Period of bond.	Amount issued.	Amount realized.	Price.
Feb. 1, 1894 ..	5 per cent..	10 years....	$50,000,000	$58,660,917.63	117
Nov., 1894 ...	.....do.....	.....do.....	50,000,000	58,538,500.00	117
Feb. 1, 1895 ..	4 per cent..	30 years....	62,315,400	65,116,244.62	104½
Total....	----------	----------	162,315,400	182,315,662.25	--------

It will be noted that the bonds sold to the public under advertisement brought about 12½ per cent more than those sold under private contract to a syndicate.

On these bonds issued the country will be called upon to pay $124,778,480 in interest.

Mr. President, I protest that the credit of this Government is too good to turn over its finances to a syndicate and sell its bonds at a price which readily commands 10 per cent profit to the syndicate.

This Government is not bankrupt; the country is not bankrupt. There is some trouble in the Treasury, and as this is not a political question I am not here to give my reasons why I think there is an embarrassment in the Treasury. I have my views and my notions on the subject, but this is not the time to set forth my particular views. I simply say that there is some trouble, but there is no danger of this country going into bankruptcy. It was virtually in the hands of a receiver for about six months, I admit, and I congratulated myself as an American citizen when it passed out of the hands of the receiver. Now, I want to keep it out of the hands of receivers; I want no more syndicates to float loans under private contracts. I want the people to have a chance at the loans; it is their Government and it is their credit and their money that is at stake.

Mr. President, what are the debts of the various countries of the world? The debt of Great Britain is $3,350,000,000 in round numbers. Each citizen of that Empire owes $87.79. The debt of France is $4,446,000,000, and each citizen of that Republic owes $116.38. Germany's debt is $1,957,000,000, and each citizen of that Empire owes $23.61. The United States owes $915,000,000, and each of her citizens owes $14. Note this great difference. I state a fact well known, that according to the last census we are immeasurably the richest nation on the globe. The estimate, under the last census, shows our wealth to be $65,000,000,000. Now, how does it come, in view of these facts, that we are in such straits that we have to make private contracts with a syndicate to float our loans? I used to think that only third-rate powers, South American Republics, and the Turkish Empire, were obliged to call in the Rothschilds to administer upon their finances, but it has happened that my own Government, the richest in all the wide world, all at once had to call on the Rothschilds for help.

CLEVELAND'S WORDS AND CLEVELAND'S ACTS.

A distinguished statesman, when a candidate for the greatest office in the gift of the people, and after his triumphant election, used a great many expressions which are familiar to many of us, such as "public office is a public trust," "the communism of pelf," "the rich growing richer and the poor growing poorer," "the greed of avarice," "the rapacity of corporate power," "the oppression of labor by organized capital," going so far in his appeals to unjust passion and prejudice as to invoke the ugly memories of Homestead. I want to know where the force or aptness of these expressions come in, in the face of a private contract made by him when he got power by which millions were made by a few men in a short time.

Mr. President, there is no surer way, no matter how pure the motive, to plant the seeds of discontent, unrest, impatience, and suspicion among the people than private arrangements authorized by high officials by which a few persons get millions at the expense of the many. The safety of the Republic rests upon the respect, the affections, and the loyalty of the plain people for our Government and its Administration. Nothing should be done to take from them this respect or to forfeit their confidence.

Mr. SQUIRE. I desire to offer a resolution on this subject.

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to have a vote on the pending resolution.

Mr. HILL. The resolution is before the Senate merely to enable the Senator from West Virginia to make some remarks.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the resolution which the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] wishes to offer be read for information.

Mr. ELKINS. I did not understand the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. I simply said the resolution of the Senator from West Virginia is not before the Senate for action.

Mr. ELKINS. I move that the Senate take up the resolution for present consideration, and I will state the reason. I am afraid the contract will be entered into if we do not adopt the resolution.

Mr. SQUIRE. I ask that the resolution which I sent to the desk may be read.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask for a vote on the motion to take up the resolution.

Mr. HILL. In the first place, the Senator from West Virginia makes two or three motions at the same time. Will he now distinctly tell us what motion he makes? What is the motion before us?

Mr. ELKINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution. That is clear.

Mr. HILL. That is distinct and clear.

Mr. HOAR. The question is not debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. The motion is not debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable, but the Chair will hear the Senator from New York. The resolution offered by the Senator from West Virginia will again be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. ELKINS on the 31st ultimo, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that hereafter no bonds of the United States shall be sold at private sale or under private contract. And in case of any sale of bonds under existing laws, the same shall be made only after due advertisement of such sale and proposals invited, and then only to the highest bidder.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. ELKINS. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. HILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARTER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], who is absent on account of the illness of his sister. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SQUIRE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], who is absent.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when the name of Mr. VILAS was called). My colleague [Mr. VILAS] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. WETMORE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], who is absent, is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. With the consent of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], and both the Senator from Alabama and I can vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN. I vote "yea."

Mr. BRICE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], but by agreement I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHOUP. I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] that I transfer my pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], which will enable the Senator from Wisconsin and me to vote.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. Very well.

Mr. SHOUP. I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I vote "nay."

Mr. DUBOIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire whether the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], but I take the liberty of transferring my pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], leaving the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] paired with the Senator from Nevada. My vote may stand.

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 6; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. ELKINS.

Mr. HILL. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GALLINGER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HILL. Not quite yet, please. I will say to our friends upon the other side, who are anxious for a vote, that in due time a vote can be had upon this question, and the yeas and nays can be ordered if desired.

Mr. ELKINS. Let us have them now.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, as to the propriety of the adoption of the motion I have made, it strikes me there can be no question. I can see no reason why the Senate should vote to take up a resolution like this for the simple purpose of referring it, when at any time that motion can be made.

The Senate Finance Committee has this very subject before it. It has been engaged for at least a day in its consideration, and nothing has yet been brought forth. It was suggested this morning by the distinguished chairman of the committee that we might expect something on Tuesday next in regard to this very subject, because it is embraced in one of the very bills which the committee is considering. The Senate, in consideration of the fact thus told that the Finance Committee is to consider the subject, has agreed that when it adjourns to-day it will be to meet on Tuesday next, so that to-morrow and Monday the committee can take up and dispose of this question. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] says the matter is being actively considered; that every consideration it requires is being given to the subject. Every Senator here knew the situation, and knew it yesterday, so far as concerns the fact that the matter is being considered by the Finance Committee.

There is more, sir, than this single question involved in that bill. I do not think the Senate can take up and properly consider at this time this portion of the relief which is demanded. The question whether bonds shall be sold at public or private sale is one that should go with the determination of that bill, and should not be determined by piecemeal. This seems to me so clear that there ought not to be any question about it.

Mr. President, this is not even a bill for the purpose of determining whether bonds shall hereafter be sold at public or private sale. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] has not introduced such a bill. The resolution, if it is passed, will simply be like the Pope's bull against the comet; it will amount to nothing. It is simply an expression of the sense of the Senate. There is no sense in the resolution, in my judgment, and it would be nonsense upon the part of the Senate at this time and under the circumstances to proceed to pass the resolution.

What is it that is contemplated? Let me read the resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that hereafter no bonds of the United States shall be sold at private sale or under private contract. And in case of any sale of bonds under existing laws, the same shall be made only after due advertisement of such sale and proposals invited, and then only to the highest bidder.

It is not only not a joint resolution, but it is not even a concurrent resolution. It is merely an expression of the Senate alone.

I suppose the argument will be presented that the resolution, if passed, is expected to have some weight with the executive authorities of the Government. I do not know whether it will or will not have any weight, but I think it is uncalled for at this time, because you propose to express your sentiment upon a question when you have not yet enacted that sentiment into law. You propose to tie the hands of the executive authorities of the Government. Are they not embarrassed enough already? Are not their duties circumscribed enough already? Is there not enough difficulty pertaining to the financial question thus thrust upon the executive department of the Government without now putting this further restraint upon it?

Mr. President, let us see what is proposed here. It is proposed to prevent the executive authorities of the Government from exercising the powers which have been exercised by all such authorities of the Government since the conclusion of our war. Our friends upon the other side now have considerable criticism to make with respect to the propriety of selling bonds to syndicates. Under existing law the Secretary of the Treasury has a right to sell bonds at public or private sale. No one questions that right. That is the law, because there is no restrictive provision to the contrary, and under existing statutes that course can be pursued. In the absence of any express prohibitory legislation, and under this particular exigency of public affairs, it is proposed not to legislate, but that one House shall simply say that it is its sense that no bonds shall hereafter be issued except at public sale. I can not believe that Senators upon the other side who give a few moments' thought to the subject are prepared to vote for the resolution.

This denunciation of syndicates is rather a new thing. I have studied the records and speeches made by Senators years ago, when, back in 1877 and from that time on, contract after contract was made with syndicates, and I do not discover that then Senators, some of whom are now members of the Senate, put forth any criticism whatever. I have not time to analyze the particular contracts which have already been made. That is not the real question here involved. The question is simply whether we, by the passage of the pending resolution, shall express the sentiment that the present Secretary of the Treasury of the United States ought not to be vested with the powers which all other Secretaries of the Treasury have had upon the subject of the disposition of bonds.

We upon this side of the Chamber may differ among ourselves on the question of the free coinage of silver—a respectful and honest difference—but I think, sir, that we have nothing to gain, and I think it would be unbecoming, at least upon the Democratic side of this Chamber, for us to vote a want of confidence in the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury or the President of the United States upon this question. I merely say that the present executive authorities of the Treasury are entitled to the same rights that Republican Secretaries of the Treasury have always had under the Government. If you want to legislate, put it in the shape of a bill; but I see no occasion for it. I think the present situation is complicated enough. I think the times are critical enough without adding this new embarrassment to our authorities.

I have no special sympathies with the syndicates that are formed in the city of New York. It is not the first time, though, that similar syndicates have had contracts made with them, and we are yet to be pointed to a single denunciation made years ago by men who are now so flippant in their criticism of present syndicates. I hold in my hand the contract of June 9, 1877. Here are the parties to it:

This agreement entered into this 9th day of June, 1877, between the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of the first part, and Messrs. August Belmont & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, of London, England, and associates, and themselves; Messrs. Drexel, Morgan & Co., at New York, on behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co. of London, and themselves; Messrs. J. & W. Seligman & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. Seligman Bros., of London, and themselves; Messrs. Morton, Bliss & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. Morton, Rose & Co., of London, and themselves; and the First National Bank of the City of New York.

There is a familiar sound to the words "the First National Bank of the City of New York."

Mr. ELKINS. Will the Senator from New York allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. ELKINS. That contract was entered into after thirty days' notice had been given.

Mr. HILL. The contract from which I have quoted?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL. I am not speaking of notice. I am speaking of the fact that there was a syndicate, and that the men who composed it——

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from New York will find that there was an express stipulation in that contract that during thirty days the bonds should be offered to the people of the United States, and, thank fortune, the people of the United States subscribed for nearly all that it was desired to issue. There is a clause in the contract—I am not quite sure, but I think it is near the end—requiring the syndicate which proposed to take the loan to offer the bonds at par for thirty days at public subscription, which was done all over the country.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator from Ohio mean to say, with reference to the particular contract from which I have read, that in fact the syndicate did not take the bonds?

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the date of the contract?

Mr. HILL. June 9, 1877.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Senator from New York will see that there is an express stipulation in the contract that for thirty days the bonds should be offered at par.

Mr. HILL. That is not my question.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh.

Mr. HILL. The question is, whether in fact the syndicate did not take the bonds.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; they did not take the bonds, for the people took them before the thirty days expired.

Mr. HILL. I know that those who desire to secure bonds—syndicates—sometimes put the people forward and have the bonds taken in their names. I recollect a bond sale in the city of New York, where the agents of bankers, their clerks, servants, and others, took their places in the line for the very purpose of taking what is called a popular loan. They called it a popular loan, but, in truth, it was taken by the bankers themselves. I venture the assertion that within a very short period after this date these very same bonds largely found their places in the pockets of the syndicate.

I know it is said that a "popular" loan is popular. I wish, sir, it were possible for this Government to float its bonds through what is known as a popular loan. I wish it could be done; I should prefer it. But I am willing to leave this question to the determination of the officials whom we have selected to transact the financial business of our Government. I am not willing to set myself up as a judge and to say that in this critical period of our history it is wise or just for us to hamper and restrict them.

Who knows, except on chimerical conjecture, whether the bonds would be taken at what would be regarded as a reasonable rate of interest? I know Senators say it can be done. That is easy to say. We around this circle have not the gold. That is very certain. Who knows whether the people have gold stowed away? It is gold which we must have for the bonds. That is conceded. It is said that undoubtedly the people have money in the savings banks; undoubtedly the people have money stored away; that they have many Treasury notes and many United States notes stored away. I have no doubt a popular loan would appeal to them. But what would be the practical effect of it? I wish it were otherwise, but I fear the practical effect of a popular loan would be that the people who desire to invest in the bonds would get the greenbacks from their savings banks, take them to the subtreasury in the city of New York, and for the purpose of purchasing the bonds procure from the Government the very gold that is now needed in the Treasury. It has been suggested, on the other hand, that it is usual in contracts with bankers or a syndicate to provide that they shall not take the gold out of the Treasury of the United States. That is one of the express provisions.

These are the facts that put difficulties in the way. Senators may understand it differently. Senators may say, "Oh! it is an easy thing to float this great Government's bonds." It may be so. With the exception of one or two Senators, we have no one here with practical experience upon this question. I am willing to trust the present Secretary of the Treasury upon this particular point. I think we can afford to give him the same authority that other Secretaries of the Treasury have had for years.

Here is the contract of April 11, 1878:

This agreement, entered into this 11th day of April, 1878, between the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, of the first part, and Messrs. August Belmont & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, of London, England, and associates, and themselves; Messrs. Drexel, Morgan & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., of London, and themselves; Messrs. J. & W. Seligman & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. Seligman Bros., of London, and themselves; Messrs. Morton, Bliss & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. Morton, Rose & Co., of London, and themselves; and the First National Bank of the City of New York.

Mr. TURPIE. I wish to ask the Senator from New York who was the Secretary of the Treasury at that time?

Mr. HILL. Everybody knows, I suppose, that it was the distinguished Senator from Ohio, the Hon. JOHN SHERMAN. And I have not heard in his very able speech to-day, which I listened to with great attention, as I always listen to the utterances that come from him, a single word of criticism of the Secretary of the Treasury upon the particular contracts that have been made. The Senator differs with the President and the Secretary of the Treasury upon other questions, and he frankly stated those differences to us. They are questions about which honest men may well differ. But I have not heard from him any word of criticism in this respect, and I am loath to believe that when the time comes he will propose by his vote to cripple the present Administration, either by the adoption of the pending resolution without sense or by the passage of a bill. I think that in his generosity he will say: "We can trust these officials of the Government to do what is right upon the subject."

I have hastily glanced over the contract of April 11, 1878, and I do not discover the provision to which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] referred. I asked the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], who is a practical man, to go through the contract and see whether there is any provision of the kind which compels the syndicate to offer the bonds to the public.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from New York is now speaking of another contract, made a year after the one to which I referred. The first contract was of the date of June 9, 1877.

Mr. HILL. Oh, yes; there are lots of such contracts here, all made with the same "favored" parties, as has been stated by Senators upon this floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. When I answered the Senator from New York I spoke with reference to the contract of 1877.

Mr. HILL. I will turn to that contract.

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that the contract of 1878, which preceded resumption, provided for what are called the ten-dollar certificates, which were sold to the people to the extent of forty or fifty million dollars. I have sent for the book and will furnish the Senator with the statement.

Mr. HILL. The size of the bond does not make any difference; that is not the question. It is not the question which is under discussion here. The question discussed here is whether there was a syndicate and whether that syndicate had substantially the complete disposition of those bonds. The question is, whether the Republicans, having by an "unholy alliance" obtained control of the body, will now attempt to hinder, embarrass, and restrict the Secretary of the Treasury in the disposition of bonds. I think it would be an unwise step. I do not believe the people would approve of it. I am inclined to think that the people believe the bonds should first be offered to the general public. I have already said that I should prefer to have that course pursued. But I do not know the dangers, I do not know the risks, I am not so fully acquainted with the precise situation as are the officials of the Government.

I know of no reason why Mr. Carlisle should seek to do favors for these men in New York. Who are they? Who is this man Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, of New York? He is a man who is a liberal contributor to the Republican cause; he is a man in that city who in every Presidential election comes to the front with the sinews of war to keep the Republican party in power. Is it to be said, is it to be whispered, is it to be intimated even, that the President and the Secretary of the Treasury are anxious to do him a favor?

I should say, in justice to Mr. Morgan, having such political opinions as he may, that it was substantially through him and these same men that the great war loans of the Government were carried. These are the men on whom we relied in the "times that tried men's souls," when the war for the Union was in progress, but now, because they and some of their descendants, although, so far as I am aware, Mr. Belmont has nothing to do with the proposed loan, if there is to be one, propose to take this loan, criticism is passed upon them.

I do not speak for the syndicate. I do not know who, with the exception of Mr. Morgan, compose it, and I know but little upon the subject; but I do state here that I do not believe there has been a contract made with or a promise given to any of these gentlemen on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury. I know it is said in the newspapers—and the newspapers are ordinarily reliable—that contracts are about to be made. Yet I discovered only yesterday that it was stated by Mr. Morgan in the public prints that he had no assurance that the Government was going to make a loan; that he had no contract with it. Of course, some preparation is necessary. Or is it so easy to raise fifty or a hundred million dollars that all you have to do is to step over into Wall street and ask for it? Does it not require careful preparation? Does it not require hoarding of funds? Does it not require able financiering? I think it does.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE] has now read the contract more carefully than I have had the opportunity to do, because I did not intend to discuss this question to-day, although I had the book before me expecting to discuss it when the bill finally came before the Senate properly reported. He informs me that there is nothing about certificates there; that it is a plain, simple contract with the syndicate, nothing more and nothing less, in which the Government gives them a commission on the sale of the bonds. The contract prevents the Government from selling any other bonds to other parties during its pendency.

I do not point to that contract—and the Senator from Ohio, of course, understands me perfectly well—for the purpose of intimating that there is anything wrong in it. On the contrary, I believe that it was, in all probability, for the best interests of the Government. I should have resisted then, if I had been a member of this Senate, as I resist now, any restriction upon the hands of a Republican Secretary of the Treasury, because, however I may differ with the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], I respect his financial judgment in most matters, and I certainly believe that he would not make a contract which he did not think was for the best interests of his country. I simply refer to these contracts; and there are more of them here—plenty of them. Here is one of January 1, 1879, between the same parties. The contracts are always with the same parties. Why?

We hear a blast from the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], and he asks, why can not the people have something to say about these bonds? How many bonds, for which gold would be paid, does the Senator from West Virginia think would be taken by people in his State? Not many, Mr. President. If the loan were confined to such States gold bonds could not be floated, and no one knows it better than does the distinguished Senator from West Virginia. You must make the contract for gold with the people who either have it or can secure it.

Those are the men who in those days controlled the sale of bonds. They are the same men—every one of them, with the exception of August Belmont—prominent, active, influential, contributing Republicans, including the far-famed First National Bank of the City of New York. I speak of these matters for the purpose of showing that there is no reason for this squeamishness, this undue sensitiveness about bonds being floated by a syndicate, as though it were something new and unprecedented in the history of this Government.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the peculiarity about the First National Bank of New York, to which the Senator from New York refers?

Mr. HILL. Has not my friend read—I know he has—the report, I think it was of some investigating committee made years ago, in which it was claimed that undue favoritism was extended to the First National Bank of the City of New York, for which it was said they were liberal contributors to Republican campaign funds? But I am not going into the details of that matter.

Mr. ALLEN. Let us have them.

Mr. HILL. I prefer not to be drawn into it. It is not necessary to discuss that matter now.

These names are very familiar to the country—Mr. Seligman, Governor Morton, Morgan & Co. All of those gentlemen are prominent, active men in Republican politics. This is the syndicate which in those days had substantial control and disposition of issues of bonds and of securing the large amounts of gold necessary.

Mr. ELKINS. Will the Senator from New York allow me to interrupt him for just a moment?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. ELKINS. I want to do justice to the First National Bank of New York. I deny that its officers or directors are liberal contributors to the Republican campaign fund, and I deny that they are Republicans. One of them is a Democrat, one is an Independent, and one is a Republican. There are no better men in the country than they are.

Mr. HILL. They are first-class men.

Mr. ELKINS. If they have an opportunity to make money they will make it whether in a syndicate or out of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have the book now——

Mr. HILL. One Senator at a time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have the book now containing the contract of June 9, 1877, to which the Senator from New York referred, and here is the express provision.

Mr. HILL. To which provision does the Senator from Ohio refer?

Mr. SHERMAN. It will be remembered that the bonds were to be sold by the syndicate at one-half of 1 per cent commission, and no more. The syndicate were to stand all the expense of the loan—the printing of the bonds, transportation, etc. Besides that, the contract contains, in the eighth clause, the stipulation which I shall read. I quote from page 62 of the volume:

> Eighth. It is also agreed that the parties of the second part shall offer to the people of the United States, at par and accrued interest in coin, the 4 per cent registered consols and 4 per cent coupon consols of the denominations of $50 and $100 embraced in this contract for a period of thirty days from the public notice of such subscriptions and in such cities and upon such notice as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe prior to the opening of the lists, and, further, to offer to the subscribers the option of paying in installments extending through three months.

That was the stipulation. It was a contract made with the syndicate, by which they were to sell $50,000,000 of bonds. They were to have one-half of 1 per cent in the way of commission, and it was provided that they should pay all of the expenses, which amounted to a considerable sum. This proposition was submitted to the people, and the great body of the $50,000,000 of bonds was subscribed for by them under the eighth clause of the contract. Has the Senator from New York a copy of the book I hold in my hand?

Mr. HILL. I have it before me.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. HILL. The Senator has pointed to a provision in the first contract to which I called attention.

Mr. SHERMAN. Give me the date of the next contract, and I will turn to it.

Mr. HILL. I have before me now the contract of January 1, 1879.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was after the resumption of specie payments. I will state what everybody knows—it is a matter of public notoriety—that as a part of the law under which those bonds were sold there was provision made for the sale of the ten-dollar certificates, in the expectation that they would be bought by people all over the country and converted into bonds of a higher rate if they chose. The whole issue was taken with great rapidity by the populace. People formed in long lines at every place where those bonds could be purchased.

Mr. HILL. That is an instance of popular demonstration to which I alluded—bankers' clerks, presidents' clerks, directors' clerks, and their men.

Mr. SHERMAN. Each person could get only $100 worth at one payment.

Mr. HILL. That is very true. That is the reason they crowded the sidewalks. That was a farce as a popular loan.

April 11, 1878, is another one to which I referred. The one of January 1, 1879, seems to be a plain contract with the syndicate. Does the Senator from Ohio mean to say that he at no time made a contract with the syndicate in which the syndicate did not absolutely take the bonds?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do say most emphatically that the large portion of the bonds at every sale were taken by the popular subscription provided for in the contract.

Mr. HILL. Then the bonds must have been taken outside of the terms of the contract, and the subscriptions must have been given by the bankers themselves. Of course if bonds are sold to bankers and they desire to sublet them and sell them by piecemeal to the people, there is nothing to prevent them from doing it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Instead of that being done——

Mr. HILL. But the point I make is that there is nothing in the subsequent contracts—and there were other contracts—which requires any such thing to be done.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that the provision which I have read is a part of the contract with the syndicate. It is embodied in the contract with the syndicate as one of its clauses.

Mr. HILL. In the contract of 1877, not afterwards.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not looked at the contracts subsequent to that time.

Mr. HILL. It is not in the contracts made afterwards.

There are more of these contracts scattered all through this volume. The finances were conducted ably and intelligently by the distinguished Senator from Ohio. I concede that. He knows, and the Senate knows, and the country knows that I am not here casting any reflection upon him. I know there was some criticism in the newspapers at the time. There was not very much, but there was some. I know it was said that the members of this syndicate were favorites of the Secretary of the Treasury. I know such charges were echoed throughout the country in the public prints and on the stump. Such things are incident to political contests in this country; they are incident to the disposition of millions of dollars of bonds. Of course every banker can not have his supply of the bonds.

In the first place, there have to be some parties who are upon the ground floor, if I may use the expression. There must be, first, the original members of the syndicate, some parties who go outside and induce subscriptions by other bankers. They are incident to the formation of every syndicate. The question for the Secretary of the Treasury to determine is merely, will this syndicate furnish the gold promptly, as agreed; and, secondly, will the syndicate take the bonds at a reasonable rate of interest and pay a certain premium? What disposition they make of the bonds afterwards to other bankers is of no consequence.

I do not know at what rate the proposed bonds can be floated. I can see no reason why the present officials of the Government should especially cater to the wishes of these New York bankers. I know of no relations between them which would justify the suspicion that there is anything wrong. On what ground can it be said that they have made an unjust or unfair contract? Sir, read the words of the President of the United States in his recent annual message. Differ with him as we may upon questions of interparty policy, differ as you may with him upon the question of the tariff, yet you must respect his courage; you must respect, I think, his good judgment, when he assumes in his message the responsibility for the sale of the bonds made in February last. He has given you in full in that message the reasons why he thinks it saved the credit of the Government. He assumes the responsibility. He is willing to endeavor to save the credit of this Government again if it shall be necessary so to do.

Mr. President, what is the play that is going on? The President sent in his message some ten days ago and over. There has been some necessary delay, of course, by reason of the reorganization of the committees. It was said here this morning that every Senator knows how he wants to vote upon this question. It was said that it did not require any discussion, that the Senate Finance Committee have had before them a bill involving this very question. Does anybody know what is to be reported? Is anybody authorized to say that a provision similar to this is to be reported? Is anybody here authorized to rise and say that different kinds of bonds are going to be authorized by the new bill? I doubt the authority of a single member of the Finance Committee to make any such statement. They honestly and sincerely, of course, do not know, I presume, what will be reported.

The executive authorities of this Government are bound to act. The gold reserve is gradually being drawn down; the gold is being siphoned out of the Treasury by people who evidently want it for divers purposes—some for the very purpose, undoubtedly, of purchasing bonds again. The credit of the country is endangered. The Senator from Ohio, of course, will not differ with me upon the question of the propriety of having that fund restored to its full sum of $100,000,000. He thinks it ought to be done, unquestionably, and I think the country wants it done. Unless some better legislation shall be proposed here, the President of the United States and his Secretary of the Treasury have but a single duty to perform, and that is to proceed to sell bonds. Now, upon the eve of what it is said is to be done, on the eve of and prior to any proposed legislation, this resolution is brought into the Senate to express the sense of the Senate upon this subject.

I do not propose at this time to discuss the question as to what should be done with the greenback currency. If I had the authority I am inclined to think I should solve it by a method that was suggested yesterday in a New York newspaper. Before I would be annoyed with this proposed legislation, before I would be hampered by the present situation of the Treasury, I should proceed under the law of 1875, and I should issue bonds sufficient in amount, say two hundred millions—a heroic remedy, it is true—for the purpose of solving the question. An issue of $200,000,000 of bonds would substantially give to the Secretary of the Treasury the control of the financial situation. It would prevent this constant siphoning of the gold out of the Treasury. It would so contract the currency temporarily that the bankers would be coming to the Secretary of the Treasury and asking him to "give us greenbacks for gold." Some such heroic remedy, in my opinion, ought to be applied.

Mr. GEORGE. Would that not at once depress the price of cotton and wheat?

Mr. HILL. Temporarily it might depress prices, it is true; but if this situation continues the prices of those articles will be depressed in the near future any way.

What legislation is proposed to take the place of the present law? Nobody knows. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] says he is opposed to retiring and canceling the greenback currency. I heard him express the same views in February last in this Chamber, and he is consistent upon that point. Others say they are opposed to the retirement of this currency. I can not for the life of me see why this currency should be retained. I am opposed to paper money. I believe it was issued during the war as a mere temporary expedient. I go further. I doubt its constitutionality.

I know how the Supreme Court of the United States finally mustered up the courage to say that it was constitutional, but I have never heard the reasoning of Salmon P. Chase upon that question overthrown. I have read it carefully, as we have all read it, and in that opinion he lays down in substance the principle that this Government has no right to make money of its promises to pay; that nothing is money in this country except that which is coin, the gold and silver of your Constitution. I think that is good Democratic doctrine. It may not be good Republican doctrine; I do not know. Our friends upon the other side may determine that question for themselves.

I believe that this Government ought not to enter into the banking business, so far as attempting to provide a paper currency for the people. I am not now speaking of the national-bank system, which involves a different question. I am speaking of the strain, the effort, the struggle, the burden upon this Government for the purpose of doing what? To maintain substantially an irredeemable paper currency. I say irredeemable because when it must be constantly redeemed and never extinguished, never paid, it is in legal effect an irredeemable paper currency. It has all the indicia, all the features of that kind of currency. I think it is a dangerous experiment on the part of the United States to endeavor longer to float this currency. I think it ought to be canceled; I think it ought to be retired. I am not now going to detain the Senate with suggestions as to what should take its place. In my judgment, there are plenty of methods by which that vacuum may be supplied.

Mr. GEORGE. Suppose you destroy both the greenbacks and silver; what would the currency be?

Mr. HILL. In the first place, you have in the Treasury a large amount of silver bullion from which, when the greenbacks are disposed of, there can be little or no danger by its coinage either into standard silver dollars or fractional currency. The very message of the President of the United States, when he vetoed the bill for the coinage of the bullion, stated that one of the reasons was that the bullion was there pledged as security for the redemption of those notes. But when those notes are themselves canceled, disposed of, destroyed, done away with, there can be no good reason why the bullion in the Treasury should not be coined.

But, Mr. President, I do not propose now to discuss the gold and silver question proper. The simple question before the Senate is, whether we should pass this resolution or whether it should not be referred to the Finance Committee; whether it is wise for us two or three days before we are to act upon this question to pass a resolution as to what our sense is upon this subject. I think it unwise; I think it uncalled for.

Mr. President, I do not believe the President of the United States would pay the slightest attention to this resolution, and he ought not to do so. His duty is to be determined by existing laws. His duty is to be determined by the statutes as he finds them. His duty is to be determined by the condition of the Treasury of the United States. He can not fall back and justify himself simply upon the ground that the Senate has said by a simple resolution that these bonds should not be disposed of in a certain way.

Now, Mr. President, I have said all I care to say for the present upon this subject. If we are to have a vote to-day upon the resolution, I shall in that case have a few more remarks to make.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from New York has fallen into great errors simply because he has not had time to read what he is citing. The first contract that was made under the Administration of President Hayes was the first one in April, 1877. That has been read. It expressly reserved the right of the people to take as many of the bonds as they would take. The second contract to which he referred had no specification in regard to popular loans, because it was a contract for the purchase by the syndicate of $50,000,000 for resumption purposes, to be paid at the rate of $5,000,000 a month from the date of the contract until December, when resumption was to be perfected. They were to provide $4,000,000 of gold in exchange for $4,000,000 of 4½ per cent bonds, and there was no provision, as a matter of course, for a popular loan in that case, because it was a specific loan to be paid in gold, and to be paid into the Treasury by gradual accumulation.

That is the contract of April 11, and from that time forward, with the exception of the contract which was made for a specific purpose, the loans of the United States were sold by the Treasury Department without any syndicate and without the employment of any agent whatever. The whole sale of the vast amount of our bonds for refunding purposes was made without any syndicate at all. The Senator will not be able to show any such contract. It was made by sales all over the country. In every national bank, in every post-office, in every place the 4 per cent bonds were sold, and in that way, in the summer of 1879, a few months after resumption occurred, the whole mass of indebtedness was provided for.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator explain what is meant in the contract of April 11 that the sellers are to have a commission of one-half of 1 per cent and that the bonds are to be sold? It looks at least as though they were selling agents.

Mr. SHERMAN. They agreed by the contract to take $50,000,000 of bonds, payable as I have mentioned. Then there is this last clause, to which my honorable friend calls my attention:

The parties of the second part—

That is, these bankers, and I may say that those were the same bankers employed in the previous Administration under Mr. Morrill, the same persons engaged in the same enterprise. The contract made in 1878 provides that—

The parties of the second part shall receive in gold coin a commission of one-half of 1 per cent on all bonds taken by them under this contract, as allowed by the act of July 14, 1870, and shall assume and defray all expenses which may be incurred in sending bonds to London or elsewhere upon their request, or by transmitting bonds, coupons, or coin to the Treasury Department at Washington, including all cost of making the exchange of bonds, and shall also be charged with the cost of the preparation and issuing of the bonds.

This shows that the only commission received by these men was one-half of 1 per cent. They complained bitterly that the expenses ran so far upon this fund that they really did not make anything out of the loan, and I think it is very probable that they did not; but even then the 4 per cent bonds were offered for refunding purposes; that is, in exchange for the old bonds. They were offered for refunding purposes without cost to anyone. If any members of the syndicate entered into the operation of buying bonds for refunding purposes, they received no commission, nor did anyone else. That is the condition. After that time, in 1879, during all the period when resumption was being perfected, not one dollar was paid to anyone for commissions.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer an amendment to the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Chair will state to the Senator from North Carolina that the pending question is upon the motion to refer. The amendment can be read for information, if the Senator desires.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to have my amendment read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Amend by striking out all after the words "shall be sold," and inserting in lieu thereof "for any purpose whatever, without further authority from Congress;" so that when amended the resolution will read:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that hereafter no bonds of the United States shall be sold for any purpose whatever without further authority from Congress.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, my amendment brings up the main question—I wish to protest against considering details when the main question should be settled by Congress. The Senator from New York and the Senator from Ohio have admitted that they are together on the main question. Now, they differ about some details and are using a great deal of time discussing these details. What the Senate ought to do, what the country wants to see, is the main question voted on. Upon that main question, as brought forward in my amendment, we would get a square vote by the Senate either for or against the issue of bonds, and on that division the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from New York would vote together.

Mr. HILL. I do not know about that.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope if they do vote together they will vote against these bonds; but we understand that both of them indorse the President in issuing bonds under the resumption act of 1875, which I deny he has the power to do. The Senate ought to say right now whether in its judgment bonds shall be issued or not. That is the question. That is what the people are interested in; that is the burning question of the hour.

I indorse the remarks made by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], but his resolution is not as big as his remarks. I want to make his resolution cover the main question. His remarks cover the amendment that I have offered, and his remarks are pertinent to that amendment.

The Senator from New York objected to my bill referring to this question this morning because it was a bill. Now he objects to this resolution because it is a resolution. The Senator from New York is getting to be a monumental objector. I wish to ask the Senate, when it votes down the motion to refer, as I believe it will, to consider and adopt this amendment.

There are Senators on this floor besides myself who do not know how to vote on the resolution as it stands. The resolution seems to authorize the issue of bonds. Any Senator here who is opposed to bonds being issued can not conscientiously vote for the resolution, because it says "in case of any sale of bonds under existing laws," etc.; and I deny there is any existing law under which bonds can be lawfully sold. I would like to vote with the Senator from West Virginia, for I am opposed to secret sales to private parties and to syndicates. I am opposed to having midnight bargains in dark-lantern corners, and paying $13,000,000 of the people's money to private individuals as a free gift. It is an outrage upon the people of this country, and ninety-nine out of every hundred of them condemn it.

The Senate ought to speak out, Mr. President, and put a stop to this wrong. I agree with the Senator from West Virginia on that point. But if I vote with him for his resolution as it stands, I would be saying by my vote that I think the issue of bonds is allowable under the act of 1875 and that the President is justified in issuing them at this time. I say that no Senator on this floor who is opposed to bonds can vote with the Senator from West Virginia—although a majority of us, I think, are in sympathy with the resolution that he has offered—because the resolution recognizes the power of the President to issue bonds "under existing laws." I do not believe that such power exists, and I do not believe the majority of the Senate think it exists.

Mr. President, that is the vital point at issue. Therefore I am bound to offer this amendment and insist upon it. We should say here and now, in language that can not be misunderstood, that we are opposed to the further issue of bonds without the consent of Congress.

Mr. CHILTON. I prepared, a few minutes since, an amendment to the resolution offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], and I have the permission of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] that his motion to refer shall be withdrawn long enough for the presentation of my amendment. Perhaps the proposition I desired to submit is sufficiently covered by the amendment just offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. The only difference which I discover is that this amendment is general in character, while the amendment which I have prepared refers to the question of bond issues to obtain gold for the redemption of the United States notes and Treasury notes.

I voted, sir, against the resolution offered by the Senator from West Virginia, because, in the first place, the resolution only proposes to take the sense of the Senate, and it would seem of doubtful utility to pass an empty resolution simply declaring our own views without regard to the other branch of Congress; in the second place, for the reason, which has been alluded to by others, that the wording of the resolution seems to approve in advance an issue of bonds; and, in the third place, because I am not altogether sure that a cast-iron rule requiring public advertisement in each and every case would be the best policy for the Government.

It seems to me if the exclusive method of advertising for bids was adopted it would expose the gold reserve to such a constant and extraordinary drain that one bond issue would follow another almost every month. Suppose an advertisement calling for bids should be published thirty days in advance of the date of issue. During that time intending purchasers of bonds would present greenbacks and withdraw gold from the Treasury in such sums as they desired, and, when the thirty days had expired, pay back in exchange for the bonds of the Government the same gold which the Treasury had furnished them. The Government would thus get back again, not outside gold or foreign gold, but the very gold which its own advertisement had stimulated cunning investors to withdraw. It does not seem to me, therefore, that it would be well to say that, at all hazards and in every case, a public advertisement of bond sales should be made. I can see grave objections to sales of bonds by private contract, but the difficulties are equally as formidable in the case of sales by public notice in advance. So I would go into the question deeper than any mere question of methods.

I am opposed to the issue of bonds, root and branch. I am, as has been discovered, of course, by the votes heretofore given by me in this body, a friend of silver coinage. I believe that the parity of gold and silver coins would be insured by an undiscriminating treatment of them on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury, and hence it is the purpose of the amendment which I have offered to prohibit any further issue of bonds to procure gold alone for redemption purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Texas will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. In line 1, after the word "Senate," strike out the remainder of the resolution and insert:

That no further issue of bonds of the United States to procure gold to redeem United States notes or Treasury notes shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury either by public advertisement, private sale, or otherwise.

So that when amended the resolution will read:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that no further issue of bonds of the United States to procure gold to redeem United States notes or Treasury notes shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury either by public advertisement, private sale, or otherwise.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire merely to call attention to one point which I understood the Senator from New York to make, which seems to me to embody the fallacy which underlies all the arguments in favor of a syndicate without giving any opportunity of a popular loan.

The Senator says the Government must go to the people who have the gold. Undoubtedly; but it seems to me that it is the barest assumption in the world to suppose that the gold can only be got from one small syndicate in New York. We know as a matter of fact from the reports of the Director of the Mint that the banks of the country hold a great deal of gold. Those banks are not admitted to the syndicate. We have no means of knowing from statistics how much gold is held in hoards or savings by the people, but undoubtedly a great deal is so held, and no opportunity is given for the people to offer that gold in exchange for bonds.

Here is the New York World, the principal organ of the Democratic party. It comes forward and offers to take $1,000,000 of these bonds and pay for them in gold.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I suggest that the average Democratic editor is pretty poor. I suppose that is about the only Democratic editor in the country who has got any gold.

Mr. LODGE. I will read his offer:

> The World now offers to head the list with a subscription of $1,000,000 on its own account. It will take that amount of 3 per cent bonds, or it will take $1,000,000 of 4 per cents on a 3 per cent basis, and it will promptly find and furnish the gold with which to pay for them.

That, compared to the amount which the Government seeks, is small. It is a large subscription for one person or one newspaper. But what reason is there to assume that the gold can not be procured by a popular loan? This Administration has never tried a popular loan. In the days when the other loans were made under Republican administration, as has been shown, in all the contracts but one the loans were first offered to the people. They can be offered now to the people. They ought to be offered to the people first and give them a chance to see whether they will not come forward and take the bonds of their Government and give their Government the gold that it needs. That appeal has never been made to the American people in vain.

I can not understand, Mr. President, why there should be any objection to the Senate expressing its sense that if a loan is to be made it should be offered first in the popular form, and let us see whether the people are ready to take it or any part of it. Certainly there can be no reason in paying, without any attempt at a popular loan, the gigantic percentage which was paid in the last contract.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from New York seems to think that we are endeavoring to embarrass the Administration. I judge from his argument, as well as I could hear and understand it, that he supposes if the syndicate is not allowed to take this loan it can not be made. The syndicate will have the same opportunity of bidding, when such a loan is put forth, that the individuals will have. Every national bank will be at liberty to bid; every millionaire can bid. The question is, how shall the Government of the United States get the most for the sale of its bonds, if its bonds are to be sold? The question who shall have the bonds is immaterial to the Government; but how shall we get the highest sum for them; how shall we, with the least number of bonds, get the most money? We think by allowing the people to bid on them they would outbid the syndicate's proffer made to the Administration, judging by what the syndicate proffered on a former occasion.

Mr. HOAR. The question is, whether the syndicate shall bid with or without competition.

Mr. TELLER. As the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, it is a question whether the syndicate shall bid with competition or whether it shall bid without competition. The appeal of the Senator from New York is that it shall bid without competition; and he intimates that we have got to go to New York to get the gold because it is not anywhere else. If the Treasury reports are to be relied upon, there is in the United States in the neighborhood of $600,000,000 of gold. All the national banks in the United States hold less than $200,000,000. The last time I looked they had $160,000,000. Where is the balance of it? It is among the people. Why should we say that nobody can furnish the gold except a syndicate of bankers in the city of New York?

The Senator from New York has gone into an examination of the old sales of bonds, and it seemed to me that his argument was that there had been something improperly done at that time, and therefore we ought not to say that something improper should not be done now. There was no public scandal connected with the sales of bonds prior to February, 1895. In 1893 the present Administration put $50,000,000 of bonds on the market to the public. In November following they advertised again for $50,000,000 more. That $50,000,000 was sold for something over 116 on every bond. On the 8th of February following this Administration made a contract with a private syndicate in the city of New York to sell $62,000,000 of bonds. That contract brought the Government of the United States a trifle over $65,000,000. Sixty-two million three hundred and some odd thousand dollars brought the Government $65,000,000, while in November a fifty-million-dollar loan brought the Government fifty-eight million dollars and some hundreds. When the fifty-million-dollar loan was offered in November, as I stated the other day, $178,000,000 was bid at a price that brought to the bidders less than 3 per cent interest. If the bonds in February following had been sold on a 3 per cent basis they would have been sold at 117½ at least. They were sold. That is the proper method, I understand, because, of course, when the bond is paid the premium is not paid back, and that must be accounted for.

Mr. President, the bonds were sold in February by a private contract, by such a contract, I undertake to say and do say here and now, as had never before been made; and I am credibly informed that a still worse one is about to be made. It was a contract at 104.49, when it was but a question of computation, as the other bonds were selling in the market, that they were worth at least 117½, if not more. In criticising that transaction I said in a speech I made on the floor of the Senate that they would go to 124. They have been to 123½ even in these times of depression. As I said the other day, when the panic and war scare were on in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and other places, they maintained themselves at 119. Yet we are told now that you can not sell a bond of this kind at more than you sold them for in February.

After the syndicate bought the bonds they agreed to let the public have an opportunity to buy them at 112. They kept their bank open for subscriptions less than two hours. The amount that they gave to the public was subscribed for by more than six times, and if they had kept their bank open twenty-four hours the amount would have been subscribed for forty or fifty times. We are now told by the public press that this thing is to be repeated. Whether they are to be sold at a dollar or a dollar and four cents I do not know, but they are to be sold on less favorable terms, we are told repeatedly.

There ought to be no private contracts touching the sale of bonds. If the syndicate wants them, it should be willing to stand competition with the other banks in the country, with the individuals who have money, with the men who have their money in savings banks and who would like to take it out and put it out at a small rate of interest where they know it will be absolutely safe. That is what the Senator from New York resists. He is not alarmed but what the sale can be made. The Treasury Department is not alarmed but what the sale can be made. They want to make a contract with certain parties, and I do not need to say why.

The Senator from Massachusetts read a statement from the public press of to-day that one of the great newspapers in the country, a Democratic newspaper at that, proposes to take a million dollars of these bonds at a 3 per cent rate—either to take a million dollars of 3 per cent bonds at par or a million dollars of the present 4 per cent bonds, if they should be issued, at a 3 per cent rate.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me? Does he know a single individual in the country, aside from Mr. Pulitzer, who is willing to take coin bonds at 3 per cent?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. HILL. I venture the assertion that no bank in the country has made any such suggestion. I have not seen it anywhere. I venture to say, what I did not say the other day, that even after this discussion there is not a single bank in the country that will offer the Treasury now to take any large quantity of these bonds, coin bonds, at 3 per cent.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator asks me a question and then proceeds to make a speech. I do know that these bonds can be sold at 3 per cent. I know that $1,000,000 of them can be sold here. I know that bankers have been interviewed and their statements are published in this paper that they would take them at a 3 per cent rate. I know more than that, Mr. President.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TELLER. Not now. The last quotation is 3 per cent on bonds that were sold in February——

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will indulge me a moment, what banks are willing to take any amount?

Mr. TELLER. I did not say banks. I said bankers and prominent men.

Mr. HILL. What bankers?

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from New York says they can not be sold at 3 per cent. The Secretary of the Treasury is reported to have said that they could not be sold. How do they know? They know that when they offered the last bonds at very nearly 3 per cent they were bid at a tremendous rate. They know that when they raised the price and put them in London they were bid there in a few hours four or five times what they were allowed to take. How is this Administration to know whether there can be a popular loan until it tries it? What right has the Senator from New York or what right the Secretary of the Treasury to say it can not be done?

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. TELLER. No; not now. We have made these sales. I know that the sales can be made. The first gold that was put into the Treasury by voluntary contributions came from the State of Colorado. I will venture to say that more than two or three million dollars of the loan can be taken in the State of Colorado at 3 per cent. I know one banker telegraphed when the other syndicate was putting its loan out at 12 per cent that he wanted a million dollars of the bonds. I know other bankers from my State who telegraphed they wanted it at $1.12.

Mr. President, I do not want to say anything harsh about the Administration. I made a statement the other day, and I notice some of the papers say that perhaps I will modify it when I am cooler. I said the transaction was marked either with dishonesty or imbecility. I repeat it here to-day, that no man can come to any conclusion but that either the Administration in that affair was a dishonest one or that the Administration was an incapable one. Bonds were sold in February for $1.04½ that in ninety days were selling for $1.22. They sold for $1.04½ in February and for $1.22 three months later, with no better condition of market, with nothing to make a demand for bonds three months later that did not exist then.

Mr. President, it will not do to say that these bonds can not be sold at 3 per cent until they try it. It will not do to say that a popular loan will be a failure until they try it. If the public does not want it, let the syndicate come in then and bid with the public. If the public will not bid the syndicate will take the loan, I suppose, on as favorable terms as it can get it.

Mr. President, I am going to read a little extract from the New York World. I am not particularly in love with the New York World myself, but there is an appeal to the President in the World of to-day such as has never been made before to an Executive of ours. It is an appeal that he shall not scandalize the Administration that this paper has supported and helped bring into existence. It is an appeal that he shall not by his conduct destroy the confidence of the American people in the integrity of their officials. I suppose, as the Senator from New York says, that if we pass this resolution the President will pay no attention to us; so he will pay no attention to this great Democratic organ. But the fact remains that they have challenged the honesty and the integrity of the last transaction as they challenged the honesty and integrity of the proposed new loan. I read from the New York World of to-day:

AN APPEAL TO THE PRESIDENT.

To you, Mr. Cleveland, the World appeals. It asks you to save the country from the mischief, the wrong, and the scandal of the pending bond deal with the Morgan syndicate.

It is not yet too late to repudiate the whole transaction, and its rejection will be the greatest act of your life. It will give you more of prestige than any other, more of honor, and more of the gratitude of your countrymen.

For this thing is a monumental wrong. If it is consummated, its memory will be a colossal scandal and you will bear the blame. You only have power even yet to veto it. That power gives you the greatest opportunity of your life and imposes upon you a corresponding duty.

The needless waste of ten or fifteen millions in this transaction is not the only or even the chief objection to it. It involves something of immeasurably greater worth than any number of millions. It involves popular confidence in the integrity of the Government, that faith of the people in their rulers which is the lifeblood of free institutions. The manner of this thing is more vitally important than its matter.

In all kindness the World asks you to look at the facts as they present themselves to the popular mind. This bargain has been made with a suspicious secrecy which has been guarded by a picket line of falsehoods put forth for the misleading of the people. It is a bargain between yourself in your official capacity and your near friends. It promises to give princely millions of the people's money to those friends, and that without any need, as we shall presently show.

You have not asked advice of the party leaders in Congress or out. The only person you are known to have counseled with is the contractor with whom you have been bargaining, and he had millions to make by inducing you to accept his advice.

His lawyer, who was formerly your law partner, has been in Washington helping the negotiation.

James T. Woodward, president of the Hanover Bank, has also been in Washington, and he is publicly known to have accumulated $4,000,000 of gold in preparation for the deal.

Mr. Stillman, of the City National Bank, who has also been at the capital, has a hoard of $8,000,000 to invest in the speculation.

You must see, Mr. Cleveland, that secrecy of negotiation under such circumstances is bound to excite suspicion. You must realize that men are already saying things which the newspapers as yet hesitate to print. You must be alive to the fact that these suspicions, directed against the conduct of the Government itself, are more threatening to the stability of our institutions than the enmity of any foreign foe could be. The most damaging thing that could happen to the Republic would be the lodgment of a conviction in the people's minds that our Government has become one of syndicates and bargains for the public moneys.

Why should you not end all this danger and scandal now? Why should you not sweep away all doubt and banish all suspicion by repudiating the whole miserable business? You have spoken eloquent words about the necessity of reposing confidence in the people. Why should you not now trust them to come to the rescue of the Treasury instead of hiring a syndicate to do so at an extortionate price?

You can get all the gold you need in Europe at 1 per cent or less premium. You can get it in our own country without paying any premium at all. An issue of fifty millions of bonds would completely meet present needs, and such an issue at 3 per cent or on a 3 per cent basis would be subscribed many times over. The very bankers who have bargained with you for a profit of ten or fifteen millions would be the eagerest subscribers the moment they found that the loan would be offered in no other way. As for the fear that they would conspire to draw the reserve out of the Treasury, there is nobody who would regard such a transaction with greater apprehension than they. The wrecking of the currency by a suspension of gold redemption would cost them many more millions than they expect to make even out of this bond deal. If such a calamity were really threatened the street would hardly hold the wagons sent by them to carry gold to the subtreasury.

If you make your appeal to the people they will quickly respond. There are $68,000,000 of gold in New York alone, to say nothing of the hoards in other cities. You will have no difficulty in securing all of it that the Treasury needs if you show "confidence in the people."

So sure are we of this that the World now offers to head the list with a subscription of $1,000,000 on its own account. It will take that amount of 3 per cent bonds, or it will take $1,000,000 of 4 per cents on a 3 per cent basis, and it will promptly find and furnish the gold with which to pay for them.

The whole country would respond with like alacrity. It would not require a week, it would not require a day, to sell $50,000,000 of bonds to the people at a fair price. Why sell them to a syndicate at an unfair price and with a secrecy which excites suspicion and distrust?

Why should you not appeal to the patriotism of the rich as in case of war a call to arms would appeal to the patriotism of poor and rich alike? Why should you invite a great national scandal where you can as easily invoke a great national demonstration of devotion to the welfare of the country?

Now is your time, Mr. Cleveland, to make war. Make war on fraud and wrong. Make war upon the usurpations of speculative wealth. In this matter lies real peril to the integrity of our institutions, and you have recently professed your readiness to go to war in their defense at all costs and all hazards. Will you rise to the occasion? Are you equal to your golden opportunity?

THE LOSS TO THE PEOPLE.

The selling of $100,000,000 of thirty-year 4 per cent bonds at 104½, when they are worth 117½, gives to the syndicate a profit of $12,750,000.

At the rate formerly stipulated by law and usual in similar transactions the payment to the brokers would be $500,000. Putting it at $1,000,000—very liberal pay, considering that the transaction involves no risk—the squeezing of the Government by the syndicate costs the people $11,750,000.

The difference between a 3 per cent rate (which the Government can command) and a 4 per cent rate (which this loan will carry if Congress shall not take prompt action) will be $1,000,000 a year, or $30,000,000 for the life of the bonds.

And the taxpayers foot the bills! It is a golden opportunity for President Cleveland to come to the defense of the people by a direct appeal to the country.

Mr. President, there were never words of truth and soberness uttered anywhere more appropriate and pertinent than those. It is not the ten or twelve million dollars that these men are allowed to make out of the Government. It is the fact that the American people facing this question must see that either one of two things exists, an incapable administration of public affairs or a dishonest one. It is frightful to contemplate that the people should come to either conclusion at this time, when it is said our credit is at stake.

Mr. President, it is time to call a halt in this matter. It is time at least that the people should have an opportunity to bid on these bonds if they desire. I have no idea that they will have that opportunity. I have no doubt that this scheme will go on, and I have no doubt that the scandal will follow. But in due time the American people will wake up to the fact that there has been a misappropriation of public funds, arising, as I said the other day, either out of dishonesty or imbecility, and it is our duty here to put in our protest unless we are to be partakers of the contumely that must follow such conduct on the part of the administration of public affairs.

For one, I do not propose by my silence to acquiesce in this kind of administration of public affairs. Heretofore at least we have been able to say to the people of the country, mistaken as the Administration may be in its policies, it is evidently working for the public good and is honest. We will not be allowed to say that much longer if these things continue. If the syndicate, whose interest lies so close to the heart of the Senator from New York, is not willing to bid with the blacksmiths, and the mechanics, and the laborers, and the other bankers, then let it keep out of the market and let the Government depend upon the honest people of the country; and they will find they will not be mistaken, for they never have when they put faith in and relied upon the great American heart, which responds in money as it responded in force when the nation's life was assailed.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, as a contribution to this debate, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Mexican loans that were made in 1846 and 1847 by Secretary Robert J. Walker, were made by the acceptance of sealed bids after public advertisements, and opened in the presence of bidders and the public in general.

I am afraid that some of the expressions by the Senator from New York will leave the impression that I had in some wise reflected upon the syndicate. I did not mention the conspicuous member in the manner the Senator from New York did. I said expressly that I had no reflections to make; that I did not challenge their motives; that they were honorable men and able men. And it is beyond me to make any reflection whatever upon the President of the United States or challenge the motives of the Secretary of the Treasury. As I said before, I believe that they, as public servants and as public officials, are trying to do their duty as they understand it, and we are here trying to do ours. We have a right to differ with them as to the method of the transaction of the public business, and that is all that this resolution means.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, it is all very well for Senators to differ with the executive authorities of the Government and to criticise them most severely by saying that they are either dishonest or incompetent, and then suggest that they have not meant anything by that criticism. I do not believe that the Secretary of the Treasury has up to this hour had any understanding, much less an agreement, with any syndicate whatever as to the issuing of any bonds. Nobody knows to the contrary. There have been some suggestions that bonds must be issued to meet the emergency; there have been suggestions of preparations upon the part of bankers to take these loans if they shall be offered, and that is all. No man is authorized to say that he has been promised a loan. No terms have been agreed upon that any Senator knows of.

Mr. President, if the friends of these gentlemen upon the other side whose pockets are lined with gold want to help the country out of its present emergency, let them come forward and make their propositions now, to-day, to-morrow, Monday. Who knows that their offer will not be accepted? Who is authorized to say? If everybody is clamoring for these bonds, as the Senator from West Virginia says—if the merchants, if the blacksmiths, if the carpenters, if the plain people, as he calls them, are so anxious for these bonds, let them come forward now, singly, by twos, by fours, by dozens, by syndicates, if they have a mind to. Where is the Senator authorized to say the proposition will not be entertained or will not be accepted?

Mr. President, no syndicates have come forward thus far; no men from the West, or from the East, or the South, or the North have come forward with any such suggestion that they were clamoring to take these bonds. The sole person in the country who has made a definite and distinct offer is the editor and proprietor of the New York World, who has suggested that he would take a million dollars' worth. So far, so good. Where are the others who are to take the $49,000,000? Where are the others to take the other $99,000,000, if there is to be $100,000,000 issued? It strikes me that there is a great deal of demagogy in this appeal to the people. From all we have heard said here in the last few weeks, the people have but little ready money; they have but little money to invest in bonds at a premium, and under existing laws only bonds at a premium can be issued, practically.

Mr. President, I have no interest nor friendship, even, with the men who compose this syndicate in the city of New York. They are not of my political household, and I care nothing about them. I am here simply to say they have a right to make their bids. Any syndicate in any other city in the United States can make their bid now. Put the Secretary of the Treasury to the test at once if you want to do so. If your men in Colorado have got their gold that they are telegraphing you about, and annoying you with telegrams, let them put their propositions in better shape. Let them say that the united wealth of Colorado is willing to help this Government to the amount of $100,000,000 at 3 per cent, and see what the Secretary of the Treasury will say.

Mr. President, there are no such propositions. When the people are drawing the money from the Treasury of the United States by at least a million dollars a day—this gold out of the Treasury—and the credit of the country is being impaired, impaired by our very inaction here to-day, impaired by the very proceedings in which we are attempting to embarrass the Treasury, do you think it is the time for this great Government to tinker around with a million here and a million there, with Tom, Dick, and Harry?

Mr. President, these men do not believe it. These men are speaking for political effect. These men are attempting simply to get up a political advantage of the party now in power. That is all there is of it. I have no reason to believe that they would proceed, if intrusted with power, any different than John G. Carlisle is proceeding to-day. Incompetent or dishonest is the suggestion made. John G. Carlisle incompetent! One of the ablest men in public life dishonest! Look at his honorable career. A poor man to-day. This man has been in public life for thirty years. He has no bonds. He has no money of any account. You know his situation. He is a poor man who lives upon his salary, and you know it. Dishonest or incompetent is the word hissed out here upon this floor. Mr. President, he is neither. I can say this, that if any man has suffered political injustice at the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury it is my colleague and myself in interparty affairs in the great State of New York; ignored by him in political appointments; ignored by him in every way, while others have been recognized in their respective States. But, sir, I think I am broad minded enough to do him justice in his official financial relations to this Government.

Sir, he is endeavoring to do the best for the country under the statutes passed before this Administration came into power—statutes which we inherited, statutes which he has suggested ought to be remedied. He has suggested amendments to get relief. You refuse to give this relief. You stand here picking flaws upon this thing and that thing that he has done to preserve the credit of the Government. You stand here not reporting your bills, holding them back, discussing these great questions when the financial credit of the country is at stake.

Mr. President, you would think that the Democratic party is in league with these men in New York. There is nothing in regard to New York business men different from other business men. Great financial transactions are had there because it is the moneyed center of the New World. That is the only reason. The great political parties have their national committees in the city of New York not because we ask to have them there, but because it is believed that is the proper place from which to make a political campaign. There is where syndicates are naturally organized. There is where great moneyed transactions take place. Where else could the Secretary of the Treasury go? Shall he go hunting around the mountains of Colorado to find a syndicate ready to furnish him gold to float the bonds of the Government? I think not. You would then, indeed, say he is incompetent, although you might not then say he is dishonest.

This is a simple question. Has anything been presented in the debate here to-day, has anything occurred since last February to justify the allegations against the competency and integrity of these officials? I think not. You have not forgotten nor has the country forgotten the message of the President of the United States, submitted to Congress last February, in which the same difficulty presented itself, the same siphoning of gold out of the Treasury to redeem these same never-ending greenbacks. He sent a respectful communication to Congress. What did he say? He said, in substance, "The best offer I have received is that I can float coin bonds at 3½ per cent and gold bonds at 3 per cent." He had no authority under existing law to make bonds absolutely payable in gold, and the Congress knew it. He therefore said, "If you make the bonds payable in gold, I can float them at 3 per cent. If you insist upon keeping them payable in coin, under the old act of 1875, I can not do better than 3½ per cent." While that was pending here where were the other syndicates who, it is said, were offering 3 per cent for coin bonds? Nowhere—Colorado, West Virginia, or anywhere. Here and there some smart petty financier might say he wanted a few bonds at a little higher rate. But large offers did not come. When the proposition to issue bonds was pending any citizen, any bankers, any syndicate could have come forward. Any bankers, any syndicate can come forward to-day, to-morrow, Monday, any time before this question must be absolutely decided.

Let Senators upon the other side telegraph to their banker friends and let them present their propositions to Mr. Carlisle. Let them say, "We will take five, ten, fifteen, or twenty million dollars of bonds at 3 per cent." If the Secretary refuses to accept the offer, then and then alone have you a right to say that he is incompetent or dishonest.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the United States is full of capital ready to be invested wherever there is abundant security. I have not the slightest doubt that if bonds were offered at 110 or 112 they would be taken up as soon as the subscriptions could be got to the Secretary of the Treasury. There are $1,700,000,000 in the savings banks of the United States, of which a very considerable percentage is lying where the trustees are unable to lend it at any such rate as they ought to have.

It does not follow that because the times are difficult there is no capital to lend. That is just the time when capital dare not invest itself. I do not wish to discuss party questions here; it is a bad place and time to consider them; but as a business statement and proposition the tariff agitation has seriously affected the industries and business of this country, and I consider that the silver agitation is also to blame, for, whether or not the principles of our friends from Colorado are right, they are not accepted by the great financial world, and they will create distrust. Not all the people are so sanguine or are so well convinced as our friends from the Western States.

I would have no objection whatever to a provision for the future—after this loan, if you choose—like this:

Whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall offer any of the bonds authorized for sale by this act or by the resumption act of 1875, he shall advertise the same and authorize subscriptions therefor to be made at the Treasury Department and at the subtreasuries and designated depositories of the United States.

That is a provision found in the bond bill which comes over here from the other House. But now suppose we interfere, just about when a great loan is to be made, by something which is intended—the resolution is not a legal enactment—to stop the loan, to show the desire, the will of Congress that the loan should be stopped, and in the meantime Congress has not provided any other way of making a loan. During the last Congress, which was Democratic—the present Congress has scarcely had time—nothing whatever was done to provide a substitute. Now, when the Government has made the proposed loan, if we can not do it before, let us proceed immediately to provide a wise way of borrowing hereafter. Let us give our Government something like the exchequer bill law of Great Britain, providing a permanent right to loan in case of serious emergency, for whatever reason. We can trust our Government. The English have trusted theirs for generations and do not find any difficulty. They find their profit in it. To every sensible man, every plain man who can figure, and who does not know all about the inside motives, it seems a very strange thing that we are willing to sell for 104½ the identical bonds which other people within a week can sell for 115 or 117.

I think it is a monstrous mistake to suppose that the people of the United States would not take the proposed loan. I say they would take it as soon as they could telegraph to the Treasury Department. You misunderstand the means of the American people, and you misunderstand their patriotism. Because of factious counsels among ourselves and without faith in the people we are bringing our great nation into a very discreditible condition. I will vote for anything that is decent and respectable to get us out of it.

I happened to be in Paris in 1872 when France was about to pay her forfeit of a thousand million dollars to Germany. It was late on a Saturday night, and the subscriptions were to be opened the next morning in what is equivalent to a ward, in almost every ward in the city of Paris and all over the Empire. An American gentleman, long resident in that city, said to me, "I will wager you that the people are now gathering to offer their little sums of money for that loan." The subscription places were to be opened at 9 o'clock in the morning. The bonds were 5 per cent 100-franc (twenty-dollar) bonds, I think, offered at 84, which made it in the neighborhood of a 6 per cent bond, with 25 per cent down. I said, "If that is the case, I want to see it." Although I had to go away the next morning, we took carriages and drove down the Champs Élysées, and the first place we came to was the well-known Palace of Industry. At midnight there were not less than 1,200 people of the city of Paris waiting for the window to be opened at 9 o'clock the next morning. History tells us how that loan was taken many times over.

Does anybody suppose the patriotism of the American people is not equal to that? Will anybody throw doubt upon it who reads the history of the war? Let us trust our people. Offer the proposed loan at 110 or 112, if you please, and to-morrow morning by telegraph it will be taken. Trust the people of the country to take care of our honor. I shall not vote for the resolution until next week.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I merely rise to make one observation, which it is hardly necessary to make to the Senate, but the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] has reiterated again and again his suggestion why do not the people of the United States, if they are willing to bid for the loan, come in with their offers? Why do you not come here from Colorado or from West Virginia or from the banks, other than the syndicate? The one sufficient answer to that argument which the Senator spent so long in urging is that the Administration has not yet made known its purpose to issue bonds at all, or to solicit a loan.

The trouble with these loans, the last one and the one which is said to be now going on, is that no one knows how much the Government wants to borrow, or whether it wants to borrow anything, or whether it intends to issue any bonds at all until the whole transaction is over. How absurd to inquire why this workingman with $500 in a savings bank and this old woman with $500 in her teapot on the upper shelf do not come forward and make a tender of it to the Administration now. Nobody has any means of knowing what the President is going to do, either in manner or amount. The secrecy is not only as to the terms of the bargain, but also as to the purpose to make the bargain.

For one, Mr. President, I do not wish to say anything, if I could, which will affect the national credit; but I wish to repeat what I said in the last Congress, that I deny the lawful authority of the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury to contract new debts for the sake of paying the current expenses of the Government. He has undoubtedly by the resumption act the right to issue the bonds therein described and provided for the purpose of maintaining the gold reserve; but when that is not the reality of the transaction, when he first pays out the gold reserve for the current expenses of the Government, it is an idle device, a pretense, an artifice, to say that he has any lawful authority, either in substance or even technically, to issue these bonds. I have no doubt they will be paid, because their proceeds will have gone undoubtedly to the advantage of the United States; but I think it is one of the worst things ever done in our history that the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury should assume authority at will, without restraint, to increase the public debt.

Mr. President, there has been a time, and it was a time which began when this country was settled and continued until Grover Cleveland's Administration came into power, when the American people thought it was a disgrace to owe a debt which they were not endeavoring to pay, and when they considered that the first principle of honest administration and the first principle of sound finance was to relieve the country from the burden of debt. With freedom from debt all the rest of these financial problems disappear. A man who is paying his expenses from his receipts, and is increasing his property and has no debt, commands the situation anywhere; he does not need to go to philosophers or experts or financiers to inquire what is the path to prosperity. That has been the simple doctrine the American people inherited from our fathers.

I hold it to be one of the greatest of the numerous calamities this Administration has brought upon the American people that it has taken away from men from whom better things were expected the sense of national honesty in regard to the matter of paying the national debt. What has become of the old Democratic party? What has become of the old statesmanship of the South? Whatever else we may have to charge against the people of that section in times past, if we have anything, one thing until lately it always stood for, freedom from debt, economy of expenditure, and sound and honest money, gold and silver. Now, I am sorry to say, with some honorable exceptions, the statesmanship of that part of the country seems to have abandoned all three.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I deny that the Secretary of the Treasury is using the proceeds of the bonds to pay the expenses of the Government. The records do not show any such use.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask my friend, if he will allow me, whether the Government has not used money specifically set aside for resumption purposes, and is gradually encroaching upon it.

Mr. HILL. No, the Secretary has not. The bonds are sold for gold with which the greenbacks are redeemed. The Senator has just stated in his speech to-day that there is no law, there is no requirement, that the greenbacks in the Treasury should be set apart, but had the right to be placed in the general fund. Then the law of 1878 steps in and says they shall be put out again.

Mr. SHERMAN. The law, the act of 1882, I think, provides for $100,000,000 for the reserve fund.

Mr. HILL. The law recognizes, rather, the existence of such a fund.

Mr. SHERMAN. The real amount, as I said to-day, was $95,-500,000. When that sum had been reached, and the surplus above that sum exhausted for current expenses, it seems to me it was the duty of the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury to have avoided paying and refused to pay any of that money for any purpose except to redeem United States notes.

Mr. HILL. What law has he violated? What statute is there? Point it out if the Senator can. Not one. The Senator says it might be better. As a matter of financiering in the Treasury it might be better to keep that fund set apart. There is no statute which says it must be done. He has violated no law. Gold is converted into greenbacks by the redemption of them, and then the greenbacks are a part of the general fund of the Treasury. Then comes in the law of 1878, which says he shall pay out and shall not keep those greenbacks in the Treasury. I say here that he is violating no law; that, on the contrary, he has a perfect right to do it. You may say, as a matter of propriety, you may say, as a matter of financiering, he ought not to do it. That is one thing. That is addressed to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. But he violates no law. He is guilty of no misconduct. There is no dishonesty about it. It is his duty to keep this Government running, and he will discharge that duty in spite of the combined criticism of the gentlemen upon the other side.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from New York allow me to make a suggestion to him on that point?

Mr. HILL. Yes; suggestions are in order.

Mr. HOAR. I understand myself that wherever there is an appropriation for a public expenditure made from moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated it can not be applicable unless the reserve fund is completed, because the moneys in the Treasury are otherwise appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. HILL. Let me read what a distinguished member of this body when he was Secretary of the Treasury said. Secretary Sherman discussed this question in his annual report for 1877, before the passage of the act of May 1, 1878. Among other things he said:

> A note redeemed with coin is in the Treasury and subject to the same law as if received for taxes, or as a bank note redeemed by the corporation issuing it. The authority to reissue it does not depend upon the mode in which it is returned to the Treasury.

Therefore these greenback notes are there for any legitimate purpose. They are assets of the Treasury. They can be paid out for any proper purpose, appropriations, ordinary expenses of the Government, or for any purpose.

Now, Senators, this is elementary. Senators upon the other side know it as well as I do. I do not intend to protract this discussion.

A word has been said here about the enormous profits which are being made on the sale of these bonds. The United States 4 per cent bonds of 1895, the last issue, are selling to-day, or were on December 28, for 116¼ flat, called. Those bonds only realized to the investor a little over 3 per cent. The Government actuary has figured it out. And yet Senators are expecting us to-day to float a coin bond at 3 per cent, to be readily taken. I hope it can be done. I wish the Government were in a position to try it. We can suggest its trial. We would not be responsible for the failure. No Senator here has suggested what would be the effect of a trial and failure. You would then be at the mercy entirely and completely of any syndicate that might be formed.

If a syndicate will accept these bonds at a reasonable rate, whether it is precisely at 4 per cent or a little less or a little more, and take the whole of them, I am not prepared to say that it may not be a good business transaction for the Government to close.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] speaks of individual sales of bonds; that a little lot of bonds are sold for a small amount. You might take one barrel of apples and throw it upon the market down here and it would bring perhaps a fair price; but bring 50,000,000 barrels of apples, and would not the price go down? This Government is not simply to float one bond or $1,000,000 of bonds. It has to float $50,000,000 of bonds within the very near future, within a very few days, possibly $100,000,000; and to quote what this or that or the other bond is selling for is idle and weak on the great question involved.

Irrespective of any question of that kind, the simple question is whether the Senate is prepared to slap the officers of your Treasury in the face, and pass here an expression of opinion upon this great vital question, at this critical hour, depriving the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury of the power that all former Secretaries of the Treasury have had. I will not believe it until it is done.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let us suppose that we pass a resolution here expressing by a large majority the condemnation by Congress of the Administration. Let us suppose that next Tuesday instead of passing the reasonable bond bill that comes from the other House we substitute for it a free silver coinage bill. Have we helped the financial situation? Shall we not discredit ourselves in the eyes of the world? Will the Senator from New York vote for free coinage under those circumstances and refuse a proper bond bill which will relieve the Administration of all its difficulties?

Mr. HILL. It depends upon what you mean by a proper bond bill. That term is pretty indefinite.

Mr. HAWLEY. Draw one yourself.

Mr. HILL. If I drew it myself I should be very likely to vote for it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know. I think the Senator from New York is very likely to have drawn or said things he would not indorse years afterwards.

Mr. HILL. Possibly.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the bond bill from the other House is not reasonable, let us modify it and make it so, and the House will concur with us, or shall we throw it aside and vote for free coinage and discredit us, whether right or wrong, in the great markets of the world?

Mr. HILL. That is bringing up an entirely different question.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is a subject the Senator will have next Tuesday, and it directly affects the calculation of the money markets of the world upon the proposed loan.

Mr. HILL. I should very much regret if the Committee on Finance next week should, as a substitute for any bond bill to meet the present emergency, add to it as an amendment or substitute for it a free-coinage bill. Does the Senator anticipate that that will be done?

Mr. HAWLEY. I am very much afraid of it, because I have assurances from many Senators that that will be the result.

Mr. HILL. And yet we are having Senators here saying that the President of the United States is about to issue some bonds of the Government without waiting for the action of Congress. Now, the suggestion is made by an honorable Senator of influence upon the other side that he fears that no bond bill which we can vote for will be presented, but that, on the contrary, a free-coinage bill will be presented.

Mr. President, permit me to say a word on that point. I said I hoped it would not be done, because I think it would be unwise to mix the general great financial question of the policy of the free coinage of silver with a temporary remedial measure like this. I think, in all good faith, that it would be unwise upon the part of the true friends of silver to bring here such a measure. I have no objection, if they desire to do so at a proper time, to bringing in, in the near future, such a bill and let it be discussed; and if they have the votes in the Senate to pass it, let it be passed; but let it stand on its own merits.

Let not the free silver coinage question grab the Government by the throat every time it needs relief. I do not believe it is the proper policy to pursue, every time the Government gets into such an emergency as at present exists in reference to its financial affairs, to add to every bond bill a measure for the free coinage of silver. I think it is unwise. I think it will not practically solve this question. If a majority of the committee so desire, let them report their free-coinage bill in a manly fashion; let it be discussed here, and if they have a majority of the votes they are entitled to pass it. I shall not delay it. I shall submit my views upon the subject, and that is all. I do not think it would be wise—I do not know whether it will be done—to add to any bill that purports upon its face to give temporary relief to the Treasury at this crisis a free-silver measure. I do not think it ought to be done, and I trust it will not be done.

I have said frankly all that I care to say upon the subject.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I am not aware what effect the passage of the pending resolution would have upon the action of the Secretary of the Treasury in the matter of selling bonds. I am of opinion that it would have but little effect. I am of opinion that what he thinks is his official duty under the circumstances would be executed by him notwithstanding the passage of this resolution by the Senate.

It occurs to me that the resolution is aimed more at the maintenance of the parity of gold and silver than as a reflection upon the Administration. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] called attention to the fact that when Mexican bonds were sold there was advertisement and notification to the public. Attention has been called to the fact that when the Sherman bonds were sold in 1877 there was advertisement and notice to the public. When the bonds were sold in 1893 by the present Administration there was advertisement and notification; but at that time there was a very protracted and earnest debate as to the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act. That debate had the effect of shaking confidence in the maintenance of the gold standard. I believe everyone will admit that that debate had the effect, as all the constant assaults upon that standard have had the same effect, of shaking confidence in the ability of the Government to maintain gold at a parity.

When the bonds were sold in February, 1895, the gold reserve in the Treasury had dwindled down to small proportions. There was no time to hesitate; there was no time to advertise. Consequently the Secretary of the Treasury had to act according to the exigency as it then presented itself. He made the best arrangent that he could with a syndicate. They undertook certain obligations on their part which I am told have been performed. They undertook to keep up the gold reserve, I believe, until last October. They undertook to prevent the exportation of gold. Have these obligations on their part been performed? No one has heard to the contrary. The situation is not inviting now for an advertisement.

We are told by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that gold is hoarded. We are told that there is more gold in the United States not in circulation than is necessary to cover any advertisement of bonds offered. But in spite of the violent attempts made to bring about the unlimited coinage of silver, in spite of the open declaration made that the bonds of the United States stipulated to be paid in coin are to be paid in gold or silver indiscriminately, would holders of this gold exchange it for United States bonds threatened with that sort of payment? I do not believe they would.

Mr. President, I have no quarrel with those who entertain free-silver views. I respect their opinions. I think they are in error, and thinking they are in error I would not willingly do anything on my part which would bring about the unlimited coinage of silver. I believe that tying up the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury by requiring an advertisement of bonds, when the exigencies of the Treasury demand an immediate repletion, might precipitate a silver basis, and thinking that, I shall vote against the resolution. I believe that the Secretary of the Treasury ought to have unlimited discretion in such a case.

As to the reflections upon the honesty of the Secretary of the Treasury, I think, in all deference to the Senator from Colorado, that they had better not have been uttered. In his heart the Senator does not believe that the Administration, either individually or collectively, is dishonest.

Mr. TELLER. I have not charged that. I charged that it was incapable or dishonest.

Mr. CAFFERY. The dishonesty therefore attaches either to the Administration collectively or to the individual members of the Administration, and the Senator reiterated the charge with emphasis. I say that I do not believe he means it. I do not believe that he understood or intended the full consequences of his charge. The Administration is attempting to hold up the side of the question which tends toward a maintenance of the parity of the two metals, and in taking that view of it, the Administration can be charged with neither inbecility nor dishonesty.

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] deplores the decadence of Southern honesty and Southern statesmanship and of sound views of Southern people upon finance. There perhaps is unfortunately a very wide departure between the statesmanship of this day of the Southern Senators and members of Congress and the statesmanship of Calhoun, and Clay, and Benton. There is likewise a very large margin, perhaps, between the statesmanship of Massachusetts and the statesmanship which was ornamented and signalized by such great men as Webster. But, sir, the Southern men do not add hypocrisy to their lack of statesmanship, and while they are for the maintenance of what they call sound views on finance, they would not seek to stab those views by indirection for what I consider to be a puny party advantage.

What difference does it make in regard to the gold reserve whether we have more in the Treasury in the way of paper than the needs of the Government require? If bonds are sold and gold obtained, and the gold drawn out again by greenbacks, so that there is an apparent overflowing of the Treasury and yet a depletion of the gold reserve, how are you to maintain the thousand million dollars of paper, every dollar of which is bottomed upon the ability of the Government to redeem in gold? How would it benefit the country to pile up taxation, not a dollar of which now is paid in gold, in order to get paper notes into the Treasury which you could not hold at a parity with gold?

I admired the frankness of the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] when he said, from the standpoint of the Administration, that it was idle to talk about advertising bonds when the very people who would take the bonds with gold would get the gold by drawing it out of the Treasury with greenbacks.

Mr. ELKINS. I hope, after the full discussion which has taken place, that we may now get a vote on the motion to refer, and then reach a final vote on the resolution this evening. We have been here long enough, it seems to me.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, if we are going on I wish to say just a word or two, if the Senator from West Virginia will excuse me. I do not know whether I was misunderstood or not. I do not wish to be understood as approving of the course of the Treasury Department in making the various loans which have been so much discussed.

I did not believe that the Government had the right to borrow money under the law of 1875 and devote it, directly or indirectly, to the current necessities of the Government. I can not understand the mathematics by which the Treasury satisfies itself that the successive loans in no way went to pay current expenses. But I appreciate the necessity and the emergency, and if that method of borrowing can be palliated at all it is only by reason of the refusal of the last Congress to act upon this general subject of finance.

Mr. ELKINS. Now let us have a vote.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I wish to say a single word. I shall vote for the resolution. I am opposed to the issuance of bonds of any kind. I believe there are other means by which the wants of the Treasury may be supplied. All the arguments in opposition to the resolution are predicated upon the idea that there is no people of the United States, that a few men constitute the controlling power in finance and control the revenues and the products of the labor of this great people. Where are the gentlemen who subscribe for these bonds to get the gold? It is to come from the people, the millions of toilers in the United States. There is no system of finance that is great enough to supplant the results of the labor of the millions of the American people.

Sir, you have only to advertise, and the notes of this Government, redeemable at its option in gold or silver, and bearing 3 per cent interest, will be taken up in gold, dollar for dollar, by the people of this country without delay. It seems to me that there is no kind of question in regard to the truth of that proposition. The resources of this country are in the labor of its millions of toilers and in the brains of the poor people of the country, and not in the great princes of finance and the men who have attained, even by laudable enterprise, the position of captains of industry. There is no danger of the credit of this Government failing when it is intrusted to the people of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, in view of the importance of this question, and the very grave questions raised by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], the certainty that other amendments will be offered to the pending resolution, and the equal certainty that the matter can not be disposed of to-night, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ELKINS. I hope not. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Under Rule XXIV, clause 2, the following communications, etc., were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the report of the board of appraisers appointed to appraise the improvements of intruders in the Cherokee Nation, together with accompanying papers and letters upon the subject; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of State submitting an estimate of an appropriation to carry into effect the provisions of a convention for the exchange of public documents with certain foreign Governments; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the president of the National Academy of Sciences, with papers and vouchers relating to expenditures made in accordance with the act of Congress approved July 12, 1894; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting additional estimates for the support of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A bill (S. 894) granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, at the earliest day practicable, 5,000 copies in separate form, with paper covers, of the paper entitled "Geology and mining industries of the Cripple Creek district, Colorado," constituting pages 1 to 209 of part 2 of the Sixteenth Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey, with the accompanying illustrations, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for distribution by the Geological Survey.

Which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

A concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, under the direction of the Department of the Interior, 6,000 copies of a paper contained in the Sixteenth Annual Report of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, entitled "The public lands and their water supply," together with the accompanying maps and illustrations, of which number 1,500 copies shall be for the use of members of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of members of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 for the use of the Geological Survey.

Which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, a joint resolution introduced by myself—joint resolution (H. Res. 61)—to provide for the payment of the force of Truck Company D in the District of Columbia was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. As it contains an appropriation it should have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I ask that the reference be corrected.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made, and the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. The bill (H. R. 276) which I introduced, granting to the State of Kansas the abandoned Fort Hays Military Reservation, in said State, for the purpose of establishing western branches of the Kansas Agricultural College and of the Kansas State Normal Institute thereon, and for a public park, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That bill has reference to the disposition of a military reservation which has been abandoned, and is now a part of the public domain. I ask, therefore, that the reference be corrected and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLUE. A bill of similar character introduced by myself—House bill 1238—took the same reference. I ask that in this case, also, the reference be changed.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 1238) granting to the State of Kansas the abandoned Fort Hays Military Reservation, in said State, for the purpose of establishing western branches of the Kansas Agricultural College and of the Kansas State Normal School thereon, and for a public park, was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

SETTLEMENT OF THE VENEZUELA BOUNDARY, ETC.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to report a resolution from the Committee on Printing and have it considered now.

The SPEAKER. Is it privileged?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. Then it requires unanimous consent. The resolution will be read, after which there will be opportunity for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 6,000 extra copies of Senate Document No. 226, first session Fiftieth Congress, relating to the Venezuela boundary, be printed in paper covers, of which number 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask permission to make a brief statement in connection with this resolution, after which I think there will be no objection to its immediate consideration.

This House has already passed a resolution, introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], similar to this. But that was simply a House resolution, which, inasmuch as the cost of this printing will exceed $500, can not be executed by the Public Printer. The resolution on which I now ask the House to act has already been passed by the Senate, and the action of the two Houses is necessary in order that this work may be done.

Mr. PERKINS. Is not the number here proposed—6,000—larger than is required?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think this is the same number that was proposed in the House resolution introduced by the gentleman's colleague [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. HITT. I suggest that the resolution be amended so as to include the message, with accompanying correspondence, that recently came in. This will complete the history, so far as correspondence goes, of this Venezuela question. The limited number that was printed of the message and documents makes it somewhat difficult to get them, and it is desirable that all these documents should go together.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is a Senate concurrent resolution; it is not offered by myself.

Mr. HITT. But it might be amended.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, if the House should decide to consider the resolution it would be amendable. I think the gentleman's suggestion is eminently proper.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HITT. I move to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "boundary" the words "and the President's message of December 17, 1895, and the documents accompanying the same."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REPRESENTATIVE FROM UTAH.

Mr. BRODERICK. I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Clarence E. Allen, Representative-elect from the State of Utah, be now sworn in. As gentlemen all understand, Utah is now a State, the President's proclamation to that effect having been issued on Saturday. The term of Mr. Allen, who was elected as a Representative of the State, commenced on Saturday. He has filed with the Clerk credentials signed by the governor and the secretary of state, but not as officers of the State, because they could not be sworn in until to-day. There is no contest of Mr. Allen's election; and I therefore ask unanimous consent that he be now sworn in as a member.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BRODERICK] asks unanimous consent that the oath of office be administered to Clarence E. Allen as a Representative from the State of Utah.

Mr. CRISP. I will ask my friend from Kansas whether he has examined into this matter at all and has ascertained that this gentleman is entitled to be sworn in?

Mr. BRODERICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRISP. This of course is not precisely similar to the case ordinarily presented where the oath is administered to a member-elect before his credentials have been formally presented. I understand that Utah, by proclamation issued on Saturday last, has been declared a State; but has the gentleman from Kansas looked into the law sufficiently to satisfy himself that the action he now proposes is entirely proper?

Mr. BRODERICK. Yes, sir. Under the enabling act the governor and the secretary of the new State must sign the credentials of the member elected to Congress. These officials will be sworn in to-day in Utah; but they have already signed credentials to the same effect.

I confess that this proceeding is somewhat irregular; but in view of the fact that there is no contest over the election of Mr. Allen, and as the credentials, although somewhat irregular in form, are already filed with the Clerk of the House, I see no reason why the member should not be sworn in now. I know that there is no contest; I know that he was elected under a constitution adopted by the State, and I therefore make the request.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that in a matter of this sort there ought to be some reference and report from a committee of the House.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let it go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CRISP (continuing). This Territory has just been admitted as a State, and the RECORD ought to show some report either from the Committee on the Judiciary or the Committee on Elections as to the facts involved. In other words, there ought to be some report showing that Utah is now entitled to a Representative on the floor of this House, and therefore, under the circumstances, I think I shall have to object to the unanimous consent asked by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. BRODERICK. If the gentleman from Georgia will allow me to say, there are precedents for this action.

Mr. CRISP. This can be done to-morrow, and it will occasion no material delay.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the request of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Maine will withhold that motion for an instant.

I would suggest that this matter of the election in Utah be referred to some committee to meet the objection of the gentleman from Georgia. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Elections or to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. With the right to report at any time.

Mr. NORTHWAY. It should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa suggests that the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BRODERICK] be submitted to the Committee on Elections or the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest that the committee have the right to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. With the right to report at any time.

Mr. McMILLIN. I notice, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Iowa suggested in the first instance that this should be referred to the Committee on Elections. I think it belongs properly to the Judiciary Committee, the law committee of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was not struggling to get control, but simply to get action on the matter.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wanted the gentleman to get control. I know his modesty, which prevented him from asserting himself.

Mr. HENDERSON. You know me thoroughly. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that this matter be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary with power to report at any time?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BARTHOLDT, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky, for two weeks, on account of business.

To Mr. SORG, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. DAYTON, until Tuesday next, on account of important business.

CODIFICATION AND ARRANGEMENT OF THE PENSION LAWS.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask a change of reference of House bill No. 2782, to codify and arrange the laws relating to pensions. I ask that the Committee on the Revision of the Laws be discharged from the further consideration of this bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. In this form it requires unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have no motive except to attain the best results by the committee charged with the investigation and report on this matter; but it seems to me that this pertains properly to one of the law committees of the House, and I think it ought to remain with the Committee on the Revision of the Laws or else be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The revisions heretofore made have been under the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and I think it entirely proper that this should go there also.

Mr. PICKLER. If the gentleman will allow me a moment——

Mr. McMILLIN. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. This is a modification or arrangement of the laws relating to pensions that was made in the last Congress. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Pearson, was a member of a committee of three appointed by the House to arrange and codify these laws. It was reported and passed by the House, but no final action was taken upon it. Now, it is entirely true that either the Committee on Invalid Pensions or the Committee on the Revision of the Laws would have jurisdiction of this matter. As I introduced this bill myself on the opening of this session, it went to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. But I have consulted the chairman of that committee, Mr. BOWERS of California, and it is his request that it be rereferred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, as they do not care to take up the matter of pensions at this time and go through all of the various laws on the subject. It would come under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions anyway, and that is the desire of all whom I have consulted in the matter. It was before the last House from time to time and finally passed the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. All propositions, so far as I have known, for the revision of the pension laws have gone to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. In addition, I happen to know that this committee has very little else to do, and as the question submitted is an exceedingly important one, it ought to go to that committee. I have the utmost confidence in the Committee on Invalid Pensions, but that committee is overwhelmed with work in the consideration of individual pension bills, which will require all of their time. They would have no opportunity to consider a matter of this importance, and therefore I object to the change of reference.

Mr. PICKLER. If the gentleman will permit me a moment——

Mr. McMILLIN. I must object to the request.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

REGENT OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. DINGLEY. I withdraw my motion for adjournment for a moment to allow the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] to present a matter to the House.

Mr. HITT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution (H. Res. 19) to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than members of Congress, shall be filled by the appointment of William L. Wilson, of the State of West Virginia, in place of Henry Coppée, deceased.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

And then, on motion of Mr. DINGLEY (at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

TUESDAY, January 7, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

NEWTON C. BLANCHARD, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM KENTUCKY.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator-elect from Kentucky, Mr. Lindsay, is present, and I ask that the oath of office be administered to him.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator-elect from Kentucky, whose credentials have heretofore been presented, will please come forward and receive the oath of office.

Mr. Lindsay was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. BERRY, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to the act of Congress of March 2, 1895, authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to consider and examine the terms of the contract between the United States and William H. B. Stout, Cyrus J. Hall, and Isaac S. Bangs, dated April 21, 1888, for furnishing stone for the Congressional Library building, which was rescinded by the act of Congress of October 2, 1888, a report as to the extent the contract was executed prior to its rescission and what payments have been made, etc.; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in conformity with the act of Congress of March 2, 1895, the report of the board of appraisers appointed by the President to appraise the improvements of intruders in the Cherokee Nation, together with accompanying papers and letters upon the subject; which, with the accompanying letters and papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 6,000 extra copies of Senate Document No. 226, first session Fiftieth Congress, relating to the Venezuelan boundary line, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 19) for filling a vacancy on the Board of Regents, Smithsonian Institution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ALLEN presented a petition of sundry citizens of North Platte, Nebr., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Mason City, Nebr., soldiers in the late war, praying for the enactment of legislation giving the same weight and credibility to the evidence of noncommissioned officers and private soldiers before the Pension Bureau as is given to the evidence of commissioned officers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HILL presented a petition of members of General John Sedgwick Garrison, No. 37, Regular Army and Navy Union of the United States of America, of West Point, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to amend chapter 67, volume 23, of the Statutes at Large of the United States, relating to enlisted men in the service of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented petitions of sundry ministers of the State of New York, of sundry citizens of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and of sundry citizens of the State of New York, praying that protection and security be granted to American citizens in Turkey, and that redress be obtained for injuries committed upon them; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CHANDLER. I present, by request, resolutions passed at a public meeting held in Kansas City, Mo., November 30, 1895, signed by D. S. Harriman, chairman. They are resolutions of sympathy with the Cuban revolution, and they conclude by saying, "That we believe, as Spain set the precedent during our civil war by recognizing the Southern Confederacy, we are amply justified in extending to Cuba the same aid and assistance in her struggle for liberty that France did our ancestors of the original thirteen colonies during their struggle for freedom from despotic England, and that all people seeking the blessings of a free country and self-government should receive the fullest encouragement and aid from the United States." I move the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I present a petition signed by 111 members of the University of Wisconsin and a vast number of representatives of different posts of the Grand Army of the Republic all over the country, praying for the passage of the bill introduced by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], to prevent an improper use of the American flag. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I also present a petition signed by the mayor and city council of Worcester, Mass., praying that Congress will authorize the use of a suitable vessel of the United States Navy to forward supplies to suffering Armenians. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I also present the petition of Rev. Albert Eugene George, rector of St. Matthew's Church, Boston, Mass., and others, praying that Congress will cooperate with Great Britain and other powers for the immediate relief of suffering Armenians in Turkey. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I also present a petition of sundry citizens of Malden, Mass., praying that the Government of the United States make every possible effort to relieve the suffering of Armenians in Turkey.

If I may have consent, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations whether that committee have considered a resolution in regard to supporting the President in any action he may take to relieve the Armenians. This is a matter that seems to excite the interest of the Christian churches and of citizens at large very much indeed all over the part of the country with which I am most familiar; and if I can do so I should like to be able to assure the correspondents who write to me, as they do to other Senators, that the Committee on Foreign Relations are likely to take immediate action on the matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. A great many petitions have been sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations with respect to the Armenians. I am sure I speak the sentiment of every member of that committee when I say that the committee have an earnest desire to relieve the Armenians if possible. As yet we have taken no steps in the matter. There is no doubt that due attention will be given to the subject at an early day. It is difficult to tell what is the precise point in the mind of the petitioners or the particular remedy that they seek. Some assistance ought to be given, if possible, by the American authorities in Turkey.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be permitted, I will state that it seems to me at least that the passage of a resolution assuring the President that the Senate is interested in the matter and that it is its purpose to support him in any measure that he may take, as far as it can be done, would be a very great moral support to these people.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt that is true, but it must be borne in mind that the Senate did not choose to form its committees until within a few days.

Mr. HOAR. I do not say this by way of complaint, but only for information.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no doubt that attention will be given to the subject-matter as soon as possible.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ALDRICH. I present resolutions adopted at a large and important public meeting in Providence, R. I., praying Congress to recognize the belligerent rights of the Cuban revolutionists. I move that the petition be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of Claysville, Pa., favoring the intervention of civilized nations to prevent outrages upon Christians in Armenia; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of J. G. Allen and 25 other citizens of Jefferson County, Pa., and the petition of H. C. Fuller and 181 other citizens of Allegheny County, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. SQUIRE. I present a petition of the Board of Trade of Port Townsend, Wash., praying that an appropriation be made to be used in constructing coast defenses, representing that the cities of the Pacific Coast, especially those on Puget Sound, are in an utterly defenseless condition, and that the increasing population and growing commercial interests of the region require that larger appropriations be made by Congress for this purpose. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SQUIRE. I also present a petition on the same subject from the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Seattle, representing the defenseless condition of the seacoast in the State of Washington, embracing some 1,900 miles, and incidentally the unhappy condition of the other coast States of the American Union in this respect.

I move that the petition be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I present the petition of D. A. Hastings and 153 other citizens of Cheyenne, Wyo., praying for the passage by Congress of an act designed to secure a better grade of immigrants, such as the bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative WILLIAM A. STONE of Pennsylvania. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. I present a petition of the Indiana Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, touching the question of arbitration between nations. I ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To his excellency Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, to the Hon. Richard Olney, Secretary of State, and to the Senate and House of Representatives:

The delegated representatives of Indiana Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, embracing a membership of nearly 20,000 persons, respectfully represent that—

The Society of Friends has always been distinguished for its earnest advocacy of "peace on earth and good will to men" and for its testimony against all war. For this advocacy and this testimony many of our members in the past have suffered the loss of their property, others imprisonment and personal violence, and some have sacrificed their lives.

We have always urged upon individuals and nations the application of the benign principle of arbitration in all their disagreements, which, in the language of the joint resolution passed by Congress in Fourthmonth, 1890, "can not be adjusted by diplomatic agency."

Only a few years ago a delegation of Englishmen, representing 234 members of Parliament, proposed to the Congress of the United States that these two leading English-speaking nations should enter into an agreement to submit to arbitration all questions of difference that might arise between them; and we are surprised and grieved at the refusal of Great Britain to submit its dispute with Venezuela to arbitration, and that the reply of our Government and the President's message to Congress upon this subject should have aroused in both countries such an outburst of the war spirit.

We are, however, profoundly thankful that very soon the spirit of peace began to assert itself, first by the religious organizations and benevolent associations, then by commercial organizations, and now by the people, until the prevailing sentiment seems to be in opposition to war.

We respectfully but earnestly beseech our Government to cooperate with this sober and second thought of the people, and strive to avoid all measures calculated to provoke so unparalleled a calamity as a war with Great Britain.

And we would again urge upon our Government that the existing condition presents one of the strongest reasons for the adoption of an international agreement to refer all questions of controversy between these two nations to a court of arbitration.

By direction and on behalf of the Representative Meeting of Indiana Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends.

DANIEL LAWRENCE, Clerk.

RICHMOND, IND., Firstmonth 2, 1896.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

House joint resolution relating to the adjustment of the Perrine grant.

Congress approved July 7, 1838, and conditionally granted to one Henry Perrine and his associates; and

Whereas said Henry Perrine was killed by the Indians while living at Indian Key, and before he or his associates complied with the conditions of said grant; and

Whereas an act of Congress approved February 18, 1841, renewed the rights of said Henry Perrine to Mrs. Anna Perrine, the widow of the said Henry Perrine, and Sarah Ann Perrine, Hester M. S. Perrine, and Henry E. Whereas the said Mrs. Ann F. Perrine, Henry Perrine, Sarah Ann Perrine, Hester M. S. Perrine, and Henry E. Perrine have failed to comply with said conditions as expressed in said acts; and

Whereas said lands are at present occupied by a large and increasing number of industrious agricultural people, who desire to secure their said possessions as homesteads: Therefore,

Approved June 3, 1893.

STATE OF FLORIDA, Office Secretary of State, ss:

I, John L. Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of house joint resolution No. 6, relating to the adjustment of the Perrine grant, as appears on page 403 of the session laws of Florida, 1893, and as filed and of record in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida, at Tallahassee, the capital, this the 5th day of November, A. D. 1895.

JNO. L. CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CALL. I present the petition of Walter H. Browne and other settlers within the limits of what is known as the Perrine grant, in Dade County, Fla., together with sundry affidavits, praying for the restoration of the so-called Perrine grant in Florida to the public domain. I move that the petition and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WILSON presented a memorial of the legislature of the State of Washington, relative to the improvement of the Skagit River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the senate and house of representatives of the State of Washington, would respectfully represent: That

Whereas the Skagit is the largest river emptying into Puget Sound, and drains one of the most important sections of the State of Washington; and

Whereas said river is blocked by jams of timber carried down by floods which, besides impeding navigation, causes it in times of high water to back up and overflow the surrounding country, the richest and most fertile section in the State of Washington, causing widespread desolation and ruin; and

Whereas beside said jams there are also several sand bars near the mouth of said river which are a serious hindrance to commerce and navigation, and also in time of flood tend to cause the waters to back up and overflow the adjacent land; and

Whereas the farmers of that extensive region known as the Skagit Valley have been to great expense in building dikes and levees, and have found that they can not in that manner protect their lands from overflow until said jams and bars are removed; and

Whereas the inundation of the Skagit Valley in the year 1894, which resulted in a loss of at least half a million dollars to the inhabitants thereof, was in great measure caused by said jams and sand bars; and

Whereas said jams are each year increasing in size, thereby threatening impending ruin to a large tract of country and pointing out the necessity of speedy action to avert the same; and

Whereas the removal of said jams and bars would be of great benefit to the public at large: Therefore,

Your memorialists, the legislature of the State of Washington, do most earnestly petition your honorable bodies to include in the next river and harbor bill an appropriation for the purpose of removing said jams and making the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates of the cost of removing said sand bars and deepening the channel where necessary.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Passed the house January 28, 1895.

ELLIS MORRISON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Passed by the senate, February 6, 1895.

F. H. LUCE,
President of the Senate.

(Indorsed:) House memorial No. 6. To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Washington:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, James H. Price, secretary of state of the State of Washington, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of the House memorial No. 6 with the original now on file and of record in this office, and find the same to be a true and perfect copy thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State of Washington.

Done at Olympia this 15th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1895.

J. H. PRICE, Secretary of State.

Mr. WILSON. I present a petition of sundry citizens of Skagit County, in the State of Washington, relative to the same subject. As the matter is very important, I ask that the petition be also printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The undersigned citizens of Skagit County, State of Washington, believe that a fair consideration of the conditions surrounding the Skagit River and tributary country will induce such liberal action on the part of Congress as will meet the requirements of our present environments and prevent any disaster in the future such as we have suffered in the past.

Attached to this memorial are statistics compiled with considerable care, and which are known to be generally correct. We commend them to your careful consideration as supporting the statements in this memorial.

In order that your honorable bodies may better understand the importance of this matter, we invite your attention to the present and constantly increasing commerce, foreign and domestic, of Puget Sound; and we also invite your examination of the geography of this immediate section and the character and quantity of our products.

The surveys already made, and the map attached hereto, sustain the statement that there are tributary to Skagit River about 40 townships, or over 1,400 square miles of land. Of this large area about one-fourth is strictly agricultural, about the same quantity is coal and mineral, and the remainder is timber land. A large proportion of this country is now, and all of it when developed must be, largely dependent for its commerce on this important river. It is navigable for light-draft steamers from its mouth to Sauk City, a distance of about 70 miles, and at some seasons to Marblemount, 15 miles above Sauk City.

An examination of the map of Washington will show the rise, course, length, and disappearance of the Skagit in the broader and deeper waters of Puget Sound. The river is spanned by three large public bridges, each more than 700 feet in length, and with revolving draws more than 200 feet, for the passage of steamers engaged in commerce in the river.

A system of dikes extends on both sides of the river from its mouth to and above the village of Avon, about 15 miles; and, connecting with the main system, are other dikes running across the level country toward La Conner and other points to the north and south of the river.

This diking system has been rendered necessary by the filling in of the bed and mouths of the river from causes which will be explained, and ought to be remedied.

The system already constructed and maintained embraces 158 miles of dikes, and has cost in money and labor expended in construction the large sum of $385,000. All of this has been expended by owners of land in the Skagit Valley, including the residents of towns liable to inundation.

The maintenance of the dikes is now provided for in the laws of our State, but the tax levied under these laws is confined to the lands immediately affected, and aggregates about $12,000 annually. We are confronted by the fact that each year these dikes must be wider and higher, because the bed of the river is constantly filling in, and no matter how well our work may be done there is an absolute certainty that every large freshet in the river will, at weak points, break the dikes and overflow and for miles inundate the surrounding country.

Before the mouth of the river began to be obstructed the accumulating waters of the greatest freshets did not overflow the banks. A channel varying in depth from 12 to 20 feet was a sufficient outlet for all the water that passed in swift torrents from the mountains and highlands of the north and east. Resolute and industrious settlers reduced to cultivation the fertile lands of the Skagit Valley, and made subservient to man the thousands of acres that were a few years since inhabited by the beaver and other animals whose pelts excited the cupidity of the hunter or the Indian. We do not believe that the famous lands of the Nile or any other in the world are more fertile and productive. For years these lands, without fertilizers, have yielded an average of 100 bushels of oats to the acre, and the hay crop on the higher lands will average 4 tons. Fruits and vegetables grow in profusion, and their flavor and richness are unsurpassed. But all of this has involved a large expenditure of money and unremitting toil and patience on the part of our people.

Unless the Congress of the United States shall make an appropriation sufficient to clear out the mouth of the Skagit River, a very large proportion of this country must be abandoned.

The main channel or mouth of the river is now closed from an accumulation of logs, driftwood, and sediment. Where a few years ago steamers could safely navigate in 15 feet of water persons can now walk from one bank of the river to the other on logs or other obstructions. The only entrance from the Sound into the Skagit is by way of a small slough, narrow and unsafe, and through which steamers at high tide can find only about 6 feet of water. The north fork of the river, through which navigation was formerly maintained, is now practically closed, and no boat can traverse its waters. The south fork is only navigable from Fir, where it flows through and becomes a part of Steamboat Slough heretofore mentioned.

Various reasons may be assigned for the obstruction and closing of the two mouths of the river, but until boom companies were permitted to place obstructions in the river, and to locate their booms and appliances near the mouths, there was no trouble about overflows.

Thirty million feet of lumber in logs is a fair estimate of the quantity that for each year and for many years has been rafted or floated down the Skagit. Most of it has been caught in the pockets of the booms and appliances, and in that way an immense number of large trees, stumps, and other material drifted by the current have found lodgment along the banks, in the channel, and in the mouths of the river.

The tides ebb and flow from the Sound and ocean, and thus the obstructions have become permanent, and each year have increased in area, until the river no longer discharges its waters in quantity through its natural and original channels.

It is manifest, therefore, that when the stream is swollen and finds no outlet sufficient for the increased volume, that the waters are backed and rise rapidly and with increasing force against the dikes bordering on and raising higher the banks of the Skagit. When such condition arises it becomes only a question of a short time how long the dikes can withstand the enormous pressure, how soon the water will overflow all the surrounding country and destroy all that the labor and patience and capital of our people have accomplished.

We call your attention to the fact that since November, 1892, the floods in the Skagit have four times swept over the banks, broken the dikes, and inundated the surrounding country. The destruction of property by the overflow in November, 1892, and January, 1895, was not very great, but the overflow in May, 1894, and June of that year entailed a direct loss on the people of the Skagit Valley, as shown by estimates attached hereto, approximating one-half million of dollars.

The town of Mount Vernon was entirely flooded, small boats and rafts navigated the streets, and the people were driven from their homes for safety to the hills. The damage to public and private property was great, and the suffering from exposure and sickness was distressing. All of these overflows have been caused by the ponding of the water in the river, resulting from the obstruction and closing the channels of the North and South Forks, above mentioned. There is comparatively little danger of loss from the overflow in the winter, but in May and June, when the crops are most promising, the genial weather and hot suns melt the snow in the mountains and the creeks and small rivers and mountain streams empty their waters into the Skagit, which sweeps down with terrible fury, completing its destructive mission.

It is a well-known fact in this session, and the records of the War Department show, that some years ago, and when Washington was a Territory, a large and formidable jam of logs, trees, and other débris had collected about 10 miles from the mouth of the river, and near where Mount Vernon now stands, entirely obstructing navigation. At a great expenditure of money and labor the people resident in the Skagit Valley removed the jam, so that steamers passed up and down the river in safety. Under the license of Territorial law, and with the knowledge of the officers of this great Government, obstructions known as log booms have been placed in the river and near the mouths, since which time the difficulties and dangers that now surround us have arisen and been allowed to continue.

Under the law the General Government has ample jurisdiction in all matters affecting navigable waters, and we can only account for its failure to exercise that jurisdiction in this instance from the neglect to bring the matter to your attention and to press it with the zeal that its importance demands.

The earnest efforts of our people to protect ourselves and the temporary relief that has been afforded by the construction and maintenance of our diking system may to some extent account for the neglect that has heretofore surrounded this destructive nuisance, but the situation has now assumed such grave consequences that it can not longer be overlooked or permitted to continue.

Until the obstructions in the river and at its mouth are removed the further construction and maintenance of our diking system can not protect us; until the channel of the river shall be restored as it was before obstructions were permitted to be made and to stand, the navigation of the Skagit must at all times be uncertain and dangerous, and in a very few years must cease altogether.

We do not believe that an intelligent examination into this matter will show that its importance has been overestimated by us; nor is this the first time that we have endeavored to bring it to your attention. Memorials from our people have already been forwarded to Congress, praying some action on behalf of this section, and at the last session of our legislature a joint memorial of that body was unanimously passed for the same object.

Thoroughly impressed with the justice of this appeal, we respectfully submit it to your good judgment, and earnestly hope for an early and favorable consideration by your honorable bodies, and by such other authorities as shall have this matter in immediate charge.

Mr. TURPIE introduced a bill (S. 1387) authorizing an increase of pensions in certain cases; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. TURPIE. The object of the bill is to increase the rate of pension now allowed for total deafness from $30 a month to $50 a month. The beneficiaries of the proposed enactment are not very numerous. I do not believe that the disability of total deafness has ever received the rate which it should receive as such. The condition of a person made totally deaf in both ears is one of the most unfortunate incapacities. The condition of one born deaf is much better, much to be preferred. In the case of a person born deaf the senses are reenforced by the touch, by the eye; the whole body acts as an ear to supply the defect; but in the case of a soldier who labors under such a disability incurred at a mature period of life it is too late for him to receive these betterments conferred by the kindly remedial resources of nature.

The present rate for total disability for deafness in both ears is below that of the rate for the amputation of a limb, yet we see persons with the loss of a limb pursuing ordinary vocations in every department of life. So nice are now the artificial appliances that frequently the loss of a limb is not missed even by intimate acquaintances until it is expressly stated. But the person who has become deaf, not having been born so, no matter what may be his skill, will find himself greatly embarrassed in seeking employment. Of course he can learn the sign language, but the sign language is not a vernacular. In the unspoken language very few become expert. Or he may use the tablet and pencil instead, but most employers have no patience with such a method of communication. It is extremely difficult for a person totally deaf to find employment of any sort, and when he does find it he must work for small wages on account of his disability.

There is an imaginary misery, too, connected with the condition which is hardly less than the actual or real disadvantages to which I have called the attention of the Senate. In the case of a person who is made deaf by service in the Army or Navy, although the external auditory nerves are destroyed, the internal sensations remain, and the brain is haunted by apparitions of sound, with ghosts of sound, so that the fancy becomes the receptacle for all the noises which the air carries. It is a very terrible condition, and one disturbing and embarrassing the person laboring under it to a great extent in whatever vocation he is so fortunate as to find employment.

I hope the Committee on Pensions, to whom I now move that the bill be referred, will give to it very early and favorable consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred, with the accompanying paper, to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 1394) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. E. S. Kelly; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1395) granting a pension to A. M. Bliss; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1396) for the relief of Robert McCardell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1397) for the relief of Patrick J. Sullivan, John B. Dillon, Jeremiah McCarthy, and Bartholomew Shea, of Newport, R. I.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1398) for the relief of Maj. Samuel T. Cushing; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BAKER introduced a bill (S. 1399) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls to certain posts of the Grand Army of the Republic; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1400) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to Junction City, Kans., a certain tract of land for park purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 1402) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Littleton, in the State of New Hampshire; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. KYLE introduced a bill (S. 1403) granting honorably discharged soldiers of the late civil war privileges under the land laws of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 41) to revive the grade of Lieutenant-General in the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 42) providing for the sale and disposition of United States bonds; which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

[Joint resolution (S. R. 42) providing for the sale and disposition of United States bonds.]

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That hereafter, in any sale or disposition of United States bonds, the same shall be first offered to the public for a period of not less than twenty days, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be sold to the highest bidder, in case such bids, or any of them, are satisfactory.

Mr. ELKINS. Inasmuch as the House of Representatives has incorporated in the bill which is now pending in the Senate the method or plan of advertising bond sales, thereby virtually declaring against such sales under private contract, and inasmuch as the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury have also recently adopted the plan of advertising and selling United States bonds to the people, it seems to me that the time is at hand when we may with propriety enact such a policy into a law and make it a part of the law of the land.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HANSBROUGH introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 43) directing the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act making appropriations for the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds, and for the printing and distribution of farmers' bulletins; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 44) making an appropriation for the rebuilding of the old ship Constitution; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. VILAS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 45) to provide for the disposition of income-tax returns, statements, and records relative thereto; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

SILVER COINAGE AND COIN REDEMPTION.

Mr. PEFFER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2904) to maintain and protect the coin redemption fund, and to authorize the issue of certificates of indebtedness to meet temporary deficiencies of revenue; which was ordered to be printed.

RESTORATION OF PROTECTIVE DUTIES.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I offer an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 2749) to temporarily increase revenue to meet the expenses of Government and provide against a deficiency. The amendment proposes to restore protective duties on raw materials of the South and agricultural products in accordance with the provisions of the act of 1890. I ask that the amendment be printed and that it lie on the table. To-morrow I shall ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to submit some remarks in relation to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

THE CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk. Let it be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas, in order to complete the building for the Library of Congress within the time fixed for that event, it is now necessary that certain work yet to be done should be placed under contract without delay: Therefore

Be it resolved, That Gen. Thomas Lincoln Casey, the officer in charge of the erection of said building be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract for said work to be paid for from time to time as Congress shall appropriate the required amount of money: Provided, That the entire expenditure on said building shall not exceed the limit of cost already fixed by law for the same.

Mr. VOORHEES. Under the circumstances I will ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. I presume it needs no explanation. It explains itself. In order to complete this great work in view by the time which it is expected, it is necessary now that certain contracts be made for work in advance of the time when it is possible for appropriations to be made. To wait for the appropriations would delay the completion of the Library building for six months perhaps—I do not know how long, but it would delay it unnecessarily—and inasmuch as this work is in the hands of so safe and capable an officer, I venture to ask Congress to extend to him the authority to make contracts now and to pay for the work when the appropriations are made.

Mr. HARRIS. I should be glad to have the Senator from Indiana state about what time it is thought the building will be completed and ready for occupation.

Mr. VOORHEES. The building can be completed twelve months from this date if this authority is given. I make this statement upon the highest possible authority.

Mr. CULLOM. I inquire whether the time which was expected to be consumed in the construction of the building will not expire next spring—the six years or seven years?

Mr. VOORHEES. One may state the difference between January and March if he desires. One is winter and the other is spring. With this authority given to General Casey to make contracts now, he can have the building ready for occupancy a year from the present time. Otherwise there is no certainty as to when it will be completed.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me just one word?

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. The building will be completed within the time and within the appropriation.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Maine. Of course it will be completed within the time, with quite a margin, if we give Colonel Casey authority to go on now without waiting for the delayed appropriation. It will be completed quite largely within the limits fixed by law—more so than I desired.

Mr. HALE. Is the resolution reported from the Senator's committee?

Mr. VOORHEES. It is submitted by me this morning, and not reported by the committee.

Mr. HALE. Is it not a fact that General Casey (and it is an unprecedented case) expects to complete the great building, all its ornamentation and everything, and to have a surplus of from $60,000 to $80,000?

Mr. VOORHEES. About $80,000.

Mr. HALE. A thing never known before in any building built at public expense.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, yes; it happened in regard to one of the Smithsonian buildings under Mr. Langley. It has happened in one or two cases.

Mr. HALE. I did not know of any other case.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator if there is not much work yet to be done, and is there not danger that the estimates of the engineer will be exceeded?

Mr. VOORHEES. None whatever. There is certain tiling work on the second floor yet to be done, and some other items that I could go into if I had General Casey's memorandum, which he furnished me.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that he will not accomplish his purpose by the resolution now at the desk. A concurrent resolution will not be sufficient authority for the engineer in charge to make the contracts. A joint resolution to be signed by the President is necessary.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will make it a joint resolution. I was hasty; in fact, I prepared the resolution here, though I will not hesitate to state that I prepared it after full conference with General Casey. As a matter of course, I take no such step without him, and upon the specific points given to me. But the resolution can be put in proper form, I will say to the Senator from Iowa. I will have it done.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be changed to a joint resolution.

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes.

The resolution was changed to a joint resolution (S. R. 40) providing for the completion of the Congressional Library building.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be regarded as having been read twice. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Indiana?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. PEFFER. I move to amend the joint resolution by adding as an additional proviso:

Provided further, That the labor required in said work shall be employed and paid for by the day at the usual wages for such work.

Mr. VOORHEES. While I might support an amendment of that sort, I hope it will not be considered in connection with this matter and that the Senate will vote it down. It is not needed now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the joint resolution:

Provided further, That the labor required in said work shall be employed and paid for by the day at the usual wages for such work.

Mr. VOORHEES. The work is being done that way anyhow. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. It will only embarrass the subject I have in view.

Mr. PEFFER. I do not in the least desire to embarrass the passage of the joint resolution, but, as is usual in all such cases where work is contracted for by one person or a firm of persons, the men who perform the labor are employed in about the same way. It leaves the average workman at a disadvantage, and the constant tendency is to depress the wages. In these hard times I think that the men who do the work ought to have the same wages, especially when the Government of the United States is one of the parties.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORTRAIT OF ALLEN G. THURMAN.

Mr. VOORHEES. I submit a resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase the portrait of the late Allen G. Thurman painted by J. H. Witt, and now hanging in the Judiciary Committee room of the Senate, and to pay to William L. Woods, its present owner, the sum of $250 for the same, said payment to be made out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate and upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to submit a suggestion before the reference. After the word "portrait" I suggest to add "with a suitable frame." I understand that the estimate involves the probable framing of the picture.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wanted to see the Senator from Massachusetts this morning on the subject. I think the portrait is exceedingly cheap at $300 with a frame, but to avoid the frame question I put it at $250, and think it very small.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to be niggardly in dealing with artists——

Mr. VOORHEES. I am sure the Senator does not.

Mr. HOAR. But I was told by the young gentleman who brought the picture into the Judiciary Committee room that the owner desired to sell it for $200; so that $250 would provide also for a valuable frame. I presume that a suitable frame could be procured for $25. I do not think the price should be increased.

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator from Massachusetts stands upon it, I concede it. I want to say, however, that I knew a case where persons came here so destitute with a couple of valuable pictures that they offered them for $1,000 to the Corcoran Art Gallery, and I afterwards took great pleasure in paying those women $6,000 for the pictures, because they were worth it. I did not take advantage of their necessities. I do not know whether this is a case of that kind or not. However, I am inclined to think it is. Does the Senator from Massachusetts desire the amendment? If so, I shall put it in.

Mr. HOAR. No; I will not insist on it.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Library.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE ON COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. SQUIRE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to appoint a messenger for the Committee on Coast Defenses, who shall be paid at the rate of $1,440 per annum from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, until otherwise provided for.

REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT IN ALABAMA.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer a resolution, which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators shall be appointed to make inquiry whether there is, and for the last two years and a half has been, a republican form of government in the State of Alabama; and to inquire into the manner of the election of United States Senators and Members of Congress from said State, and whether there was any fraud, force, intimidation, or other unfairness in the elections in said State during that period, and to inquire into the election of State senators and members of the legislature, in so far as their election may have affected the election of a United States Senator, and into all other matters and things in any manner pertaining to or affecting the political autonomy of said State, and the status of its membership in the United States Senate and the Congress of the United States, and the fairness of the elections by which the selection of the United States Senators and Members of Congress was brought about. Said committee may sit as a full committee or by subcommittees, as it may elect, and in vacation or during the sessions of Congress, and at such times and places in said State or elsewhere as it may see proper, and said committee, or any subcommittee, shall have power to send for persons and papers, employ a stenographer, swear and examine witnesses, take and report testimony and evidence; and said committee shall make due report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the law the resolution should first go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I think it should first go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and be referred by them to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. However, whatever the Chair rules will be satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

JUDGMENTS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. QUAY. I offer a resolution which I send to the desk, for which I ask immediate consideration. I will say that I am not responsible for the terms of the resolution. I believe it is intended to bring to the attention of the Senate the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of mail carriers.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate, in the usual form, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, not including those for which provision was made at the last session of Congress, and which require an appropriation for their payment.

CLAIMS OF B. H. HENRY AND OTHERS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate a copy of the report and accompanying documents of a special agent of the United States heretofore sent to the Fiji Islands to investigate the claims of B. H. Henry, of Oregon, and other American citizens, for compensation for certain lands alleged to have been owned by them in said islands and claimed to have been appropriated by the British Government; which report is now on file in the Department of State.

POSTAL SAVINGS NOTES.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 1401) to provide for a popular loan through postal savings notes; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to make a brief statement in reference to this bill.

Mr. President, I noticed in the morning newspapers a message to the American people, communicated through the New York World, dated London, January 6, and signed N. M. Rothschild & Sons. A paragraph of this quotation is as follows:

Until this boundary question is arranged we do not believe that either the European public or capitalists will take many American bonds for investment.

What the Messrs. Rothschild mean by a settlement of the boundary question is that America will agree to Lord Salisbury's proposition that we shall allow, without objection, Great Britain to take substantially all of Venezuela which she needs, and refer to arbitration the question whether she shall have the remainder or not. In this view of the situation, it seems to me that it is time for the American people and the American Government to see whether they can not raise among themselves the money that is necessary to carry on the Government, to see whether they can not provide from their own resources the gold that is necessary for the redemption fund in the Treasury. I am satisfied that this can be easily accomplished by a suitable appeal to the people of the United States. I fear that the hundred-million-dollar gold loan which has been recently advertised will not result in many subscriptions to the small bonds by the people. They are called upon to bid and to fix a price themselves, and then wait until they know whether the Secretary of the Treasury has or has not accepted their bids.

Mr. President, we do not want a popular loan like that. We want something that shall be immediate in its operation; we want a loan that will allow not only the rich people of this country, but the poor people of the country to come to the front and to pour their gifts into the Treasury for the national needs and the public welfare.

The first section of my bill reads:

That any person may deposit at any money-order post-office the sum of $100 and receive therefor a receipt duly dated and authenticated in the following form:

"Received of A B the sum of $100, for which there is due to him or his order a postal-savings note drawing interest from this date."

There are only 25 words in that receipt. Their issue may be authorized by telegraphic order from the Postmaster-General. The postmasters in all the money-order offices of this country can begin to receive the people's offerings to-morrow. All they have to do is to sign and issue a dated receipt:

Received of A B the sum of $100, for which there is due to him or his order a postal-savings note drawing interest from this date.

That gets the money into the Treasury and puts it on interest immediately. What is to be issued in return for this receipt?

SEC. 2. That upon the presentation of a postal-savings receipt at any designated depository of the United States within the State where the receipt was issued, there shall be issued in the place thereof a postal-savings note duly authenticated in the form following, to wit:

I ask the attention of the Senate to the extreme simplicity of the postal-savings note.

For value received the United States of America promise to pay to ——— ———, or order, the sum of $100 in lawful money in one year from ———, with $3 interest thereon; and in case of delay of presentation the interest paid shall be $6.10 after the end of the second year, $9.30 after the end of the third year, $12.60 after the end of the fourth year, and $16 after the end of the fifth year; and thereafter, in addition to the sum of $116, there shall be paid $4 for each year's further delay of presentation.

Mr. President, to carry out this law after these sums of money have been deposited in the postal money-order offices there is nothing to do but for the Secretary of the Treasury to print the postal notes and send them to the designated depositories of the United States. The note during the first year is worth $100; at the end of the first year it is worth $103; at the end of the second year it is worth $106.10; that is to say, the interest is compounded; 10 cents is paid for one year's interest on $3, and so the interest is compounded during the five years—$9.30 at the end of the third year; $12.60 at the end of the fourth year, and $16 at the end of the fifth year. If the interest had not been compounded the amount would be $115—five times three—at the end of the fifth year, but 1 per cent has been added by way of compounding the interest, and at the end of five years the note is worth $116. Thereafter it is worth $4 for every year's delay of presentation, and that $4 is 3½ per cent interest upon the $116. That runs until the holder of the note shall see fit to realize upon it.

Mr. President, I can not conceive of a security more admirable than this for the people of this country who wish to invest their savings. The difficulty I have noticed in most of the postal savings bank bills is that the system is elaborate and cumbersome. There is a proposal that men shall deposit 10 cents, 20 cents, 30 cents, 50 cents, and when the amount of $5 is reached then interest accounts are kept, postal cards and bank books are issued. The Government will have to provide in such a case a very elaborate machinery to avail itself of the savings of the people for the benefit of the Treasury; whereas here there is nothing in the world necessary except for the postmaster to issue these receipts and for the Treasury to issue through the designated depositories of the United States these postal notes, which bear interest and are payable at the end of each year at any time after the first year, which bear 3 per cent interest, compounded during five years, and which after the end of five years bear 3½ per cent interest until they come in and are canceled and other notes are issued in their stead.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. What kind of money do I understand the people are to pay for the postal notes?

Mr. CHANDLER. So far as I have read the bill already, they would pay in lawful money. The Senator will hear the whole bill in a moment, and then I shall be very happy to have him ask me any other questions.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well; I will wait until the Senator finishes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I say that is a simple system. It does not require any printing, except the printing of the receipts and the printing of the postal notes. It does not require any great expense at the money-order offices and very little expense in connection with the designated depositories of the United States.

These postal notes will soon become as popular as the compound-interest notes of the United States were, as every Senator who remembers those days will recollect. They circulated as money for a time, the interest began to accumulate upon them, and they were held for investment, until at last they were redeemed.

I continue to read the bill:

Such note may be issued with the name of the depositor inserted, or it may be issued in blank, as above described, and any holder may afterwards insert his name in the blank space.

That is to say, the system which was adopted in the case of the 7.30 bond is followed. They were issued in blank, payable in blank or on order. As long as the blank was not filled they passed from hand to hand like demand paper. Whenever the holder of the note chose to write his name in it, then it became negotiable paper and had to be indorsed before it was redeemed.

Now, I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the next clause of the bill, which reads:

In case any deposit is made in gold coin, the note may, if the depositor so desires, be made payable in gold coin as to the dollars which may become due thereon.

This feature of the system may or may not be adopted, as Congress sees fit, but it seems to me that there is gold enough in this country to supply the needs of the Treasury if you will give every man who has $100 in gold, or who can obtain $100 in gold the privilege of putting it into the Treasury and receiving one of these notes and receiving his gold back again when the note becomes due.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether there is any legal distinction between the form of the notes for which he provides in his bill and the issuance of ordinary bonds? Is there any legal distinction in the force or effect of the two forms of obligations?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a simplification of the Government's promise to pay; it is the postal savings note, which specifies upon its face exactly what that note is worth before the end of the first year, exactly what it is worth after the end of the next year, exactly what it is worth after the end of each year for five years, and exactly what it is worth at the end of each year thereafter.

Mr. ALLEN. Still, after all, its legal effect is the same as any other national obligation or bond?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is borrowing money.

Mr. ALLEN. Its legal effect is precisely the same as that of a Government bond?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is borrowing money on interest.

Mr. ALLEN. It is an interest-bearing obligation of the Government?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. How long, in the Senator's judgment, would it be until the banks would have those notes gathered up and out of circulation?

Mr. CHANDLER. This is a popular loan. Those notes would go out on the prairies of the Senator's State; they would take the place of the gold which is hoarded, and stay there until the end of the five years, and they would stay there a year or two longer, and then come in and be renewed, if the Government wishes to renew them.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the little notes which were issued during the war to circulate as money very soon disappeared and were hoarded in the banks. Would not that be the result as to the notes under the Senator's bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. Whenever the holder of one of these $100 notes needs the money on it, he will get it, and of course he will sell it to his neighbor or the nearest bank.

Mr. ALLEN. Just one more question, and then I shall cease interrupting the Senator. Does the Senator regard the present call of the Secretary of the Treasury as in the line of a popular loan, when there are only four or five places where the bonds can be subscribed for?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not regard the notice which the Secretary of the Treasury has recently issued announcing a popular loan as in satisfactory form. I am grateful to the Secretary for heeding the voice of the people, as uttered in the Senate the other day by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and other tribunes of the people, to the extent of offering a popular loan even in form; but I do not regard it as a wise method of testing the willingness of the people to supply money to the Treasury. I do regard the bill which I hold in my hand as the wisest and simplest possible method, and like most other Senators who draw bills, I regard it as an absolute, complete, and perfect panacea for existing conditions. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator suggest why the President and Secretary of the Treasury abandoned their purpose to make this loan through a syndicate and adopted a form of call by which bids could be made for bonds at only four or five different places in the United States?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will not undertake to criticise any further the recent announcement of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is not entirely satisfactory to me. It is, however, something of a concession. If the Senator will help get this bill through, the people can pour their money into the coffers of the Government through the post-offices of the country, and can begin to-morrow to do it.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator please, if I was in favor of the issuance of Government bonds or interest-bearing obligations I should pursue the very course the Senator is now pursuing, but I am opposed to the issuance of anything by this Government which bears interest.

Mr. CHANDLER. I presume the Senator did not think that either I or the Senate was unaware of that fact. I did not propose this as a sovereign remedy which would meet the approval of those persons who do not believe that the Government should borrow money at all or pay any interest on its loans.

I read further:

Deposits may also be made in sums of $50 and the receipts and notes shall be issued specifying one-half the sums above mentioned.

The notes issued under this act shall be redeemable at the option of the United States, in whole or in part, in the order of their issue after five years from their dates upon six months' notice given by public advertisement, at the end of which time interest thereon shall cease.

There is only one other simple section. The whole case is in two propositions: First, the deposit of sums of money in fifty-dollar and in hundred-dollar quantities in the money-order post-offices and in the issue of postal notes that state upon their face what they are worth, and then this clause:

SEC. 3. The Postmaster-General and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to make rules and regulations for the preparation and issue of the postal savings receipts and postal-savings notes authorized by this act, for the safe custody, disposition, and use of the proceeds thereof, and for the payment of the notes when the same may be presented. They may also limit the number of postal savings receipts which shall be issued to one individual, and may at any time suspend the issue of such receipts, according to their discretion.

This bill will make us independent of foreign countries, it will make us independent of the Messrs. Rothschild, who serve notice on us to-day, and it will enable us to pay to the people of this country the interest money on their small savings, which will aggregate hundreds of millions of dollars which we now pay to foreign bankers.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. If I understand the Senator's bill, it allows these postal notes to be paid for in "lawful money," but permits a person who may happen to have a hundred dollars in gold and sees fit to deposit it and get postal notes with special favors attached. But little gold would go into the Treasury under this bill. The difficulty with the Administration is not that they want revenue, they say, but because they need gold to redeem greenbacks and to pay the coin obligations of the Government. Will the Senator's bill remedy that? The executive department of the Government says it is absolutely necessary to pay in gold under their construction of the law.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not sure that it will, but I say to the Senator from North Carolina and to the Senator from Nebraska that unless they propose to exclude the use of gold entirely as a part of the money of the United States there certainly can be no harm in allowing a citizen who has $100 in gold, or $50 in gold, to deposit that in the Treasury, and promise to pay him back within five or seven years gold in return for the gold which he deposited. It is not a case of long bonds—I call the Senator's attention to that fact—but a case of short-time postal savings notes, which, if the gold is deposited for them, we pay in gold when the note is redeemed.

Mr. BUTLER. I want the Senator to understand that I much prefer his plan to the Administration plan, but I should like to get the information I have asked for.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then, can I put the Senator down in favor of this bill?

Mr. BUTLER. No, and I will explain to you why not in a few words. I am opposed to increasing the interest-bearing debt of the Government. I would prefer to see expenses reduced and taxes lowered. The Senator just now said that the Administration had made a concession in response to the wish of the people for a popular loan. If it were in accordance with the people's demand there would be no bonds issued at all. But the point I wish to get at is, does the Senator approve the construction of the law made by the Secretary of the Treasury under which he redeems the greenbacks in gold and pays the coin obligations of the Government in gold; and if so, does he expect enough gold to come into the Treasury through his bill to meet the requirements of the Government?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, Mr. President, I believe if we will take gold in small sums from the people of this country and promise to pay them back in gold any time after the first, second, or third year, and so on, that this Government will get all the gold it wants, and that the necessities of the Treasury will be wholly relieved by the adoption of this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the Senator is mistaken about that; but if we are going to have a loan at all it ought to be a "popular loan" in fact. But few people can raise $100, and only a very few can raise that much gold. If we are going to have a popular loan, I would like to ask the Senator whether it would not be better to make the sums smaller, like the popular loans in France, which were made small enough for every peasant to be a holder of Government securities. In my State there are a few gold pieces, but not as much as one gold piece to a family, and when they have any at all it is in the old stockings, and is saved simply as a souvenir—a kind of curiosity. I know several farmers in my State who might raise $5 in gold. If we are to issue more bonds (the necessity for which I deny), then let them be in $5 and multiples of $5, so every man who has that much gold can purchase them. And also let the price at which they will be sold be made known, so every man will know how to purchase.

I do not want to interrupt the Senator further than to say that if the construction of the law by the Secretary of the Treasury is correct, and if the Senator indorses that, then I do not think this bill will meet the needs of the Government. The first thing is to decide whether or not their construction of the law is right; that is, whether or not they are justified in redeeming greenbacks, paying coin obligations in gold only. That is the main question and it should be settled at once. I repeat that if the Secretary of the Treasury would obey the law there would be no necessity to borrow gold or money of any kind. The President and the Secretary are purposely making it necessary to pile up this debt. Congress can put a stop to this wrong and do it now. Let us promptly pass a law prohibiting the further issue of bonds without further authority of Congress.

Mr. CHANDLER. I repeat I have not introduced this bill as one likely to be satisfactory to those Senators who do not believe in borrowing money and paying interest on it; whose remedy is to first coin all the silver in the Treasury and pay our debts out of that; second, to set the printing presses going and print all the obligations of the Government that are issued without interest, and deal with the national emergency in that way. This is the simplest possible form of taking the people's money for the needs of the Government, and I commend it to the careful attention of Senators.

I ask to have the bill referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, but I give notice that I shall move it as an amendment to the financial bill which was reported this morning from the Committee on Finance.

The bill was read the second time by its title.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think that bill ought to go to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire requested its reference to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. Is there objection to that reference? The Chair hears none, and it is so referred.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall not object to that reference now, but when the bill comes back from that committee I shall ask that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHANDLER. I beg to assure the Senator that if this bill is simply dealt with by an ordinary committee of the Senate, like the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, it would never receive a moment's consideration by the Senate unless referred to the Finance Committee, of which the Senator is an honored member.

Mr. ALDRICH. I supposed from the nature of the remarks submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire that he expected to pass the bill this afternoon.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should be very glad to have that done, but if it has to go to a committee at all it will certainly have to pass the scrutiny of the Senator's committee.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. I desired to do so before he took his seat, but I was not fortunate enough to be enabled to secure recognition. I wanted to ask him a question in regard to a statement he made at the opening of his speech, not in reference to the financial details of his bill. I understood the Senator to make the statement——

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will let us get the routine morning business transacted.

Mr. LODGE. I simply wish to proceed in order on the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that the whole debate on the introduction of the bill was, as the Chair thinks, out of order. The bill has been referred, and is not now, in any form, before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. That was because I was not fortunate enough to secure the President's eye. I was standing before the Senator from New Hampshire took his seat, and I appealed to the Chair for recognition on that matter, but was unable to secure it, and it was through no fault of mine that I was not recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was unfortunate in not seeing the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I am quite aware that the whole debate was proceeding by unanimous consent, as most of the Senate debates do. They are almost always out of order, except by unanimous consent. I saw no reason why I should be discriminated against after half a dozen Senators had taken part in the discussion on the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire, quite properly, as I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not sought to discriminate against the Senator. He has recognized the Senator, but the Chair has suggested that the whole debate is not in accordance with the rules of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I am quite aware of that. Few debates are.

Mr. ALLEN. I object to further debate on this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska objects to further debate.

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: If there is no other morning business at this moment, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that I may now put the question to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] with reference to what he said about his bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to propound a question to the Senator from New Hampshire in reference to the discussion of a bill introduced by that Senator. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. LODGE. A loan of the United States is a measure of the United States, and into the letter the Senator from New Hampshire has read about the loan is imported a question of the boundary dispute with England in Venezuela, which is a matter of open controversy between the two Governments at this moment. We have seen other efforts to substitute private individuals for the officers of the United States charged with the care of our foreign relations by appeals to persons conspicuous in foreign governments for their opinions. We have also seen a similar movement by the New York Chamber of Commerce, a very eminent and honorable body, headed by a distinguished citizen of German birth, to take charge of the diplomatic affairs of the United States.

Mr. President, I think the Government of the United States, duly organized in all its branches, is perfectly competent to deal with affairs affecting the welfare of the country; and as the Senator from New Hampshire has read this letter from a firm of bankers and great money lenders, one of whom at least is a member of the House of Lords and therefore within the words of the statute, I desire to ask him whether he does not think that an interference with the measures of the Government, and whether all those letters were not attempts to throw doubt on the credit of the Government; whether they were not intended to bring in the influences of foreign bankers in order to discredit the Government loan and the Government bonds even before they are issued, to force us from the position which we now occupy, and to try to make the Government more than ever dependent on a syndicate of bankers? I ask the Senator whether what he read does not come within that statute?

Mr. CHANDLER. Unquestionably the Senator from Massachusetts has correctly stated the law and has properly applied it, provided the telegrams sent during the last two or three weeks by Mr. Joseph Pulitzer, the editor of the New York World, were sent to foreign governments or to any officer or agent thereof. That is undoubtedly true in reference to the telegram of Mr. Pulitzer to the Prince of Wales. He made a direct appeal by public telegram to the heir apparent to the British throne on a public question that made the relations between the two countries acute. He appealed to him in a sense which was derogatory to the sovereignty of the United States and contrary to the statute which the Senator from Massachusetts has read.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me? I listened to the language of the statute. It applies to citizens of the United States doing the things therein mentioned. I would inquire if Mr. Pulitzer is a citizen of the United States or the subject of some country of Europe?

Mr. CHANDLER. He was a Hungarian originally. I think he has been naturalized.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly he is a citizen of the United States, because he has been a member of Congress.

Mr. CHANDLER. All the telegrams sent by the editor of the World to the officers of the English Government in reference to the crisis that had arisen between the United States and Great Britain were violations of this statute, and if the President and the Attorney-General do their duty Mr. Pulitzer, if he ever sets foot upon the soil of America, as I understand he occasionally does, ought to be prosecuted according to law. [Applause in the galleries.]

The telegram to the Rothschilds, from the reply to which I read the statement that "until this boundary question is arranged we do not believe either the European public or capitalists will take many American bonds for investment," was sent to them as bankers. It was not sent, in form at least, to any official of the British Government, nor do I perceive that any other dispatches which were sent by the World for the purpose of obtaining an expression from foreign countries as to the probable success of the new United States loan were addressed to officers of foreign Governments.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether the governor of the Bank of England, which is a semiofficial body, having close relations with the Government, is not an officer of that Government?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Massachusetts has recently returned——

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CHANDLER. I prefer to answer the question of the Senator from Massachusetts first. The Senator from Massachusetts has recently returned from foreign travel and has come in closer contact with the governor of the Bank of England, doubtless, than I ever did; and if the Senator says that the governor of the Bank of England is an officer of the British Government I shall not dispute it.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator be kind enough to read the section of the statute to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers, so that we may all have enlightenment as to its precise terms?

Mr. LODGE. I read the whole of it.

Mr. GRAY. A single reading of it is not enough.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], the defender of the Administration on this floor, now happily located on this side of the Chamber, is engaged with the statute, and he will favor me if he will read it to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HILL. Whatever else the Senator from New York may be, he is not at this particular time the defender of Mr. Pulitzer. I will leave that to other gentlemen. The Senator from New Hampshire is a good reader and I will allow him to read the statute for himself, but will not allow him to interpret it for the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should expect any interpretation of mine to be at once summarily overruled by the Senator from New York. But the law says:

> Every citizen of the United States, whether actually resident or abiding within the same, or in any foreign country, who, without the permission or authority of the government, directly or indirectly, commences or carries on any verbal or written correspondence or intercourse with any foreign government, or any officer or agent thereof, with an intent to influence the measures or conduct of any foreign government, or of any officer or agent thereof, in relation to any disputes or controversies with the United States, or to defeat the measures of the Government of the United States—

Shall be a criminal and be punished as such. That is the law.

Mr. ALDRICH. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island will state his point of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. As these international questions seem to be settled to the satisfaction of the gentlemen who are discussing them, I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The debate is proceeding upon a request for unanimous consent, which was granted, and the Chair does not think it proper——

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the unanimous consent extend for the rest of the session?

Mr. COCKRELL. It extends until 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It extends until the hour of 2 o'clock arrives, when the Chair will have to arrest all discussion and lay the unfinished business before the Senate.

Mr. HILL. Arrest the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], I suggest. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Am I to infer that the Chair has appointed the Senator from New York a deputy sergeant-at-arms to take part in the arrest? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not selected the Senator from New York for any such purpose.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do not rise to consume the time of the Senate, and I shall take only a moment to express my surprise at the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and my still greater surprise at the approbation given to that suggestion by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]. That suggestion seems to be that in this evening of the nineteenth century we should hark back upon our track for centuries in order to stifle the expression or the effort to obtain an expression of public opinion in this country or anywhere in the civilized world.

Mr. President, if we have achieved anything in all these years of eventful history that have come and gone we have accomplished this, that among civilized countries just public opinion is the final arbiter of all public conduct and all public measures.

It is not necessary for me or for any other Senator to say that if the suggestion were seriously made, and the approbation seriously given by my usually judicial and self-poised friend from New Hampshire, it will miserably fail of accomplishment. No attempt to place this inquisitorial interpretation upon any law on the statute book of the United States by which to stifle an expression of public opinion, or to prevent the free exercise of that right in regard to all matters and affairs that concern the people of the United States, will succeed.

The Senator from Massachusetts has exercised, and I trust will continue to exercise, the extremest freedom in the expression of his own opinions, whether as a Senator on this floor or as a member of this body, when in his own home, or when receiving the hospitality of those who live under foreign skies. I do not know that that freedom has ever been abridged. When it is sought to be abridged, or when it shall be abridged, then our institutions will have received a blow more serious than any that can be attempted by those who attempt to promote unsound finance or economic measures, for in that day the very corner stone of American liberty, the very corner stone of our world-wide civilization, of which we are the advance guard, will be sapped and undermined.

Mr. President, I am loath to believe that the Senator from Massachusetts was quite serious in the suggestion that we have a law upon the statute books of the United States so inquisitorial and so unworthy of the civilization of our day and generation.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from Delaware a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. We were not discussing the wisdom of the law, but the question as to what is a violation of the law as it stands upon the statute books. Now, suppose that war were flagrant between the United States and Great Britain, does the Senator from Delaware think it would be a violation of the law which has been quoted for Mr. Joseph Pulitzer to telegraph the Prince of Wales asking him if this wicked war ought not to be stopped? That is the concrete form of the proposition.

Mr. GRAY. When war has been declared and is flagrant it will be time enough to answer the question. Thank God, it is neither one nor the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A resolution, submitted by Mr. ELKINS, proposing to declare that hereafter no bonds of the United States shall be sold at private sale or under private contract, etc.

Mr. VEST. I gave notice that I should address the Senate upon the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is entitled to the floor upon the pending resolution.

SALE OF BONDS.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Democratic party does not seek to avoid any just responsibility for its ostensible control of the Government during the present Administration. I use the word "ostensible" because every fair-minded man knows that under the rules of the Senate and with the relative strength of the two great parties upon this floor it was practically impossible for us to impress upon the legislation of the country the policies and principles which are supported by a majority of the Democrats of the United States. I shall not stop now to express my oft-repeated regret that those defective rules exist, but it is matter of history that during the last Congress, with an ostensible majority of Democrats in this Chamber, we were, by reason of having practically no rules, obliged to submit to the individual opinions of a few Senators upon both sides of the Chamber.

Mr. President, the Democratic party recognizes the fact that, because apparently in control of the Government during this Administration, it must be held responsible for all the disasters which have come upon the country. It was said by a great soldier after a great defeat that success was the criterion of merit in war; and the rule equally applies in political affairs. Success is the criterion of merit; and although a hard rule, and oftentimes an unjust one, every party apparently in control of a representative Government is held responsible by the people for any disaster which may occur. I do not seek to evade even this unjust responsibility. I shall not waste time in noticing the statement that the Democratic party is dead. Sir, the political jackals that are snarling and snapping around the wounded lion will soon disappear. The Democratic party as founded by Jefferson will exist so long as this country lasts, and when it dies the last hope of popular government upon this continent will have been destroyed.

INCOME-TAX DECISION.

It is said by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that the Democratic party exhibited its incompetence when it failed during the last Congress to enact a tariff law which would furnish sufficient revenue to defray the expenses of the Government That statement is unjust and not founded in fact. The Wilson Act, as it is called, which was enacted by both Houses of Congress and became a law without the signature of the President, would have furnished ample revenue to conduct this Government, with a small surplus besides. If that law had not, as to between $40,000,000 and $50,000,000 of taxation, been declared invalid by the Supreme Court of the United States, there would have been no deficit in the Treasury, as every intelligent man must concede.

That the Supreme Court made this decision was a matter of surprise to every intelligent lawyer in the United States, and especially to those of us engaged in the legislation of the country. I shall observe the laws of decorum and of comity between the coordinate branches of the Government, but I shall not conceal my opinion of that decision, even of the highest judicial tribunal in the land.

In my judgment no decision by the Supreme Court of the United States has done so much to weaken the influence of that tribunal and to excite the distrust of the masses of the American people, including thoughtful and intelligent lawyers, as that rendered in the income-tax cases. It had always been believed and claimed as one of the chief excellences in our Federal Constitution that whatever might be the vacillations and uncertainties of inferior tribunals the citizen could rely with absolute confidence upon the stability of the great court of last resort. Its judgments, formed after elaborate argument in the calm and passionless atmosphere of judicial equanimity, were supposed to be above the sudden and capricious changes which often represent the prejudices of individual judges. That the Supreme Court has reversed its decisions, unbroken for a hundred years, upon a question vitally important to the Administration of the Government and to all its citizens, and that this reversal has placed the legislative department in the attitude of having through ignorance or recklessness violated the Constitution, must cause the deepest concern to all who are sincerely attached to our institutions.

That the court reversed the decisions of a century is beyond reasonable question. From the Hylton case, in 1796, three years after the Federal Constitution was adopted, down to the Springer case, in 1866, an unbroken line of decisions had been rendered by the Supreme Court to the effect that incomes from real and personal property did not come within the meaning of direct taxes under the Constitution, and could be levied without apportionment among the States according to population. I repeat the assertion that for one hundred years no lawyer had doubted that this was the law judicially determined by the highest tribunal in the land. The Hylton case was decided in 1796, three years after the Federal Constitution was adopted, as I have said, by judges who had been members of the convention which made the Constitution and of the State conventions which ratified it.

Chief Justice Ellsworth, who presided over the Supreme Court when the Hylton case was decided, had been a member of the Continental Congress and of the convention which made the Constitution of 1789, and was also a leading member of the Connecticut State convention that ratified the Constitution. He was on the bench when the opinion was delivered, and although he did not participate in the judgment, by reason of his having just been sworn into office, it can not be doubted that he was consulted by the justices who joined in the opinion.

Justice Paterson had been a member of the convention, and had drawn one of the two original drafts of the Constitution which were debated.

Justice Wilson was a member of the Continental Congress, and had given especial attention to the subject of taxation. He had also been a member of the convention that framed the Constitution, and then of the Pennsylvania convention which ratified it.

Justice Chase had been a member of the Continental Congress, and had there been prominent in the discussion of taxation and apportionment. Afterwards he served in the Maryland convention which ratified the Constitution.

Justice Iredell was a leading member of the North Carolina convention that ratified the Constitution.

Those were the lawyers who made the decision in the Hylton case, which was affirmed and reaffirmed for a hundred years by the tribunal of last resort until it was discovered by a majority of the present justices that all the judges who had preceded them upon the bench had been mistaken in regard to the law, and Congress was branded with having violated the Constitution which they had judicially construed. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). There must be order in the galleries.

Mr. VEST. What did the Supreme Court of the United States decide in the Hylton case? I hold in my hand the decision of Chief Justice Chase, delivered years afterwards, in which he gave the unanimous judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States in Veazie Bank vs. Fenno, 3 Wallace, affirming the Hylton case and declaring that Congress had the right to tax the incomes from real and personal property without apportionment among the States according to population. I shall not read that opinion familiar to every intelligent lawyer, but will insert an extract from it in my remarks.

It may safely be assumed, therefore, as the unanimous judgment of the court [in the Hylton case] that a tax on carriages is not a direct tax. And it may further be taken as established, upon the testimony of Patterson, that the words "direct taxes," as used in the Constitution, comprehended only capitation taxes and taxes on land, and perhaps taxes on personal property, by general valuation and assessment of the various descriptions possessed within the several States. It follows necessarily that the power to tax without apportionment extends to all other objects. Taxes on other objects are included under the heads of taxes not direct, duties, imposts, and excises, and must be laid and collected by the rule of uniformity. The tax under consideration is a tax on bank circulation, and may very well be classed under the head of duties. Certainly it is not, in the sense of the Constitution, a direct tax. It may be said to come within the same category of taxation as the tax on incomes of insurance companies, which this court, at the last term, in the case of Pacific Insurance Company vs. Soule (7 Wall., 424) held not to be a direct tax.

Mr. Justice Brown, of the Supreme Court, with whom I differ politically, but who is a lawyer of eminent ability and unquestioned integrity, in his dissenting opinion summarizes all the cases from the Hylton case, in 1796, to the Springer case, in 1866, showing that the Supreme Court had again and again affirmed the power of Congress to levy an income tax upon the proceeds of real and personal property without apportionment.

He says:

So, also, whenever this court had been called upon to give a construction to this clause of the Constitution, it has universally held the words "direct taxes" applied only to capitation taxes and taxes upon land. In the five cases most directly in point it was held that the following taxes were not direct, but rather in the nature of duty or excise, viz: A tax upon carriages, Hylton vs. United States (3 Dall., 171); a tax upon the business of insurance companies, Pacific Insurance Company vs. Soule (7 Wall., 433); a tax of 10 per cent upon the notes of State banks held by national banks, Veazie vs. Fenno (8 Wall.. 533); a tax upon the devolution of real estate, Scholey vs. Rew (23 Wall., 331), and, finally, a general income tax was broadly upheld in Springer vs. United States (102 U. S., 586). These cases, consistent and undeviating as they are, and extending over nearly a century of our national life, seem to me to establish a canon of interpretation which it is now too late to overthrow or even to question. If there be any weight at all to be given to the doctrine of stare decisis, it surely ought to apply to a theory of constitutional construction, which has received the deliberate sanction of this court in five cases, and upon the faith of which Congress has enacted two income taxes at times when, in its judgment, extraordinary sources of revenue were necessary to be made available.

The counsel who argued the case against the Government, Mr. Seward, of New York, in his printed argument, which I have before me, admitted that the Supreme Court had so decided for a century, but he said that the decision in the Springer case, rendered in 1866, was made by a loyal court to sustain the war-making power of the Government, and that therefore the Supreme Court should overrule it, together with the Hylton case and the intermediate decisions from 1796 up to 1866. The argument or suggestion then made to this great tribunal was that the Supreme Court was a part of the war-making power of this Government, or that its judges should commit perjury in order to sustain the Constitution for which battles had been fought in the preceding year. That I may do no injustice, having mentioned the name of this eminent lawyer, I ask the Secretary to read an extract from his printed argument.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Springer case adopted the reasoning of the court in the Hylton case. The statute then under consideration was passed to aid the General Government in the hour of its peril. The decision was that of a loyal court seeking to uphold the Government by sustaining a tax which had been passed as a war measure, and which was necessary to uphold and strengthen the Government against those who were seeking to destroy it. The loyalty of the decision is not questioned, and that loyalty may have had an influence even upon a judicial mind.

Mr. VEST. In the Springer case the Supreme Court of the United States, after reviewing every decision that had been made from the Hylton case down to that time, emphatically and distinctly declared that no sort of question remained as to the power of Congress to levy income taxes upon the profits from real and personal property in this country without apportionment.

After examining the cases above cited, the opinion concludes, speaking for the entire court: "All these cases are undistinguishable in principle from the case now before us, and they are decisive against the plaintiff in error. The question, what is a direct tax, is one exclusively in American jurisprudence. The text writers of the country are in entire accord upon the subject. Mr. Justice Story says that all taxes are usually divided into two classes—those which are direct and those which are indirect—and that 'under the former denomination are included taxes on land or real property, and, under the latter, taxes on consumption.' (1 Const., sec. 950.) Chancellor Kent, speaking of the case of Hylton vs. United States, says: 'The better opinion seems to be that the direct taxes contemplated by the Constitution were only two, viz, a capitation or poll tax and a tax on land.' (1 Com., 257. See also Cooley, Taxation, page 5, note 2; Pomery, Const. Law, 157; Sharwood's Blackstone, 308, note; Rawle, Const., 30; Sergeant, Const., 305.) We are not aware that any writer since Hylton vs. United States was decided has expressed a view of the subject different from that of these authors. Our conclusions are, that direct taxes, within the meaning of the Constitution, are only capitation taxes, as expressed in that instrument, and taxes on real estate, and that the tax of which the plaintiff in error complains is within the category of an excise or duty."

When judges one hundred years afterwards undertake to say what was the meaning of the framers of the Constitution, in face of the judicial declarations of the men who made the Constitution and then sat upon the Supreme Bench and construed it, no one can be surprised that Mr. Justice Harlan, in his dissenting opinion, declares that the age of miracles is not past, and that after a century these modern lawyers know better than the framers of the Constitution what they meant.

Sir, I shall not undertake to analyze the decision of the Supreme Court; I would not trust myself in the Senate Chamber to say what I should be tempted to say as to this most extraordinary proceeding. I will leave it to the members of that court to stigmatize the decision as it deserves. I send to the Secretary now, to be read, the declaration of Mr. Justice Harlan, who sat upon the bench and delivered a dissenting opinion.

The Secretary read as follows:

The practical effect of the decision to-day is to give to certain kinds of property a position of favoritism and advantage inconsistent with the fundamental principles of our social organization, and to invest them with power and influence that may be perilous to that portion of the American people upon whom rests the larger part of the burdens of the Government, and who ought not to be subjected to the dominion of aggregated wealth any more than the property of the country should be at the mercy of the lawless.

Mr. VEST. If that be not sufficient, I ask the Secretary to read from the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Brown.

The Secretary read as follows:

By resuscitating an argument that was exploded in the Hylton case, and has lain practically dormant for a hundred years, it is made to do duty in nullifying, not this law alone, but every similar law that is not based upon an impossible theory of apportionment. Even the specter of socialism is conjured up to frighten Congress from laying taxes upon the people in proportion to their ability to pay them. It is certainly a strange commentary upon the Constitution of the United States and upon a democratic Government that Congress has no power to lay a tax which is one of the main sources of revenue of nearly every civilized State. It is a confession of feebleness in which I find myself wholly unable to join.

While I have no doubt that Congress will find some means of surmounting the present crisis, my fear is that in some moment of national peril this decision will rise up to frustrate its will and paralyze its arm. I hope it may not prove the first step toward the submergence of the liberties of the people in a sordid despotism of wealth.

As I can not escape the conviction that the decision of the court in this great case is fraught with immeasurable danger to the future of the country, and that it approaches the proportions of a national calamity, I feel it a duty to enter my protest against it.

Mr. VEST. If I had made the declarations which have come from these two justices of the Supreme Court of the United States I should be charged with partisan malice and misrepresentation. Coming from distinguished lawyers, holding the highest judicial positions in the country, of life tenure, and removed from personal and political motives, I submit that those declarations from that source constitute the most fearful arraignment of this court of last resort found in the judicial annals of the country.

I have said that I do not propose to analyze this decision, nor shall I trust myself to enter into conjecture as to the reasons that caused one member of the court, after agreeing on deliberate argument as to the constitutionality of the largest portion of the law, in two weeks afterwards, upon a motion for a rehearing, to reverse his opinion and fasten upon the country "the sordid despotism of wealth." This justice unquestionably had the right to change his opinion; it is the highest prerogative of a judicial officer; but I must say most respectfully that it is a matter of regret that he did not see proper to put upon record the reasons that caused him to make the change; that he did not stand before the American people as the only member of the court really responsible for this far-reaching and terrible judicial decision. The name of that justice is known alone to himself and to his judicial associates. Not even the clerks of the court are able to say what individual justice changed the decision after the case was first argued. The reasons that controlled him are lost to the profession and to the country, and it is simply a matter of conjecture as to why, in a case the most important, possibly, that ever came before the Supreme Court of the United States, he allowed his name and his reasons to be buried in obscurity.

Sir, the Senate of the United States has been ridiculed and maligned because of executive sessions. What would be thought of a member of this body who had changed his opinion on a great question like that before the Supreme Court who did not have the manhood to stand before the American people and declare his responsibility for that result? I can imagine now the storm of opprobrium, the charges of corruption, the wrath of the independent press against a Senator who would dare to hide his name in order to escape responsibility for a public act.

I must also be permitted to express my regret that in the argument of this case eminent counsel were not only permitted but encouraged to make scurrilous innuendoes as to the motives of those of us who had placed in the income-tax law the provision exempting savings banks and mutual life insurance companies from taxation. The reasons for this exemption were given in the Senate debate, and it is not strange that they did not weigh with paid counsel who made this attack upon the majority of Congress. Those banks and companies were exempted upon the broad and humane policy which encourages the citizen in all civilized countries to make provision for those who are dependent upon him. The same eminent counsel who attacked Congress because they had made this exemption in the next breath assailed us as legislative communists who were making assaults upon the wealth of the country. This versatility would have been astounding but for the fact that the same lawyer a few weeks afterwards stood before a New York jury, Bible in hand, and read the parable of Lazarus and Dives to secure a verdict for his client against a multimillionaire who was childless, upon the ground that he ought to be made to divide his estate with the poor devil who was fortunate enough to have such an advocate. [Laughter.]

I assert that in all the debates which were had in both Houses of Congress it was not suggested that the Supreme Court had not settled forever in the Springer case our right to pass the income-tax provisions which were contained in the Wilson law. Even the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], who so vigorously opposed the income-tax provision, although his individual opinion may have been otherwise, did not pretend to controvert the fact that constitutionally we had the power to impose such a tax.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me? I know he does not want to misrepresent me.

Mr. VEST. Not at all.

Mr. HILL. I do not intend, of course, at the present time to argue the question, but I will state that I took the position all through the debate that we had no authority under the Constitution to pass any such income-tax provision as that bill contained.

Mr. VEST. I have said that was the individual opinion of the Senator from New York, but as a lawyer he never pretended to urge that the Supreme Court had not decided that we had the power and that the Springer case was conclusive upon the question.

Mr. HILL. Of course my views are published in the speeches which I made here upon that question, in which I spoke of the Springer case, and we had considerable discussion upon it. I endeavored to draw a distinction between what was decided in the Springer case and what was involved in the bill then pending.

Mr. VEST. What was decided in the Springer case speaks for itself in language so plain that there can be no mistake about it. The Springer case decided without one dissenting judge—declared emphatically and distinctly and beyond the shadow of suspicion—that Congress had the power to impose the taxes that we placed in the income-tax provision of the Wilson law. I know that counsel in the Supreme Court tried to evade that conclusion, but I have read from the printed argument of Mr. Seward to show that he admitted that the Supreme Court had so decided and only attempted to escape the legal effect by saying it was a war-time decision, made by a loyal court to sustain the Government.

Mr. President, I do not propose to speak at length in regard to the effect of this decision. My sole object is to repel and repudiate with all my power and with all the earnestness of which my nature is capable the assertion that Congress was guilty of either recklessness or ignorance in enacting that statute. I say that every intelligent lawyer concluded that the question had been judicially determined. To have doubted that the Supreme Court would have followed the decisions of one hundred years would have been a reflection upon the intelligence and consistency of that great tribunal. During the individual selfishness that always comes in times of great depression, while gloom and disaster and other great issues have been impending over the country, our people have not understood the full effect of this terrible decision. It has marked a new era in our history, and I much mistake the American people if the time will not come when neither soft words nor honeyed phrases will be sufficient apology for the doctrine announced by the Supreme Court.

Sir, the people of this country will never submit to the system of taxation which has been put upon them by the Supreme Court of the United States in opposition to its decision of an entire century. That Mr. Vanderbilt, with his hundreds of millions of dollars, should pay no more for the support of the General Government than the poorest man in the land is abhorrent to every honest mind. The Army and Navy of the United States, the military and financial resources of the Government, must be used to defend Mr. Vanderbilt's untold millions; and yet he pays simply internal-revenue taxes and tariff import duties upon what he may choose to consume, and the poor man does the same. He pays no more to support the Army and Navy than I do, or any other citizen of this country, without regard to his estate or means.

The people of the United States will never concede that either the State or national administration should be fixed upon a basis like this. This decision, I say, has not attracted the attention that hereafter must be given to it. The time will come when the prophetic language of Justice Brown will come home to every intelligent and thoughtful man throughout our wide domain, that by this adjudication the highest tribunal in the land has fixed upon the country "the sordid despotism of wealth."

DEMOCRATIC AND REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION.

Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio proceeded to draw a comparison between the administration of the Government by the Republican and the Democratic parties, and the general drift of his argument was to show incompetency upon the part of the Democracy, while great national prosperity had come from the policies and administration of the Republican party. The Senator read copious extracts from statistical reports to prove his assertion. I have with great interest and some labor followed him in his effort to convict the party to which I belong of utter incompetency and to elevate and laud the organization of which he is so prominent and distinguished a member.

What are the facts in regard to the administration of the Government?

Mr. Cleveland was elected President of the United States in 1884. The surplus revenue in 1885, the first year of his Administration, was $17,859,755; in 1886, the next year, $49,405,546; in the next year, 1887, $55,567,645. In the last year of Cleveland's Administration it was $67,608,725.

Under this incompetent and unfaithful Democratic party the surplus revenue of the Government constantly increased, and I assert here and now, differing, as is well known, from the head of my party as to great questions pending before the American people, that no administration of this Government from the beginning until now was more successful, more satisfactory, than the four years of Grover Cleveland from 1885 to 1889.

During those four years how much gold went out of the country? The gold exports during the whole four years were $79,507,504.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. HOAR. I desire simply to ask the Senator whether during those four years there was any Democratic law in force; and if so, what?

Mr. VEST. The Senator asks me if any Democratic law was in force. I reply to him that the Democratic party was then at the head of affairs in this country, and there by a law superior to all others, the will of a majority of the people of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. It was not in control of the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Now, Mr. President, let us go to the Administration of Mr. Harrison, under Republican laws, of which I shall speak directly, and more fully answer the Senator from Massachusetts.

In 1889, the first year of Harrison's Administration, there was $48,694,000 surplus. In 1890, $45,192,000, a fall of three millions. In 1891, $17,167,000, a fall of nearly $30,000,000 in a year. In 1892, $9,914,483. There was a constant fall in the surplus under the Administration of the Republican party, with both Houses of Congress at that time under their control.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should be very glad if the Senator would state how much of the public debt was paid during that Administration.

Mr. VEST. I will do so with very great pleasure.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thought it was $259,000,000. I am not sure.

Mr. VEST. I am glad the Senator has called my attention to that point. I am very much obliged to him.

As I have stated, the surplus was a constantly declining one. The surplus, permit me to say, is shown from official reports, in 1893 and 1894, the last two years of Harrison's Administration, to have been made up by drawing money out of the Treasury, which was not a surplus upon imports and revenues of the country, internal-revenue taxes and otherwise, but, as the Treasury Department shows (and I hold the report before me), it came from money drawn out of the Treasury of the United States in order, under their system of bookkeeping, to show a surplus.

In Harrison's Administration the gold exports, instead of being $79,000,000, as under Cleveland's four years, were $213,784,757. There was incompetency for you, according to the criterion of the Senator from Ohio. The great evil of which we now hear complaint is the export of gold, but under these incompetent Democrats, for four years but $79,000,000 went out, while under the Administration of Harrison and his colleagues there was exported the enormous amount of $213,000,000. Even in the present Administration of Mr. Cleveland so far the records show that but $181,068,087 in gold has been exported from the United States.

But again, the receipts under Cleveland's Administration were $1,451,660,246. The expenditures during his whole four years were $1,063,223,202, there being the difference between $1,063,000,000 and $1,451,000,000.

The receipts under Harrison's Administration—now mark the contrast—were $1,539,723,590. The expenditures during Harrison's four years were $1,330,394,780. The excess of expenditures under Harrison over those under Cleveland amounted to $267,171,577.

But again, in answer to the Senator from Connecticut, the amount paid by Cleveland to retire the bonds and to pay the public debt, as shown by the official records, was $360,419,053. The total amount paid by Harrison to retire bonds and pay the public debt during his whole four years was $292,963,436, showing that these derided and incompetent Democrats who are now destroying this country and causing liberty to lie bleeding in the streets saved millions and millions of dollars, while the Republican party managed to deplete the Treasury and to leave us a legacy of indebtedness under which we are now struggling.

But, Mr. President, in addition to this, the continuing appropriations of the Fifty-first Congress left to the Fifty-second Congress, and of which complaint is now made, amounted to $154,000,000 in round numbers. They bequeathed to Mr. Cleveland's second Administration liabilities amounting to $96,051,325.06. I have before me (which I will not read unless Senators desire to hear it) the specific amounts, and on what account, handed down by our Republican predecessors to us, and which are now made a subject of taunt and derision, because they say the incompetent Democrats are not able to furnish sufficient revenues to pay them.

The amount above the gold reserve turned over by Mr. Cleveland's Administration to that of General Harrison was $83,627,100. The amount turned over at the end of Harrison's Administration to Mr. Cleveland (nearly all of it in subsidiary coin and unavailable for the purposes of paying indebtedness) was $24,128,687.

During Harrison's Administration the disbursing officer's balances available for current expenses were reduced from $47,905,423 to $23,515,033.

Mr. President, in addition to that, the Harrison Administration extended bonds that matured September 1, 1891, amounting to $25,364,800. We were asked here the other day, in an almost insulting manner, why the Democratic party did not pay its debts. Let me inquire why the Republican party did not pay its debts, and why it permitted these bonds maturing September 1, in the year I have named, to go by without payment by the Government, thereby impeaching the good faith of the American people. They also defaulted in 1892 and 1893 in paying $40,000,000 due to the sinking fund.

Besides all this, the party which now attacks the Democrats as being false to their obligations and to the law misappropriated the amount of $54,207,975 of trust funds in the Treasury that were placed there to redeem the national-bank notes.

This is the record from official sources of the four years of Harrison's Administration.

The Senator from Massachusetts asked me what laws were in force that were put there by the Democratic party during the successful Administration of Mr. Cleveland. What laws? The Senator impliedly exults in the legislation passed by the Republican party, the organization to which he belongs.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. I think he misunderstood the purport of my question. He was claiming for President Cleveland the credit of the expenditures and receipts in his first Administration. During that whole first Administration the expenditures and the receipts of the Government were governed by Republican laws, which the President of the United States had no power to change; and during his whole Administration there was a Republican Senate, so that no Republican law could have been changed by the Democratic party. That was the point of my question, not whether they passed good laws.

Mr. VEST. I listen to the Senator always with great pleasure and with renewed admiration from session to session of his ingenuousness and ingenuity. Now, the Senator from Massachusetts speaks of a Republican Senate; but did they have during Cleveland's first term a Republican House of Representatives, which under the Constitution originates all appropriations? Who made the great appropriation bills? They were made by the Democratic party. Who controlled the expenses of the Government which enabled us to save the money of the people and show the surplus which I have read from the official reports?

But I could answer the Senator further and tell him of the law which bears the name of a distinguished Democrat from my own State that was then unrepealed on the statute books. I refer to what is called the Bland Act of 1878, which the Republican party declared afterwards to be hurtful to the country and placed in its stead the law which bears the name of the distinguished Senator from Ohio—the Sherman Act.

In 1890, flushed with the victory of 1888, the Republican party came back under the impression that they owned this country for an indefinite period. They placed themselves and the fate of their organization upon three bills. The first was the force law, a Massachusetts bill, controlled and managed in the House of Representatives by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and bearing his name; controlled and managed in the Senate by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. After a terrible struggle, with the assistance of patriotic Republicans, we were enabled to defeat that odious measure. Contemporaneously, by using the parliamentary power placed in the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the McKinley Act was passed, enormously increasing duties, upon the broad and undisguised assumption that revenues should be levied for protection and not to pay the expenses of the Government.

That bill came to this body, passed by the methods I have named in the House, and was here enacted into law. The Republican party put up its oriflamme before the United States and emblazoned on it "Protection for protection's sake." They went to the people upon that issue.

They passed another law to give relief, as they said, to the finances of the country. It is known as the Sherman Act, which stored in the Treasury of the United States as so much cord wood, as so much lumber, silver bullion, not to be coined, but to be made the basis of Treasury notes issued to the people.

What was the result of that legislation? The Republican party came back from their appeal to the people utterly discomfited and defeated. They gathered into this Hall a funeral procession, stamped with the disapproval of the people of this country. The McKinley law was repudiated distinctly and emphatically, and conspicuous Republicans have repeatedly said that they would never be prepared to go back to the measure of protection accorded by that law. The Sherman law was repudiated by its author and his colleagues who gave their votes for it. The Senator from Ohio stood on this floor and declared that his own offspring must be bastardized and put beyond the pale of law. It had brought disaster upon the country. It had disturbed the finances. It was unworthy the name of the great statesman, formerly Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. President, that law was passed under political coercion, so far as the Senator from Ohio was concerned, I will do him the justice to state. We are told now that the Democratic party is hopelessly divided upon the question of the free coinage of silver. In what better condition are our Republican brethren? They dare not make the issue in their own ranks in regard to the free coinage of silver, because they know it would disintegrate and divide their party hopelessly. They passed the Sherman Act to retain the votes of the silver Republican Senators from the Western States, and all the world knows it. They afterwards were compelled, under the stress of public opinion in the Northeastern and Middle States, to repeal that law. To-day they hold control of the committees in this body on account of the same potent influence inside of their own organization. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], frankly and in his own manly and emphatic way, told us the other day that if the Senate Committee on Finance had not been organized in favor of free coinage no committees would have been appointed and no chairmanships made in the Senate. No declaration could be more emphatic and distinct than that. Now the struggle of our Republican friends is to evade that issue, if possible, and not to permit the public of the United States to ascertain that they are as hopelessly divided upon it as they claim and as I concede the Democratic party to be.

Mr. President, whatever the Democratic party may have omitted to do, it has never enacted any law which it was compelled to come before the people of the United States and admit to have been vicious legislation that ought not to have been placed upon the statute books. We are honestly divided in regard to the free coinage of silver, and it is a tribute to the personal integrity of the individuals composing the Democratic party that manhood and patriotism enough still exist in public life to impel those of us who entertain an opinion different from the President of the United States, the head of our party, to come out boldly and unequivocally against his policy.

We are engaged now in an irrepressible financial conflict; a conflict as irrepressible as that which marched the armies of the North and South in the civil war. I trust that the arbitrament may not be by violence; I hope and believe that it will not be; but the conflict is just as irrepressible, and must be fought out to the last extremity between those of us who believe in retaining silver as standard money of redemption and those who believe in the single gold standard and the use of silver only as fractional coin. All attempts to evade this issue are impossible. The sooner it is settled the better for the tranquillity of the country, the better for the public and private life of the land. Those who attempt to evade it by the use of cant phrases, such as "sound money," and by the declaration that this lunacy has passed away, are guilty of absolute public crime, if intelligent men, when they assume that the vast millions who believe in the free coinage of silver will ever concede that they are either dishonest or incompetent to decide that question.

TIN PLATE.

Mr. President, pursuing further the analogy instituted by the Senator from Ohio between the policies and legislation of the two great parties of the country, let me remind our Republican friends of certain episodes in the tariff discussion when we passed the Wilson Act and of subsequent events, which I thought then "cast their shadows before." The McKinley Act put a tariff duty of $2\frac{2}{10}$ cents a pound upon tin plate, an infant industry, as it was claimed, that must be fostered and encouraged in the United States. We proposed to reduce that duty 1 cent and leave it $1\frac{2}{10}$ cents per pound. We were told by tin-plate manufacturers from Pittsburg and by the leaders of the Republican party in the debate upon the other side of the Chamber that this reduction would destroy the tin-plate industry in the United States. What is the result? I hold in my hand a report made by Mr. Ayer, whose reports have heretofore furnished the staple arguments of our Republican friends for higher protection upon tin plate. This report has just been made to the Treasury of the United States, and I will ask the Secretary to read it. It shows the result of the reduction of 1 cent a pound on tin plate in one year under the Wilson Act, made by an agent confessedly inimical to the doctrine of freer trade which I entertain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Secretary will read as indicated unless objection be made.

The Secretary read as follows:

TIN AND TERNE PLATES.

OFFICE OF SPECIAL AGENT, TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Custom-House, New York, October 13, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to report that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, the production in the United States of commercial tin and terne plates was 193,801,073 pounds, against 139,223,467 pounds produced during the previous fiscal year, showing thereby an increased production of 39 per cent.

Of the production for the year, 160,576,934 pounds, or about 83 per cent, were made from sheets rolled in the United States, against about 62 per cent made from such sheets during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1894.

The production for the year distributed according to weight and kind of plates was as follows:

	Lighter than 63 pounds per 100 square feet.	63 pounds per 100 square feet and heavier.	Total.
	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.
Tin plates	103,256,143	17,071,806	120,327,949
Terne plates	62,934,216	10,538,908	73,473,124
Total	166,190,359	27,610,714	193,801,073

These figures show that about 86 per cent of the production belonged to the class weighing lighter than 63 pounds per 100 square feet, the proportion of the previous fiscal year having been about 95 per cent of the production for that year.

Forty-eight firms were producing during the quarter ended June 30, 1895, as against 40 during the corresponding quarter of the previous fiscal year.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is the Senator from Missouri now prepared to admit that tin plates can be successfully produced in the United States?

Mr. VEST. Under a Democratic Administration, yes [laughter]; never under a Republican.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will allow me to make a statement, the rates fixed in the iron and steel schedule in the bill for which the Senator voted were so fairly protective in every part——

Mr. VEST. I know they were.

Mr. ALDRICH. That it was, so far as that schedule was concerned, a protective measure.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Rhode Island, I must say frankly, had a good deal more to do with that schedule than I had, although I was ostensibly with the majority of the Senate. I resisted the retention of the enormous duties in the iron and steel schedule. But he can not divert me from what I state here now. The Senator himself made the issue as to tin plate, and he declared that if we took off 1 cent a pound it would destroy the industry. We did take it off, and it was one of the few things we managed to save in that bill. The result has been an increase of 39 per cent, showing, what we have always contended, that these enormous and exclusive duties do not help the producers of the United States in any regard. It is a plain, palpable evasion to talk about the whole iron and steel schedule. I take this specific article, and I show by official reports that it has thrived under a decreased duty, and I thereby establish the contention of the party to which I belong that these enormous McKinley duties are not necessary.

AGRICULTURAL IMPORTS.

The Senator from Ohio significantly alluded to the increased imports of agricultural products under the Wilson law, and it was equally significant that the distinguished Senator did not name one of the principal agricultural articles in his list of imports. He said that under the McKinley law there were $51,414,484 worth of agricultural articles named in his list imported into this country, and under the Wilson law $107,342,522. He includes in those items hides, which, he says, in 1894 were imported to the extent of $10,480,562 under the McKinley law, and $24,623,269 in 1895, under the Wilson law.

Mr. President, that is an unfortunate allusion for the distinguished Senator. We all remember that his candidate for the Presidency, the Hon. William McKinley, of Ohio, then chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, in his report on the McKinley bill made an eloquent and learned argument in favor of imposing a duty upon hides. Some mysterious influence attacked him after he prepared the report. The bill was changed, but not the report, and the astounding spectacle was presented the next morning to the House of Representatives and the country of a report from the chairman of the committee in favor of a duty on hides and in the bill hides were put on the free list.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am sure the Senator does not wish to misstate the facts.

Mr. VEST. No; I do not.

Mr. ALDRICH. The bill as reported to the House did not contain a duty on hides.

Mr. VEST. I did not say that. I said the report favored a duty. Does the Senator deny that?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

Mr. VEST. I say the argument in the report on the McKinley bill of the Committee on Ways and Means was in favor of a duty on hides.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know what the argument was, but——

Mr. VEST. The Senator ought to know before he interrupts me with such a statement as that.

Mr. ALDRICH. I know in what shape the bill was reported.

Mr. VEST. I know, and I stated distinctly, the bill was changed the night before its report, and the name of a prominent Senator of this body, then a member of the House of Representatives, was connected with that transaction. He went to Mr. McKinley in an entirely legitimate way and told him that if the duty on hides was retained he could not look for his support and that of other New England Representatives. Why, Mr. President, put a duty on hides and you would hear the New England slogan much louder and more ferocious than it has been on the Venezuelan question. You would smell powder then in this hall and hear the hurtling of bullets. Put a duty on hides, and immediately the spirit of the Pilgrim fathers would be aroused, and they would march to victory or to death. [Laughter.]

I repeat my assertion, that the report of that committee contained an argument for a duty on hides, and the bill itself did not contain any such duty.

The Senator from Ohio tells us that it is the fault of the Wilson bill that there is an increased importation of hides. Let me ask the distinguished Senator, Have not hides been free under both laws? Were they not free under the McKinley law? Are they not equally free under the Wilson law? What change in legislation causes the increased importation? What could be the cause except an increased activity in the leather business caused by the advent of the Democratic party to power? Twenty-four million dollars against ten—really, by the official report it is fifteen to twenty-six, but I care nothing about the figures. It is the fact that with free hides under both laws it is a palpable evasion of all logic to say that the Wilson law is responsible for the increased importation.

But I return to the list of agricultural products. The Senator from Ohio names hides, tobacco, rye, barley, and all the articles in which he can find an increased importation. Why did he not put in sugar? Is not sugar an agricultural product? Ask my friend from Louisiana whether it is or not. Is it not raised in the fields of the South, and the fields of Cuba, now desolated by fire and sword? Is not sugar produced even in the cold climate of Nebraska, and out upon the sunny fields of the Pacific Slope? Yet the Senator evades sugar, because he saw, or the expert who made out his list saw, that it would put the balance against him on the importation of agricultural products if he added sugar to the list he produced in the Senate.

According to official reports, the sugar imports under the last year of the McKinley law were $126,629,061; under the first year of the Wilson law $67,839,995. So, if sugar be added, as it should be, the account of the Senator from Ohio under the last year of the McKinley Act of the importation of his agricultural products would be $178,043,905, and under the Wilson law $175,182,517, making the imports larger under the McKinley law than under the Wilson Act.

WOOL.

But I come now to the most important part of this whole discussion, so far as the comparison of the two laws is concerned. The wool schedule has always been the citadel of undisguised and unlimited protection. Strike out the wool schedule and you strike out the element of vitality from the protective policy of the Republican party. In 1893, a year of immense importations and exports—and I ask the attention of the Senate to it—we imported of woolen fabrics $36,987,904. The duties under the McKinley Act were $36,457,582—a duty of 100 per cent within the shadow of a fraction. That was the ultima thule of protection; that was the Arcadia to which all protectionists go—100 per cent, making the importer pay upon the goods which he imported an equal amount with the value of the goods themselves. I said in the debate upon the tariff bill, and have repeated it a hundred times in speeches to the people, that if the Wilson law did nothing else it drew the line between protection for protection's sake and the imposition of duties for revenue. I never approved that law in all its features, as the world knows; I took it because I thought it was better than the McKinley Act, and on that ground alone, but not as a fair revenue measure or one that I would have drawn.

One thing in the speech of the Senator from Ohio I approved, and that was his frank declaration that he had never voted for a tariff bill that met his full approval. I never did, and never expect to. To make a tariff bill you must give and take. This country is now so large and its interests are so immense, and even antagonistic, that without concessions, mutually made, no legislation can be had from the National Congress. Demagogues and people almost unworthy to cast a ballot may demand of Congress unanimity. Whenever Congress becomes unanimous upon a subject like the tariff, Congress will be dishonest, and the elementary representative features of our Government will have been eliminated.

I voted for the Wilson bill because I could do no better, but I declared then, and have repeated everywhere, that if there had been nothing else in the Wilson law, I was glad it had been enacted, because it threw down the gage of battle on free wool distinctly, emphatically, and unequivocally as between protection for protection's sake and the imposition of import duties for revenue.

The contention of the Democratic party in making the wool schedule was that free wool would not only increase the price of the domestic article to the producer, but would lower the price of woolen fabrics and make them of better texture and would increase the prosperity of the woolen mills. Our Republican friends accepted that gauge and they declared that free wool would lower the price of domestic wool, close the mills, and bring disaster upon the people of the United States. That was their unequivocal declaration.

Mr. President, I believed then, and can prove now, that free wool has done more for the woolgrowers of the country and for the woolen mills of the country than any legislation that the Republican party has ever enacted.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. VEST. Oh, yes, although I should prefer the Senator would answer me when I get through.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall not interrupt the Senator again, but I should like to remind him that the industry of woolen manufacturing in the United States was never in such an unsatisfactory condition as it is at the present time.

Mr. VEST. We shall see about that. I have great respect for the Senator from Rhode Island—except in politics. [Laughter.] I must state to him frankly that I can not trust him on this question. He comes here poisoned and prejudiced with his protection ideas, and he makes a specialty of this tariff business, which he has a perfect right to do legitimately. I do not complain of that, but I do most emphatically repudiate his opinions, and I do not dispute the fact that his statements are perfectly honest, but they are not supported by official reports, and I shall undertake to prove it.

I say the price of wool in this country has increased under the Wilson law, notwithstanding the assertion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. I say that the woolen mills are prosperous, and that they have had a year's prosperity such as they never had before, notwithstanding the statement made the other day by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] that the mills of New England were on the verge of bankruptcy.

I have here the report of the Woolgrowers' Association, of which the shepherd king of Ohio, Mr. Lawrence, is president. He repudiates the McKinley law on wool and the Wilson law, and says they are both antagonistic to the interests of the woolgrower. He is not satisfied with 11, 22, and 33 cents upon the three grades of wool, which is given him by the McKinley law; but now comes to Congress for 12, 24, and 36. If we give him that, next year he would be here for 14, 28, and 42. He would never be satisfied with the increase. He says the McKinley law was a sad mistake and did not protect the woolgrower. He declares that the Wilson law was murderous and ruinous in its effect, and the House bill sent to us now is a mere fraud and pretense of protection and will do no good to the woolgrowers of this country. In this report, which is Senate Document 17, and forms the basis of the wool speech of the Senator from Oregon, a comparison is made between the last year under the McKinley law and the first year under the Wilson law, and the conclusion is drawn that wool has declined, as if any sane man in this country denied it. Wool has been declining since 1881. It declined all through Harrison's Administration under the McKinley law, and declined more rapidly than it did at any preceding period, as I shall show from figures prepared and brought to the Senate by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] himself.

Would any fair man who was fit to sit upon a jury or to be heard in a court of justice pretend that it was any test between the two laws, the McKinley law and the Wilson law, to take the market under the last year of the McKinley law and then the first year under the Wilson law, and say that wool had continued to decline? Would it not be the only fair test to take one year under the McKinley law and then one year under the Wilson law—a different system and different legislation—and compare the effect? What honest man would pretend to do anything else? Now let us see what has been the result of the legislation of the Republican party on wool. I said I would read from statistics furnished by the Senator from Rhode Island. Here is an extract from his speech republished with a blare of trumpets in the Wool and Cotton Reporter and sent by the thousand all over this country to the woolgrowers. The Senator furnished this table. I will ask the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Year.	Price of fine Ohio fleece, scoured.	Year.	Price of fine Ohio fleece, scoured.
1881	$0.95½	1889	$0.73½
1882	.90½	1890	.73½
1883	.86	1891	.70½
1884	.80½	1892	.63
1885	.71½	1893	.55
1886	.74	January, 1894	.50
1887	.73½	March 1, 1894	.45½
1888	.68

Mr. VEST. That table, taken from the speech of the Senator from Rhode Island, delivered June 15, 1894, shows a decline in wool, XX Ohio, scoured, from 1881 and during all the years when the McKinley Act was in force, and the decline, according to the president of the Woolgrowers' Association, was caused by the decline in the price of wool all over the world and, he says, also by a decline in prices produced by the single gold standard. However palatable that may be to the Senator from Ohio, that is what his constituent says in regard to the cause of the fall in the price of wool everywhere.

But I proceed now to institute a fair comparison between the operations of the two laws. In September, 1891, about one year after the McKinley Act took effect, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia XX wool was worth in the Boston market from 30 to 31 cents a pound; in October, 1892, the same grade was worth in the same market 28 to 29 cents, being a fall of 2 cents per pound under one year of the McKinley Act. Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia X wool was worth September, 1891, in the Boston market, 29 to 30 cents a pound; in October, 1892, one year afterwards, under the McKinley law, it was worth in the same market 27 to 27½ cents. In September, 1891, No. 1 was worth in the Boston market 35 to 36 cents, and a year afterwards it was worth 32½ to 33 cents. In September, 1891, fine unwashed was worth in the Boston market 21 to 22 cents; in October, 1892, a year afterwards, it was worth 19 to 20 cents, and so on. I here insert the table, which is as follows:

WOOL.

In September, 1891, about one year after the McKinley bill took effect, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia XX was worth in the Boston market 30 to 31 cents.

In October, 1892, the same grade was worth in the same market 28 to 29 cents, being a fall of 2 cents a pound.

Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia X was worth in September, 1891, in the Boston market, 29 to 30 cents.

In October, 1892, it was worth in the same market 27 to 27½.

In September, 1891, No. 1 was worth in the Boston market 35 to 36 cents, and No. 2, 33 cents.

In October, 1892, No. 1 was worth in the same market 32½ to 33 cents, and No. 2, 31½ to 32 cents.

In September, 1891, fine unwashed was worth in the Boston market 21 to 22 cents.

In October, 1892, it was worth 19 to 20 cents.

In the Boston market in September, 1891, Michigan, New York, and New England was worth 27 cents.

In October, 1892, it was worth 25 to 26 cents.

In September, 1891, Oregon (scoured) was worth in the Boston market from 56 to 58 cents.

In October, 1892 it was worth 53 to 56 cents.

In September, 1891, Texas (scoured) was worth in the Boston market 60 to 62 cents.

In October, 1892, 56 to 58 cents.

These returns are taken from the official bulletin of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers for 1891 and 1892–93. This was under the McKinley law. Now, I ask your attention to the operation of the Wilson Act. In September, 1894, immediately after the passage of the Wilson Act, XX wool, the same quality of Ohio wool, was worth in the Boston market 18 to 19 cents; December 19, 1895, it was worth in the same market 19 to 21 cents. Fine, unwashed, was worth in September, 1894, 12 to 13 cents; it was worth a year afterwards, in December, 1895, 12 to 14 cents. Fine, unmerchantable, was worth in September, 1894, 13 to 15 cents; December 19, 1895, it was worth 14 to 15 cents, showing a gradual improvement in prices during one year under the Wilson law. These figures are taken from the American Wool and Cotton Reporter for December 19, 1895, which I have and can produce if necessary.

Mr. President, we have been told here that the Wilson Act assassinated wool, and I see from the returns of protection papers, which never breathe a sentiment in favor of my opinions upon the tariff question, that the price of domestic wool has gone up in the United States; and, in addition to that, I can prove from the same sources that the woolen mills were never so prosperous as they are to-day and have been during the year 1895. The official reports show—and I have a volume of them—that we have consumed in 1895 540,000,000 pounds of wool, more than was ever consumed in the most prosperous wool year in the history of this country. What did the manufacturers do with it? Did they eat it? Did they burn it? Did they store it? They manufactured it, and the consumption of wool in the United States, foreign and domestic, has been fabulously increased.

We have heard from interested protective sources that sheep have been butchered by the thousand. It is true. Who caused it? The shepherd kings of Ohio, Mr. Lawrence and his colleagues, who, when we passed the Wilson bill, went among their people and said, "These incompetent Democrats have rendered your sheep worthless; cut their throats and pile them on the market," and some friends of mine in Missouri slaughtered their whole flocks, and sold them at 50 cents and 37½ cents a head, against my protest and that of "other deluded and incompetent Democrats." To-day they are praying for the sheep to come back from that shadowy land to which sheep and men alike hasten.

Mr. President, I have here a collection which my strength and the patience of the Senate would not permit me to read, taken from protective papers—and I have brought nothing here from my own side of this question if I know it—showing the result of one year under the legislation of the Wilson bill. Here is an extract from the American Wool and Cotton Reporter in its annual review, which I will ask the Secretary to read, and will promise not to read much more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

BOSTON, December 24, 1895.

The American Wool and Cotton Reporter will say, December 26, of the wool trade:

"The year which five days hence will have rounded out its course has been, on the whole, a signally eventful one. In the volume of sales it has broken all previous records. The amount of foreign and domestic wool disposed of in the three principal markets up to December 12, 1895, amounted to 347,060,105 pounds, as compared with 261,667,229 pounds December 15, 1892. It will be also memorable for an unprecedented development of the worsted industry and for the lead which combed yarn fabrics have held in the woolen dry goods trade, notably in cloths for men's wear. And, finally, it has seen some tardy recovery in values of the staple from the depression of two years ago.

"Some idea of the recovery in values of domestic wool during the year may be obtained by a comparison of prices December 21, 1895, with rates January 1. At the earlier date, Ohio XX and above was quoted at 17 to 18 cents; at the latter, 19 to 20 cents, a XXX selling at 21 cents; Ohio and Michigan X, in January, 15 to 17 cents, in December, 16 to 18 cents; No. 1 wools, at the commencement of the year, 18 to 20 cents; at the close, 20 to 22 cents; one-half and three-eighths unwashed combing, 15 to 16 cents in January; 16 to 18 cents in December; three-eighths and one-fourth blood combing, 16 to 17 cents early in the year; 17 to 19 cents at the close. Fine medium Wyoming and Utah, in January, 10 to 12 cents; in December, 12 to 13 cents; eastern Oregon, in January, 11½ to 12 cents; in December, 12 to 13½ cents. Stocks of domestic wool December 21, 1895, in the three principal markets, amount in toto to 53,726,588 pounds.

"Stocks of foreign wool at the same points aggregate 27,241,200 pounds.

"The total supply of domestic wool in all the markets of the country, together with unreported lots, will amount to 101,726,238 pounds, which, combined with the quantity of foreign wool in the three great seaboard markets, will make the grand total (about) 123,967,438 pounds."

Mr. VEST. I hold in my hand a statement from the American Wool and Cotton Reporter as to the number of mills in the United States in 1895, which shows a vast increase in every department of the woolen industry. I will insert it in my remarks and will not weary the Senate by reading it.

The extract referred to is as follows:

MILL BUILDING—NEW ENTERPRISES LAUNCHED THE PAST SIX MONTHS AND DURING 1895—COMPILED FROM THE REPORTER'S WEEKLY BULLETIN OF NEW ENTERPRISES.

The past six months has seen the undertaking of the construction of many textile mills that will stand for years to come as monuments of what brains, energy, and money can produce in these days of active competition. While the last half of the year 1895 has not such a brilliant record as regards the construction of textile plants as the first six months can boast, still it is a record to be proud of, and can not but demonstrate the healthy, steady, and rapid growth of the textile industry of the country, thereby opening more widely a field for the investment of the savings of the people and furnishing employment, either directly or indirectly, for thousands of persons.

The last half of 1895 has seen 156 new mill enterprises set on foot, ranging in importance from small spinning mills in the South to large and imposing affairs, such as the new mill of the Berkshire Manufacturing Company, Adams, Mass., which is to be 440 by 118½ feet, five stories, the equipment consisting of 80,000 spindles and 2,100 looms, and the whole costing in the neighborhood of $1,000,000. As compared with the previous six months there have been 45 mills less put in way of construction in the half year just closed. The number of mill enterprises set on foot during the first half of 1895 was something exceptional, and the fact that the succeeding six months did not hold the pace should be no cause for alarm. The year 1895 will long be remembered as one of the most active in the annals of textile-mill construction the country has yet seen, no less than 357 new enterprises having been launched within that period, being one more than during that memorable and prosperous year, 1892. The past year shows a gain over 1894 of 94 mill plants, there having been undertaken in the latter year 263 new enterprises; in 1893, 279, and in 1892, 356. In comparison with the last half of 1894, the past six months shows a gain of 9 mills.

The cotton mills hold the palm in matter of numbers, the number of new concerns being 73, exactly the same as in the previous six months. Next come knitting mills with 42, or 15 less than in the previous six months; woolen, 23, also a loss of 15; miscellaneous, 11, a loss of 6, and silk, 7, a loss of 9.

The number of new enterprises undertaken during the past six months, as compared with the previous six months, and for the past year, as compared with the previous one, are as follows:

	Last half 1895.	First half 1895.	Year 1895.	Year 1894.
Woolen	23	38	61	45
Cotton	73	73	146	101
Knitting	42	57	99	69
Silk	7	16	23	21
Miscellaneous	11	17	28	27
Total	156	201	357	263

North Carolina once more heads the list with 32 new mills, a total for the year of 63; then comes Pennsylvania with 17, or 46 for the year; next, New York with 16, or 39 for the year; then Massachusetts, who boasts of 15, or 34 for the year; then Georgia with 14, or 28 for the year; then South Carolina with 10, the total number for the year being 32; Rhode Island has 7, with a total for the year of 12; also Alabama with 7, or 12 for the year. The remainder are scattered among 17 other States in numbers from 1 to 5.

The South is attracting large amounts of Northern capital, and deservedly so, but at the same time the textile interests of the North are not being neglected, but are steadily absorbing large sums of money that is ever looking for safe and profitable investment. One noticeable feature, which can not but show that cotton manufacturers have confidence of profits yet to accrue from the manufacture of textile goods, is the fact that several concerns already operating large mills have seen fit to erect additional mills, thereby largely increasing their capacity, in some instances to the doubling point.

Manufacturers generally are fully alive to the importance of the improved facilities for the production of their goods, and demonstrate this fact by the way they have added new machinery. Additions, both in the way of buildings and machinery, have been the order of the day, many of them being of such size as to approach the importance of new mills. Lots of worn out and antiquated machinery have given way to the newest and most improved that money can buy, with a view to producing the maximum amount of goods at a minimum cost, this being made absolutely necessary by the keenness of competition.

Mr. VEST. In 1895, under a year of the Wilson law, there have been constructed in the United States 61 woolen mills against 45 in the last year of the McKinley law. How do our friends on the other side of the Chamber explain this disparity? How do they account for the fact that this industry, which has been "murdered by the Wilson bill," is now putting up new mills, to say nothing of the vast improvements spoken of in the article I hold in my hand? I have here the annual review from the Wool and Cotton Reporter of the mill buildings in the United States, giving the number of new woolen mills and cotton mills in every State of the Union. It shows the figures which I have named in the relative proportion of 61 to 45.

Mr. VEST. It is impossible for me to conceive how anything but partisan blindness can overlook the effect of free wool upon woolen manufacture and the production of wool in this country. I say nothing of the results to the consumer, which to every honest legislator should be the first and principal consideration. Woolen clothing to-day is cheaper than ever before, and the free-wool clause of the Wilson Act is a benefaction not only to the manufacturers and woolgrowers, but to the poor and humble in the harshest and coldest latiutdes of our broad land.

There never was so complete an exemplification of the unquestionable truth and correctness of the Democratic position on the tariff as the present wool schedule. I repeat that if there were nothing else in the Wilson Act I am glad we enacted it, because it has shown every impartial and honest man that protection for protection's sake, instead of being beneficial to a people, is absolutely destructive to their best interest. I have here a number of extracts, all taken from protection sources, showing the truth, elaborated, of what I have said. I have extracts from the Boston market and the New York market in the last year.

I come now to sheep, which the other side say have been butchered by millions on the Western prairies. I take from the Wool and Cotton Reporter extracts from letters received from Oregon, California, Washington, and a number of other Western States, including the Dakotas, showing that the sheep flocks are increasing now under the Wilson Act, and that there are more sheep today than there were a year ago; that the insane idea of rushing their sheep into the markets for mutton has been abandoned, and that the sheep growers have now at last found that not in high duties is their safety, but in free wool, which enables the manufacturer to use the American product, mixing it with the foreign product that we can not produce in this country, thereby giving employment to his mill, and furnishing a better article of goods at a cheaper rate to the American consumer.

I have here a list of the advances in wages by woolen mills. Twice during the last year, in some instances, and three times in others the wages of employees were advanced by the woolen mills, which are running day and night. And yet we are told by the Senator from New Hampshire that the woolen mills of New England are upon the verge of bankruptcy. I have here the statement showing the fact that mills which were closed under the McKinley law have been opened under the Wilson Act. I know that statements can be brought here from manufacturers that they are in favor of a duty on wool. But why? Because it is a subject of bargain between them and the woolgrowers. The shepherd kings of Ohio stand with a million votes, they say, ready to destroy any public man who dares to vote for free wool. The same men who counseled their neighbors to destroy their sheep and make mutton of them are now telling the Republican leaders, "Unless you repudiate the duties of the McKinley law and the Wilson law and the Senate bill, and give us a duty hitherto unheard of in the annals of protection, we will hurl 1,000,000 votes against you at the polls."

Therefore the Manufacturers' Association of Philadelphia meets in solemn conclave and resolves that a duty should be put on wool. But mark the sequel in that resolution: "Put a duty on wool, and then give a compensatory duty to us." There is the honey in that hive; there is the milk in that cocoanut. "Tax wool, but give us an increased duty; put money in our pockets." Then they turn and put their fraternal arm around the woolgrower of the West and say, "Brother, I am your friend; bring your million votes and increase duties on woolen goods for me." That is the whole of this secret. Mr. Lawrence said that he applied to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, under the chairmanship of Mr. DINGLEY, to be heard upon this great interest, and they shut the door in his face. He left the Capitol swearing vengeance, with blood literally in his eye, and called his association here again, on the 20th instant, in order to inform Congress that there are a million votes in this country that demand a duty upon wool.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WARREN. For a question.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. While the Senator from Missouri is telling us the secrets of the men who manufacture wool, and since he has proven to his satisfaction that wool is higher under the Wilson law than it was under the McKinley law, and that the manufacturers have done better in the last year than ever before, I should like to have him proceed further and tell why the manufacturers and woolgrowers are asking for a tariff.

Mr. VEST. I have been trying to explain it. My command of the English language is very poor and possibly I have not been able to convey my meaning, but I thought I had made it very plain. Mr. Lawrence wants a duty upon wool, so as to exclude foreign wools and give him the monopoly of the market, in order that he can put up the price of his domestic wool to any figure he pleases. The woolen manufacturers want an increased duty upon their goods so as to shut out the foreign manufacturer and give them the monopoly in their special interest. That is the basis of protection. That is the great, sublime, Christian doctrine of "You tickle me and I will tickle you." It permeates and pervades the whole tariff fabric, and that, to speak plainly, is the curse of the scheme. It puts up the price of everything to the American consumer in order that the profits may be divided among certain classes.

The Democratic party has always opposed it, and will continue to oppose it, because it holds, with its great founder, Mr. Jefferson, that this Government is made for the people without governmental partnership with any class, burdens and benefits to be borne alike by all, and, let me add, every man to pay taxes to the General Government in proportion to the protection that is given to his property. By that doctrine the Democratic party will live or cease to live. I have no hesitation in saying that the time will soon come when an immense majority of the American people will reach the conclusion that a return to true Jeffersonian principles is the only safety for the Republic.

GOLD EXPORTS.

But let us go further. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] told us, referring to another portion of his address, that the cause of gold exports is a deficit in the revenue, and that it is only necessary to increase the receipts of the Government in order to stop the exportation of gold. I have not time nor strength to read the tables which absolutely disprove that statement. I have carefully prepared extracts from the Government reports, showing that in the years when there was a surplus of revenue there was the largest export of gold.

The Secretary of the Treasury in his report proves beyond question, it seems to me logically, that it is not the deficiency in the revenue that causes the exportation of gold. I think the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who spoke the other day, came nearer the truth when he said the exportation of gold came from the balance of trade being against us. This is shown by the fact that from the table which I have before me, and which I will take the liberty of printing, it is seen that in those years when the balance of trade, as it is called, was against the United States—that is, when we imported more than we exported—gold was exported to pay the balance. When the balance of trade turned in our favor the imports of gold came into the United States. But I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to one fact. This rule holds good, as shown by the Treasury reports, up to the year 1890, when the Sherman law was passed, and in the following three years there was an excess of exports over imports, and at the same time there were large exports of gold.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. VEST. I am in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver, but I frankly admit the contention of Mr. Carlisle that the scare upon the silver question caused the rule to be broken in the years 1890, 1891, and 1892. The Senator from Ohio says that is not true, because the Bland-Allison law, as it is called, was enacted in 1878 and was in force up to 1890, and that it could not have been the apprehension of free coinage which caused the gold exports from the United States. That is about as logical as to say that this floor would sustain the weight of 2,000 human beings, but that if the weight of 3,000 were put upon it it would not sink.

I admit the proposition that the civilized world is to-day under the control of the gold men. No man can visit Europe without knowing it. Go to Germany, and you will find all the bankers and capitalists and privileged classes in favor of the single gold standard. Go to England, and of course they are for the single gold standard; I mean the privileged classes, though there is a large bimetallic party in the British Parliament. Go to Austria, and you will find it struggling to get back to the single gold standard after having used irredeemable paper money up to 1881; and in France there is the same condition. Everywhere the people are opposed to the single gold standard and the bankers and capitalists are in favor of it. In the United States it is the same. Go to the great moneyed centers, and you will find all the capitalists denouncing the silver craze and the silver lunatics. Go out among the people at large, and Senators will be profoundly astonished in the West and South particularly to find an overwhelming majority of both parties in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

I admit that the financial influence of the world is against silver, and as a logical consequence they were able to influence this country (and if possible would intimidate it) whenever they found there was any approach to free silver coinage. They tolerated the act of 1878, but when the Senator from Ohio gave his great name, world-wide as a financier, to the Sherman Act of 1890, the capitalists of Europe said, "The United States is now going to a silver basis, and we are determined to withdraw our confidence from it." Who doubts this proposition? Look at the condition of the country now.

Mr. President, the other day the Chief Executive issued a proclamation in regard to foreign affairs, asserting the Monroe doctrine, and it was met with enthusiastic acclaim from all sections and classes of the country. What was the response from Great Britain? We heard the hostile guns in this Chamber, and the tail of the British lion was twisted until that royal animal howled like a whipped cur. But did England respond with shot and shell and saber stroke and battle ship? Oh, no. She responded with small pellets of paper called American securities, that were poured upon the New York market; a panic was created, stocks fell, and now look at the sequel. The President of the United States thought proper—rightly and patriotically, and what I complain of is that he did not come to the conclusion before—to offer to the highest bidder the bonds of the Government which he is about to sell to maintain the gold reserve. Two syndicates had been formed in New York, made up of capitalists. It is said in this morning's paper that one of those syndicates, with Mr. Morgan at its head, had hoarded $400,000,000 of gold—an enormous amount. What is the answer to the President's proclamation? Wall street is dissatisfied; Wall street will not have it; the syndicate has hoarded the gold, and we can not have a popular loan in the United States.

Mr. President, could anything be more humiliating, could anything be more in the shape of national dishonor? This great country, with 70,000,000 of the most intellectual and progressive people in the world, with a continent for an inheritance, throttled and manacled by the gold hoarders and holders! When we undertake to establish a foreign policy, when we undertake to protect our own financial system, we are met by these men with the ukase of autocrats, "We have the gold, and we intend to make you sell us your bonds at our own price." War would not be so great a calamity. I heartily indorse the sentiment in the President's message that no greater calamity can come to a people than self-humiliation. What American can go abroad without the blush of shame on his cheek when talking with an intelligent Englishman in regard to our affairs? I met an English gentleman at Cologne and traveled with him, a real gentleman, strange as that may sound to some people who do not think there can be gentlemen there. But there are; and when we were talking, in a friendly way, about the relative strength of our two countries, he said, "We do not propose to fight our American cousins with shells, bullets, and powder. We hold your securities. We have built your railroads, we own your breweries, we have your mills, and you can not afford to fall out with us."

In New York each morning where do the brokers and speculators run? They hasten to the foreign market reports, and if the English market is up, the American market corresponds; if the English market is down, the American market droops also. England is the great barometer financially for the United States, and we who should be the most independent people in the world are to-day subsidiary to these foreign influences on account of the single gold standard. We are worshiping the same fetich, we are idolators in the same temple under the present system, and if we undertake our emancipation we are immediately told "not to talk about silver, because they will pour their securities upon us and bankrupt our country."

Mr. President, what honest man could live under such a system in his individual relations with his neighbor? What would you think of yourself if a rich neighbor should come to you and say, "Pay me my money or I will turn your wife and children out before the cold and bitter wind"? Nationally we are in that condition. Why, better anything than to have ourselves manacled and gyved as we are now under the single gold standard, which we are told is a synonym with commercial and national prosperity.

I have already produced tables showing (in answer to the Senator from Ohio when he says that if we have enough revenue to pay for the expenses of the Government no gold will go abroad) that year after year, with a surplus in the Treasury, gold was exported.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S SCHEME.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the last portion of my remarks. It is one of the chief regrets of my public life that I have been forced, against my inclination, into antagonism with the head of my party. I make no apology for saying that I believe the principles of the Democratic party necessary to the welfare of this country, and that anything which looks toward its disorganization or the weakening of its great objects is detrimental to the public good. So believing, never, never in all my life have I been encountered with so much self-regret as when I was compelled to part with the head of my party upon this financial question, and not only with him, but with my personal friend, the Secretary of the Treasury, with whom my relations have always been of the most cordial description. But it was impossible for me to remain a Senator upon this floor, with my ideas of representation, and do otherwise than I have done. I have always been a bimetallist, but whatever might have been my personal opinion, an enormous majority of the people who sent me here are the friends of silver coinage. No constitutional question was involved, for I have always held that no constituency or legislature could instruct me to violate the Constitution as I understood it, but on questions of policy they have the right. If I had not been in favor of the free coinage of silver I would have given place to one who could have come here and represented the Democrats of Missouri faithfully and honestly.

Now, Mr. President, there are propositions in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury to which I can never subscribe. The theory of our friends upon the other side in regard to the financial evils that afflict the country is that if more money be furnished for the ordinary expenses of the Government there will be no export of gold and there will be no disaster. I doubt, with great respect, the sincerity of that statement in certain quarters. I make no allusion to any Senator. The House of Representatives has sent us two bills, one of them called the bond bill and the other the tariff bill. In the bond bill they provide for $50,000,000 of 3 per cent certificates to meet contingent deficits in the Treasury. Now, if they believed that this amount was sufficient and that this deficit was probable, and if they disbelieved Mr. Carlisle, who says that the deficit for this fiscal year will be $17,000,000 and there will be a surplus in 1897 for the fiscal year of $7,000,000, and who states that he wants no more money to carry on the Government—even if they disbelieved that, why did they not content themselves with 3 per cent certificates and the $50,000,000 to meet the deficit? Why do they go further and undertake to put an additional duty upon the necessaries of life? Sixty per cent of the specific duties under the McKinley bill, which now the Republican caucus is considering the propriety of increasing to 20 per cent, including sugar, over the Wilson law. Why this enormous increase in order to get more money to carry on the Government in face of the declaration of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury and the actual figures as shown by official reports?

Why, Mr. President, our friends ignore entirely the fact that $182,288,040 have been received from the sale of bonds, and that of this amount $77,000,000 in United States and Treasury notes is now in the Treasury subject to ordinary expenses, and not called for now by any demand upon the Government. There is $77,-

000,000 to meet any probable deficit in the next two years. That is entirely ignored. They send us, to speak in western vernacular, a double-barrel bill, providing for $50,000,000 of 3 per cent certificates and then an enormous increase of tariff duties on which they calculate to get $40,000,000, but which, I will undertake to prove, if they adopt these new amendments, will amount to nearly one hundred million. I doubt, therefore, the sincerity of this device on the part of our friends in the other House when they send us these two measures for our adoption.

Now, upon the other hand, what does the Secretary of the Treasury propose to us? He proposes to retire absolutely the Sherman Treasury notes and the greenbacks and rely upon the national banks for the circulation to carry on the business of this country.

Mr. President, I would be thoroughly ashamed of myself if I attacked banks because they were moneyed institutions, but upon the principles which I believe should control an American legislator I would not under any contingency give the enormous power to the national banks which is proposed by this scheme of the Secretary of the Treasury. I would give to no corporation invented by mortal man the power to control the volume of money in the United States. It is a temptation beyond description, that I would not for one instant think of hazarding.

If Mr. Carlisle's scheme of retiring greenbacks and Treasury notes absolutely and putting nothing in their place but national-bank notes be adopted, we might just as well abandon all idea of escaping the ownership by those corporations of the whole country.

I had occasion to say years ago, when I first became a member here—nearly eighteen years ago—that I would never vote for any bill that recognized the principle now in the national-banking act that enabled them to take out their bonds and retire their circulation, or put in more bonds and increase the circulation. I remember very well in 1881, when my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] was Secretary of the Treasury—about the last year of his administration—that we attempted to force these national banks to help us fund the public debt. We thought, as the Supreme Court have decided, that they were financial servants and agents and creatures of the Government. They asserted that they were not, and their officers thronged these lobbies and corridors and told us if we dared to force them to take 3 per cent bonds they would create a panic that would rock this country to its center and destroy its credit. We passed the bill through both Houses and a panic came in New York, and stocks fell from 25 to 40 points in four hours. That was the response of Wall street to the legislation of Congress, as the incipient panic now in Wall street is the response to the bond order of the President.

Mr. COCKRELL. Eighteen million dollars of national-bank notes were retired in one day.

Mr. VEST. I think nearly nineteen.

Mr. COCKRELL. Eighteen million dollars.

Mr. VEST. Over $18,000,000 of national-bank notes were retired in one day in response to that legislation by representatives of the people. If I had any doubt about this dangerous power in the hands of private corporations, called quasi-public corporations, that would have been a lesson which would have lasted me during my public life, if it had continued for half a century. Mr. President, I learned that lesson not only from events, but it was taught to me by the logic and eloquence of the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury. Now, will the Secretary read the extract from Mr. Carlisle's report that I have marked, to show his present position as to national banks?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whatever objections to a national banking system may have heretofore existed, or may still exist, among our people, upon economic or other grounds, the fact must be recognized that it has been so long established, and, notwithstanding its admitted defects, has served such a useful purpose in furnishing a convenient form of currency of uniform value throughout the country, that an attempt at this time to abolish it, or materially abridge the franchises of the institutions organized under it, would not only be unsuccessful, but would provoke injurious agitation when the precarious condition of our fiscal affairs demands repose and such a restoration of confidence as will enable the people to avail themselves of all the facilities that can be afforded for the transaction of their business. The national banking associations now in operation have been established under charters granted by the Government, and so long as they are obedient to the laws and useful to the community it would be an act of bad faith to deprive them of the privileges thus secured.

Mr. VEST. Two points will be noticed, and I bring them out in no spirit of unkindness to Mr. Carlisle, for I am not attempting to convict him of inconsistency. I am attempting to use his great ability and his unanswerable logic in defense of my own opinions, which are unchanged. There are two points in that report: first, that the charters of the national banks constitute a contract with the Government. I say the Supreme Court of the United States decided otherwise. We can take away their charters to-morrow or control them in any way we think necessary for the public good. In the second place, he says that the system is a good system, beneficial to the people of this country.

Mr. President, in 1881, when the national banks precipitated a panic upon this country because we attempted to make them help fund the public debt at 3 per cent, and when Mr. Hayes, President of the United States, vetoed that bill, and we were unable to pass it over his veto, Mr. Carlisle was a member of the House of Representatives, and I heard him deliver the best speech, the greatest speech, of his life in denunciation of the national banking system and proving that their charters constitute no contract with the Government. Will the Secretary read, and I will promise not to trespass any more, from the speech of Mr. Carlisle in 1881?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Sir, this is not the first effort that has been made in Congress to compel these creatures and agencies of the Government to assist it in reducing the interest charge upon the people, and if it shall fail now it will not be the first demonstration of their power over the financial legislation of the country. It is a humiliating confession for the representatives of the people to make, but it is true, nevertheless, that ten years ago, when these institutions were fewer in number than they are to-day, when their organization was less perfect, and when their combined capital was not so great, they had power enough to defeat in this House a provision which was designed by the present Secretary of the Treasury to compel them to aid in funding a large part of the public debt at 4, 4½, and 5 per cent.

* * * * * * *

There are no elements of a contract in such legislation, and therefore the extent to which the Government will or ought to go in the exercise of its power of supervision and control is always a question of policy and not a question of power.

The two Houses of Congress, representing the aggregate interests of 50,000,000 people, have, after mature deliberation, passed a bill which the banks have chosen to consider obnoxious to them, and forthwith—within thirteen days—they have contracted the currency to the extent of $18,722,340, and precipitated a crisis which would have been disastrous to the country had it not been met by measures which they had no power to prevent. The prompt action of the Secretary of the Treasury in purchasing a large amount of bonds at the city of New York, and the course of the Canadian banks in throwing seven or eight millions of their loanable capital on the market alone prevented a catastrophe from the effects of which we might not have entirely recovered for many years. When Secretary McCulloch, several years since, in pursuance of his contraction policy, began to retire and cancel legal-tender notes at the rate of $4,000,000 per month, it produced such consternation in business circles that Congress was forced to intervene at once and arrest the process by the passage of a joint resolution; but now we have seen nearly $19,000,000 of circulation withdrawn in less than half a month, not by the Government, but by institutions in the management of which the Government has no voice, and still gentlemen here insist that the power under which this has been done, and under which it may at any time be repeated, shall not be taken away. Why, sir, the whole contraction of legal-tender Treasury notes under the provisions of the resumption act, from January 14, 1875, to May 31, 1878, when it was prohibited by law, was only $34,318,984, not twice as much in more than three years as the bank contraction has been in less than two weeks.

This experience warns us that we can not safely permit this great power to remain in the hands of these institutions unchecked by legal restrictions. It is an engine of destruction standing in the very narrowest part of the way to permanent industrial and commercial prosperity in this country; for there can be no such prosperity anywhere in the midst of sudden and enormous contractions of the currency; nor will prudent and experienced business men embark in large and expensive enterprises when the power to make such contractions is held by private and interested parties who acknowledge no restraints except public sentiment and their own views of the public welfare. By law the volume of legal-tender notes is limited to $346,681,016, while under the policy of the Government nearly $150,000,000 in gold and silver coin are permanently withheld from circulation and hoarded in the Treasury. Of the $454,000,000 gold coin in the country, the Government and the banks held, on the 1st day of November last, $254,000,000, and the people only $200,000,000. The circulation of State banks is taxed out of existence; the coinage of silver is limited by statute to $4,000,000 per month, and so it appears that by statute or public policy every form of currency which the people can use in the transaction of their business is restricted except national-bank notes. They alone are perfectly free from all restriction, legal or otherwise, and upon them the people are compelled to rely under existing circumstances for the additional facilities of exchange necessary to enable them to carry on their growing industries and conduct their rapidly increasing commercial enterprises.

What a fatal policy it is, in view of these considerations, to retain on the statute book as part of our currency system a law which subjects all these great interests to the arbitrary will or mistaken judgment of 2,000 corporations. The present attempt to provide against a recurrence of the danger from which the country has just made its escape, and to reestablish the original and conservative principle in the management of our currency may fail, but in the end the legislation now proposed, or something equivalent to it, will certainly be demanded by the public sentiment of the country; and in this belief I am content to abide the result of this long contest, whatever it may be.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I can add nothing to that argument made by the Secretary of the Treasury when a member of the popular branch of Congress. I have never indulged in such denunciation of national banks as is found in that address. I have never given so exaggerated a statement, if it be exaggerated—I will say a statement so highly colored, in regard to the danger from this system. Therefore I am not prepared to follow the Secretary of the Treasury, distinguished as he is, when he changes his opinion and tells us now that their charters constitute a contract with the National Government and that they are necessary to the financial prosperity of the country.

AMOUNT OF CIRCULATION.

There is one other thing in that report which I never can indorse. The Secretary of the Treasury states that the circulation outside of the Treasury in this country amounts to $1,598,859,316. Mr. President, it is simply impossible that this could be the per capita circulation in the United States. This old fraud—for it is nothing else—has been sent down in the Treasury Department from one statistician to another until, like the common law, it has been crystallized by custom and usage and it is absolutely believed to be the truth. Mr. Carlisle makes in his report a summary of the per capita circulation, and admits that it was $24.27 per capita in 1894, and in 1895 it is $22.72 per capita. I undertake to say that it is not $10 per capita in the United States to-day.

We are told that the country has all the money necessary for the transaction of business. I deny it. The curse of our system to-day is that the money is congested in the great centers; it is not among the people at large.

The advocates of the single gold standard make no distinction between falling prices and low prices. When we have low prices in the country it may be well for the poor and humble, but falling prices constitute a curse to all classes and all sections. No man will invest in property when he thinks he can buy it more cheaply the next day, or month, or year, and the result is that now, with a single gold standard, the purchasing power of gold being increased daily and the price of everything else falling, we have falling prices and congestion in business.

Here is the solution, in my judgment, of this whole matter. If we had more money in circulation, and the capitalist was forced to let go his hoarded money and put it into investment, we then would have prosperity unexampled with the great resources at our command. The viciousness of the single gold standard is the element of contraction. No country can be prosperous with an increasing population and a decreasing volume of money, and the history of the world shows it. We tried it here in this country after the great war, and McCulloch, Secretary of the Treasury, burned up millions of dollars in greenbacks because, he said, it was immoral to have a superabundant circulation. We ought to-day be the most moral people in the world. We ought to-day to be ready for the "new Jerusalem, the temple not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens." If scarcity of money makes a people moral, out in my country they are saints divine and angels. There are counties in Missouri to-day where the people, great as that State is, rich as it is, resort to barter. Money in banks? Oh, yes; and money congested in the centers. Why, what is the matter with your single gold standard system? What is the condition to-day? With our enormous crops—why my State can feed the world, the Valley of the Nile would never compete with it—I am afraid in this cold weather to hear that they are burning their corn for fuel, as they have done in the far West. Enormous crops and falling in value, while the Eastern States declare there is plenty of money, and exclaim, "Oh, what is the matter with those haymakers out West who know nothing about finance"?

The Secretary of the Treasury calculates that there is $504,000,000 of gold in circulation. Where is it? I should like for any man to specify where that gold is. We know there is $160,000,000 in the national banks. Some Senator the other day talked about the stocking filled with gold. I should like to see one. I should like to find the old woman in this country, outside of Wall street, who has got a stocking full of gold; I could make more than my salary by exhibiting her as a financial curiosity. [Laughter.] "Money hid away behind bricks and in hollow trees!" Why, Mr. President, there is not a five-dollar gold piece to the county out West, outside of the banks. You may address an audience of 2,500 or 3,000 people and ask, Is there a man here with a gold piece? He can not be found. There is not any gold in circulation. There is not $500,000 outside of the banks and Wall street or the gold speculators.

Permit me to ask right here, in regard to this idea of a popular loan, where is the money to come from? The people have no gold. It is not among them. The syndicates have got it, and that result is the natural and legitimate offspring of the single gold standard. It is financial monopoly; it is financial autocracy; as much opposed to republican institutions as the standing armies of the monarchies and despotisms of Europe. Why does Mr. Carlisle pretend to tell us, even if he could find this gold, that the bank reserves are in circulation? What is the amount of the national-bank reserve which the banks can not touch without violating the law? Three hundred and fifty million dollars. Is that in circulation among the people? Yet he counts it. Are the reserves of the savings banks and loan associations and State banks to be included? Their reserves amount to $491,000,000. Is that in circulation? Do you tell me the national banks or these State banks violate State and national laws? I grant you they could do it. They did it in New York, when these great banks, to avert a panic, as they said, violated the law and their charters in using clearing-house certificates and refusing to depositors who came to get their own money out of the vaults that which belonged to them, and claiming as a merit that they had trampled upon the law of the land. I grant you they violated the law then, and they were lauded for it; but if an individual had done such a thing he would have been called dishonest and run the chances of indictment.

The Senator from Ohio told us the other day that out of the greenback circulation there was from $20,000,000 to $40,000,000 lost. How much of the paper money is burned in the large fires and lost by accident, to say nothing of the loss of metallic money among 70,000,000 people is unknown. Mr. Carlisle in his report estimates the loss of national-bank notes as two-fifths of 1 per cent. Yet that is mere conjecture; it is the mere supposition of a Government clerk. We know that the loss is much greater upon all paper money, but no account is taken of it. Take the reserves of the banks, State and national. They amount to more than $850,000,000, not in circulation under the law. I undertake to say there is not $250,000,000 of gold in circulation to-day. And, then, if you consider the loss upon paper money of all kinds there is in all $1,000,000,000 counted in the Treasury report not in circulation, which reduces the per capita to about $8. France has $42 per capita, and is the most prosperous country in the world. But France adopted a different system from ours after her great war with Germany. She paid Germany a billion dollars in gold. Then did she contract her paper money? No. On the contrary, she expanded the circulation, and thus opened her factories, revived agriculture, encouraged commerce, and to-day France, with $750,000,000 of silver money, is the proudest country, financially, on the face of the earth. When the Baring Bros. failed, France loaned $10,000,000 in gold to the Bank of England to prevent it from closing its doors.

No, Mr. President; there is an irrepressible conflict on this question, and men must align themselves upon one side or the other. If you propose to retain the single gold standard and the national-bank circulation, then go to the people and have it ratified and put an end to the present condition of distrust and unrest and uncertainty. But if, as I believe, the people of this country would respond to the call of those who, as Democrats and Americans, demand that one-half of the metallic money of the world shall not be destroyed; that this financial despotism shall be struck down; that we shall have gold and silver, the money of our fathers, to be the money of our children, we propose to crystallize the popular will by legislation.

Mr. STEWART obtained the floor.

Mr. QUAY. Does the Senator from Nevada desire to proceed this evening?

After twenty-eight minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 8, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under Rule XXIV, clause 2, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker, as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting communications from the accounting officers of the Department giving lists of officers who are now delinquent in rendering their accounts or in payment of balances due from them; which was referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an examination and review of the contract between the United States and Stout, Hall & Bangs, and also a statement of the equitable sum due said contractors; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office replying to the resolution of the House of December 12, 1895, relating to certain lands along the Union and Central Pacific railways; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Letters from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copies of the findings filed by the court in the following-named cases; which were referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed:

Wiley J. Wyatt, administrator, against The United States;
Arnold Bonnifield, administrator, against The United States; and Robert F. Reynolds against The United States.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under Rule XIII, clause 2, the following reports of committees were handed in at the Clerk's desk, referred to their appropriate calendars, and otherwise disposed of as indicated below:

JAMES H. OSGOOD.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 138) granting an increase of pension to James H. Osgood; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANNIE M. GREENE.

Mr. SULLOWAY also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 142) granting a pension to Annie M. Greene; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SIDNEY S. JORDAN AND EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have a joint resolution read for information, and if there be no objection I will ask the consent of the House for its passage.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 65) to authorize Lieut. Sidney S. Jordan, Fifth United States Artillery, and Capt. Edward C. Carter, assistant surgeon, United States Army, to accept medals from the British Government.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Lieut. Sidney S. Jordan, Fifth United States Artillery, and Capt. Edward C. Carter, assistant surgeon, United States Army, be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept from the Government of Great Britain the medals awarded to them, respectively, for their humane services to the shipwrecked crew of the British ship Strathblane.

The SPEAKER. This will be admissible only by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROW, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MEMBER FROM THE STATE OF UTAH.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the matter of seating Clarence E. Allen, member-elect from Utah.

We, your Committee on the Judiciary, have had the above matter under consideration, and while the members of the committee differ regarding the interpretation of the certificate of election presented to us, yet there can be no question of Mr. Allen's election. And your committee therefore recommend that the oath be administered to him, and that he be seated.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

The motion of Mr. BRODERICK was agreed to.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Utah, Mr. Allen, is present, and I ask that the oath be administered to him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah will step forward.

Mr. Allen of Utah came forward and took the oath of office.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, the bill (H. R. 1702) providing for the erection and construction of a post-office building at South Bend, Ind., and making an additional appropriation therefor, was referred to the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads. I am directed by the committee to report it back and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the change will be made, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

There was no objection.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON THE POST-OFFICE AND POST-ROADS.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I also have the usual resolution providing for the printing and binding of matter for the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads be authorized to have printed and bound such papers and documents, for the use of said committee, as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered or to be considered by said committee during the Fifty-fourth Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

EMPLOYEES IN POST-OFFICES, ETC.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a privileged report from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the following resolution—

"Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the House as to the number of clerks employed in post-offices since June 30, 1895, to perform the work formerly done by canceling machines, together with the amount of salary paid such clerks; also, the number of clerks in the first twenty principal post-offices who were reduced in amount of salary received, the number who received an increase of salary, and the number of new clerks employed since January 1, 1895"—

Beg leave to report the same back with the recommendation that it be adopted, with the following amendments:

Strike out "January 1, 1895," and insert "June 30, 1894," in last two lines, and add:

"And all information and data necessary to show the reasons of the Department in making such changes, and the results regarding the efficiency and cost of the same."

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I would state to the House that this is a unanimous report of the committee, and unless some member desires to address the House I will ask for its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was then agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Pacific Railroads be authorized to procure the printing and binding of such documents and papers as it deems necessary to facilitate its inquiries during the Fifty-fourth Congress, the expense of the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. POWERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a similar resolution, from the Committee on Public Lands.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and hereby is, authorized to have printed and bound such documents and papers for the use of said committee as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered or to be considered by the committee during the Fifty-fourth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. What committee was this?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not object to the consideration of the resolution. I think it is in the proper form; but I do suggest to the gentleman who introduced the preceding resolution, giving the Committee on Pacific Railroads authority to have printing and binding done, that he ought not to tax it to the contingent fund of the House. It is not usual to do so. This printing is not paid for out of the contingent fund of the House, but, as the resolution under consideration provides, it is paid for out of the appropriation for printing.

Mr. LACEY. I will state to the gentleman that the resolution I have offered is the same as has been offered in previous Congresses.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is the other one to which I refer. I think the gentleman from Vermont ought to ask unanimous consent to have so much of it stricken out as provides that the payment should be made out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. That can be disposed of after this resolution has been considered. The question is on the resolution which has been read.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, it is proposed that the resolution immediately preceding the one just adopted be amended by striking out the words "the expense of the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House." Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the bill (H. R. 1785) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to W. H. Wallace Post, No. 66, Grand Army of the Republic, of Eldorado, Kans., and for other purposes, with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that reference will be made.

MRS. FANNY WARREN.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, I notice that the bill (H. R. 3332) granting a pension to Mrs. Fanny Warren has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, when, in my judgment, it should have been referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I ask that that change of reference be made.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think that it ought to be done by order of the committee.

The SPEAKER. It should be done by order of the committee. If the gentleman will examine into the matter he will see the Committee on Invalid Pensions can claim reference of it if they have jurisdiction.

BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent of the House that an order be made for printing the paper I hold in my hand. It has been handed me by the Secretary of State, with the request that it be printed. Congress passed a joint resolution April 19, 1890, requesting the President to enter into negotiations with Mexico in regard to affairs on the Rio Grande—the water supply, the changing channel, and uncertainty of rights. The paper in question is the report of Maj. Anson Mills, Tenth Cavalry, to the Secretary of State, December 10, 1888, concerning the fluctuations in the course of the Rio Grande River, the best method of dealing with floods, and saving the water for power and irrigation. It discusses that whole subject, and the Mexican minister and the Secretary both desire it printed in the interest of our foreign relations, and especially of the pending negotiations with Mexico under the concurrent resolution of April 29, 1890. It is only eleven pages of typewritten manuscript. I have consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Printing, and also with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], who consider it within the power of the House to have the printing done as requested, including the resolution of April 29, 1890.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be ordered printed as a House document.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS AGAINST TRUSTS.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the resolution offered by Mr. HUBBARD, calling on the Attorney-General for certain information in respect to the enforcement of the laws against trusts, combinations, and conspiracies, with the recommendation that a substitute be adopted; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to report to the House of Representatives what steps, if any, he has taken to enforce the law of the United States against trusts, combinations, and conspiracies, and what further legislation, if any, is needed, in his opinion, to protect the people against the same.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the original resolution introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HUBBARD] and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary be read.

The original resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to immediately report to this House why he has not enforced the provisions of section 73 of chapter 349, Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, volume 2, relating to the suppression and prevention of trusts, combinations, conspiracies, and agreements.

Mr. HENDERSON. It will be observed, Mr. Speaker, that the original resolution assumes a certain condition of things as to the existence of which the committee have no evidence, and therefore they have unanimously recommended the adoption of the substitute, which does not assume that the law has been violated or that there has been any failure to execute it, but calls upon the Attorney-General for any information that he may have in regard to the execution of the laws against trusts, and also for any suggestions as to further legislation that he may deem necessary. I move the adoption of the substitute.

The substitute was adopted.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was adopted was laid on the table; and the original resolution was laid on the table.

FUR SEALS.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution of inquiry which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform the House:

1. What amount the Treasury has received from the lessees of the Alaska seal islands for the rental and tax each year since the new lease of those islands from May 1, 1890, to date, together with the number of skins annually taken under the provisions of said lease, and also the amount received from the lessees and the number of skins taken each year from 1868 to 1890.

2. What has been the cost of policing Bering Sea and the North Pacific each year since 1890; also the amount expended for the support of the natives of the seal islands by the Treasury Department each year since 1890.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is important that the Committee on Ways and Means should have the information called for, and I move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

JOHN T. WATERMAN.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Accounts, presented the following report:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution offered by Mr. CRISP, directing the Clerk of the House to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House to Annie E. Waterman, widow of John T. Waterman, deceased, late private secretary to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to his salary for six months, and the expenses of the late illness and funeral of said John T. Waterman, said expenses not to exceed the sum of $250, beg leave to report that they respectfully recommend the passage of the resolution.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move the adoption of the resolution, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to Annie E. Waterman, widow of J. T. Waterman, deceased, late private secretary to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to his salary for six months, and that the Clerk be further directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House the expenses of the late illness and funeral of said J. T. Waterman, said expenses not to exceed the sum of $250.

The resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. ALDRICH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

M. F. WATKINS.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Accounts, also presented the following report:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution, offered by Mr. BROWN, to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of M. F. Watkins, deceased, late an employee of the House, a sum equal to his salary for six months and $140 for expenses of his last sickness and burial, beg to report that they respectfully recommend that the resolution do not pass, because the said M. F. Watkins was not an employee of the House at the time of his last sickness and death.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of M. F. Watkins, deceased, late an employee of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to his salary for six months; and that the Clerk be further directed to pay out of the contingent fund the expenses connected with the last sickness and burial of said Watkins, said expenses not to exceed the sum of $140.

Mr. ALDRICH. It will be noticed, Mr. Speaker, that the report in this case is unfavorable. The ground upon which it rests is, as stated in the report itself, that the party to whom the resolution relates was not an employee of the House of Representatives at the time of his death, but was in the employ of the General Government, and, under past decisions of the Comptroller, it has been held that this House is not authorized to provide for such expenditures. The committee have therefore unanimously reported against the adoption of the resolution. I move that the report be concurred in.

The report was adopted, and the resolution was rejected.

EMPLOYEES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Accounts, also presented the following report:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom were referred sundry resolutions, to wit—

"1. Resolved, That John T. Chancey be, and he is hereby, retained on the roll of the House in his present position as special employee, at the salary now provided by law.

"That Lauritz Olsen be, and he is hereby, appointed special employee of the House, at a salary of $1,500 per annum, and that E. L. Currier and Arthur Buchanan be, and they are hereby, appointed special employees of the House, at a salary of $1,200 per annum each.

"That the salaries of said employees shall be paid monthly out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise ordered.

"2. Resolved, That the bookkeeper of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint George Jenison a special messenger to serve in and about the House, at a salary of $100 per month, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until other provision is made therefor.

"3. Resolved, That there be appointed by the Doorkeeper an additional messenger in the reporters' gallery of the House, at $1,200, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

"4. Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be authorized to appoint two overseers of pages, to be paid a salary of $900 per annum each; and eight additional pages, to be paid during the sessions of Congress the compensation now prescribed by law to the pages employed under existing law. The compensation of the employees hereby provided for shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until provision shall be made therefor by law.

"5. Resolved, That the chairmen of the following committees, to wit, the Committee on Ways and Means, Appropriations, Judiciary, Banking and Currency, Coinage, Weights, and Measures, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Rivers and Harbors, Agriculture, Foreign Affairs, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, the Post-Office and Post-Roads, Public Lands, Indian Affairs, Public Buildings and Grounds, Invalid Pensions, Claims, War Claims, and District of Columbia, are hereby authorized to appoint a personal clerk, who shall receive the same compensation and for the same period, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, as is received by the clerks of other members of the House.

"6. Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Board of Capitol Police be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to appoint twelve additional policemen, at an annual salary of $1,100 each, one-half to be paid by the Secretary of the Senate and the other half by the Clerk of the House out of the appropriations for miscellaneous items of the respective Houses until otherwise provided for.

"7. Resolved, That Fred S. Bishop be, and he is hereby, appointed binding clerk for the House, to be borne on the Clerk's roll, at a salary of $1,600 per annum.

"8. Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House is hereby authorized and directed to employ C. W. Coombs as an additional messenger during the Fifty-fourth Congress, to be paid at the rate of $150 per month, out of the contingent fund of the House"—

Beg leave to report as follows:

The total number of extra employees provided for in these resolutions is forty-eight, divided as follows:

Six messengers to the Doorkeeper.
Eight pages.
One binding clerk.
Two overseers of pages.
Twelve Capitol policemen.
Nineteen personal clerks to chairmen of committees.

Your committee has made investigation of the circumstances calling for this addition to the working force of the House and Capitol, and are of the opinion that, with the exceptions herein noted, the needs of the service do not demand the extra help proposed under these resolutions.

In accordance with the precedent established previous to the organization of this Congress, the minority party in the House has been accorded the selection and appointment of four special employees, three of whom are paid from the contingent fund. The legislative appropriation bill provides for the appointment of two special employees, one being assigned to each side of the House.

Resolution No. 1 assigns John T. Chancey to one of the positions, and your committee concurs in and recommends that the said John T. Chancey be retained on the roll of the House in his present position as special employee.

Resolution No. 2, providing for the appointment of George Jenison to the position of special messenger, is hereby approved, with a recommendation that he be assigned to the press gallery in accordance with resolution No. 3.

Resolution No. 4, providing for the appointment of eight additional pages and two overseers of pages, is herewith returned without approval.

Your committee recommends the selection by the Doorkeeper of two pages from the present force of pages who shall have supervision and direction of the pages stationed in the two cloakrooms, and with which arrangement your committee believes the page service will be ample and satisfactory to the members of the House.

Your committee listened attentively to the arguments made by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and House, respectively, for an increase in the force of the Capitol police, but are not satisfied that the same are needed at this time, and disapprove the resolution (No. 6) calling for same.

The proposition embodied in the resolution No. 5, providing for nineteen personal clerks to members who are chairmen of certain committees, has, in the opinion of your committee, more or less force to it; but we do not feel justified in approving same at this time, partly because of the low condition of the contingent fund, and partly because we believe this to be a subject which should receive the consideration of the Committee on Appropriations and be incorporated, if at all, in the legislative bill which emanates from that committee.

Resolution No. 7, providing for the appointment of Fred S. Bishop to the position of binding clerk of the House, at a salary of $1,600 per annum, is herewith returned without approval.

Resolution No. 8, which provides that the Doorkeeper of the House be authorized and directed to employ C. W. Coombs as an additional messenger during the Fifty-fourth Congress, to be paid at the rate of $150 per month out of the contingent fund of the House, is hereby approved.

In conclusion, your committee beg leave to recommend the adoption of the accompanying resolution as a substitute for those referred to in this report:

Resolved, That John T. Chancey be, and he is hereby, retained on the roll of the House in his present position as special employee, at the salary now provided by law.

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint George Jenison an additional messenger in the press gallery of the House, at a salary of $1,200 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided for.

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to select two pages from the present force of pages of the House, who shall act and be known as assistant chiefs of pages, and who shall be placed in charge and have the direction of the pages in the two cloakrooms.

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper is hereby authorized and directed to place on his roll the name of C. W. Coombs as special messenger of the House during the Fifty-fourth Congress, at a compensation of $1,800 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise appropriated for, said Coombs to be in addition to the present force of the Doorkeeper and have desk room in the folding room.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether it is necessary to make any extended remarks on this report, or, indeed, any explanation further than that which the report itself embodies. I simply wish to say on behalf of the committee that they have made a careful and exhaustive examination of the existing condition in regard to the necessity for these extra employees, and of the forty-eight places which these various resolutions proposed to provide the committee have reported favorably upon only three.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to ask my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] a question. The Mr. Coombs whom it is proposed to put upon the rolls at $1,800 a year is one of the old employees of the House, is he not?

Mr. ALDRICH. He is. He has been in the employ of the House for twenty years.

Mr. HOPKINS. When was he discharged from the public service, if at all?

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no information on that score. I simply know that the resolution has been before the committee, and it is the understanding of the committee that this gentleman's place has been filled by another appointment.

Mr. HOPKINS. Do you know who has taken his place?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not, further than that I understand his name is Vail and that he is a resident of the State of New York.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is this person who has taken the place incompetent to discharge the duties to which he has been assigned?

Mr. ALDRICH. My understanding is that he is a thoroughly competent man, having had an experience of several years' duration.

Mr. HOPKINS. If it be true that Mr. Coombs has been discharged, that another man has taken his place, and that this man is competent to fill the position which Mr. Coombs once filled, I should like to know from my colleague why it is that the committee proposes to have Mr. Coombs put upon the rolls at $1,800 a year.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will state for the benefit of my colleague that the Committee on Accounts has no jurisdiction in the appointment of individuals to places provided for under the legislative appropriation bill. It has no jurisdiction of the appointments made by any of the officers of this House. That is a question of which we can not take notice. The facts were presented to us as contained in the resolution providing for the appointment of Major Coombs; that is all we could consider. We believed that a man who has been for twenty years in the service of the House of Representatives and who, as appeared by the testimony especially of the older members, has proved himself of incalculable value, should be retained in some position where his efficient services could be continued.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will inquire whether my colleague conferred with the appointing power as to whether it was important or necessary for the service of the House to continue Major Coombs in his present place—whether provision could not be made for him without creating a new office at a salary of $1,800 a year?

Mr. ALDRICH. Speaking for myself, I will say I have not conferred with the Doorkeeper or any other officer of the House with respect to the necessity of retaining any individual in any particular place. I repeat that the services of Major Coombs have commended themselves to the older members of the House in such a way that it did not seem possible for us to ignore the petitions which came to us from several sources. The interests of the service, the proper conduct of the individual work assigned to members of this House, and which must be discharged in such a way as to do justice to their constituents, and the peculiar relationship which this employee has borne to members, seemed to us sufficient to justify the favorable report we have made on the resolution.

Mr. HOPKINS. If I understand my colleague, the place which Major Coombs has filled is now filled by another man who, the gentleman states, is entirely competent to discharge the duties.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no doubt that is true.

Mr. HOPKINS. If that be true, why is it necessary to create an additional office?

Mr. ALDRICH. I want to say to my colleague that these various resolutions called for the creation of forty-eight extra offices. The committee believe that they have been wise in limiting their favorable recommendation to three of these offices, and wise in recommending that these three places be filled in the manner proposed in the report.

Mr. HOPKINS. I agree with the gentleman that the committee should be commended for the discrimination they have shown, but the fact that they have rejected some forty-odd propositions does not dispense with the necessity of some good and valid reason in favor of this particular proposition before it can commend itself to members of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If the gentleman from Illinois will make careful inquiry, I venture the assertion that he will find out that a thoroughly competent and reliable man, necessary to the members of this House in the carrying out of their public business, has been discharged to satisfy the exorbitant and greedy demands of a "combine," which has filled his place with an incompetent man [applause]; that this is simply another evidence of the infamous character of the proceeding whereby competent employees necessary to the members in the discharge of their duties have had their places taken from them in order to satisfy the greed of some gentlemen who must have places for their constituents. [Renewed applause.]

Mr. ALDRICH. I regret that my friend from Indiana has seen fit to revive unpleasant recollections connected with the early days of the organization of this House. I presume that naturally I might sympathize with him in the remarks he has made. But the committee, in an unbiassed way, without regard, I think, to past events on the lines suggested by my friend from Indiana, have sought to make a report here which will benefit the service. Our committee is prepared to stand by that report. We believe it to be a very modest recommendation, and I think there will be no serious objection to it.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the object of this report recommending these men to places in the public service is not to repair the injury done the public service by the "combine." [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana, who desires to ask a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether or not the Committee on Accounts has investigated to see if some method can not be adopted by which Mr. Coombs can be restored to his place, in order that the members of this House who desire to avail themselves of his services may have an opportunity to do so? I wish to ask also if he has investigated, when that is done, whether it will not be wholly unnecessary to make the additional appointment recommended in this report of the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that I doubt whether it is within the province of the Committee on Accounts to investigate as to the personnel of the appointees of this House further than as these questions may come before them in new resolutions or new business providing for the appointment of additional employees.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If the gentleman will pardon me, the committee has made a favorable recommendation in reference to a certain appointment. Now, it strikes me that, if the facts show that a capable employee has been turned out, it would be entirely germane for the committee to inquire whether his restoration would not make a new appointment wholly unnecessary.

Mr. ALDRICH. Well, I am willing to submit to the judgment of the House whether or not it is necessary.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him this question: Supposing the resolution proposed by the Committee on Accounts should be adopted, what will be the increase in the number of employees of the House, and further, what will be the increase in the monthly expenditures by reason of the change?

Mr. ALDRICH. Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, the number of employees recommended by the resolution of the Committee on Accounts is but three. One of these has been an appointee of the House for a number of years——

Mr. SAYERS. Is it not more than three?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; only three.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is in the process of answering a question now. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. In response to the gentleman from Texas, I find on reexamination that so far as the number of employees is concerned, there is an increase of only two, Mr. Chancey having been in his present position for a great many years, and having been already provided for in the general appropriation bill. This resolution, therefore, provides for but two additional appointees, with a compensation of $250 a month.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the object of giving that increase?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not understand that there is any increase, further than is carried by the increase in force.

I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I find that my claim has been preempted. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. I will hear the question of the gentleman.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I wish to ask how many employees were provided in the original resolutions referred to the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. ALDRICH. Forty-eight.

Mr. CUMMINGS. And that number has been reduced to two?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] has, in my opinion, spoken entirely without authority when he challenges the competency of the man appointed to take the place of Mr. Coombs as an employee of this House. I know the new officer and know him to be competent. I think I am able to say that I was as little connected with the "combine" he speaks of as he was himself; and yet I know that the gentleman from New York, Mr. Vail, appointed to this position is not only competent, but willing and ready at all times to discharge all of the duties of the office to which he was appointed. He is also a good Republican. If it is necessary, out of courtesy, to yield to the minority of this House the retention of Mr. Coombs, I am perfectly willing to vote for the adoption of the resolution. But I must confess I do not see the propriety of making places for two employees when there is only room for one.

I only desire to say, however, that Mr. Vail, the new appointee, is a gentleman of capacity, not only competent and willing to discharge all of the duties of the office, but ready at all times to do so; and it is unfair to attack him on the floor of the House on the ground of incompetency. If we need two men for this work, put it on that ground.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. Do I understand the gentleman from Iowa to say that it is entirely unnecessary to adopt this resolution appointing Mr. Coombs an additional employee under the doorkeeper?

Mr. HULL. I undertake to say that the new appointee, Mr. Vail, is just as competent as Mr. Coombs, or any other man, for the discharge of the duties of that position. The fact is that one of these gentlemen stepped out of employment because he was a Democrat, although competent for the place, which was filled by a Republican who is equally competent, and who was appointed because we are entitled to it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, just a further question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has the floor.

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then this resolution, instead of being for the benefit of the House, is simply for the purpose of furnishing employment at a good handsome salary to a Democratic ex-employee?

Mr. HULL. I yield that question to the chairman of the Committee on Accounts. I hardly think it is a fair statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] yield for a minute?

Mr. HULL. I will. But I am occupying the floor by courtesy of the chairman of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman mean to say to this House that the gentleman who has been appointed to the position held by Major Coombs is capable of discharging the duties of that place as efficiently as Major Coombs without his having had a considerable period of preparation?

Mr. HULL. He has had considerable experience in public affairs. He is a man who has filled more important public places than this, and I will say further, that if the gentlemen representing my side in the organization of this House had succeeded—those of us who went down to defeat with the gentleman from Illinois—I should have insisted on Major Coombs being discharged from his place and a Republican taking it, because I do not believe it has come to pass that there is only one man in the United States capable of filling this place, and he a Democrat. If it has, let that argument be used on the floor—that there is but one man, and he a Democrat, capable of serving this House in that position, and then we will pass a law forever continuing him in that place regardless of the change of party.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. HULL. I have answered it. I say I believe he can fill the place just as well as Major Coombs, and will soon become as efficient.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Without considerable time for preparation?

Mr. HULL. He has had considerable experience in public affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman what experience——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] yield to the gentleman again?

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman what experience the gentleman sought to be appointed in place of Major Coombs——

Mr. HULL. Sought to be appointed? He is already appointed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Well, already appointed. What experience has he had with respect to the performance of these particular duties?

Mr. HULL. He has been connected with the House and with the Departments; and I want to say as to that, that there would not have been a man changed in this House if that argument is to apply; all officers superseded were experienced men, and I suppose we members would like to have it apply, because it would keep us continually here, on the ground that we have had experience and the other fellow has not.

Mr. GIBSON. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker, do I not occupy the floor?

Mr. GIBSON. Did not Major Coombs take the place of a Republican when he was appointed?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; the place was created for Major Coombs originally twenty years ago.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. If I can have the attention of the House, I want to say a word. I have listened to this report. Naturally, when the Republican party obtained a majority in this House it did what the Democratic majority accomplished in the Fifty-second Congress. It changed the employees from Democrats to Republicans. In the very nature of things, new employees, the first week or the first month, can not do as good service as those who have had two years' experience. But I think, without having any special personal interest in any of these employees, that they are demonstrating that they are fairly competent, for new fellows, and I do not know but they are beginning to act like old employees. So much for that.

Some twelve or fourteen years ago Major Coombs was made Department messenger. I think he is from Missouri, and I have always understood he is a Democrat. In the years that have passed by he became a very valuable employee, because he knew where to obtain just such documents as members desired, and we were all in the habit of unloading on him. I am of the opinion that it will take a little time for any employee of equal ability to get the same kind of knowledge that he has, and as he has run errands for so many of us for so many years, I can understand how this resolution would be reported.

Now, in conclusion, I want to compliment the Committee on Accounts that in the great desire we have to see the business of the House properly performed, and to find places for our constituents, which desire led to the introduction of resolutions calling for forty-eight new places, that the Committee on Accounts, after careful investigation, have reported in favor of but two.

I am inclined to vote for the report. Let me say one thing further. I think I am without prejudice or bias in this matter. I hail from the State of Illinois, with 21 Republicans in this House. There are 22 members altogether. We have one contestant, who hopes he will make it 22; whether he ought to or not will appear a little later. [Laughter.] I think I can speak without prejudice, because, so far as I know or believe, that delegation of 21 have not had the honor to have had even a page appointed upon the recommendation that any one of them has made. [Laughter.] I do not know whether that is the fault of the powers that be; but so far as I am concerned, I have not recommended anybody. Still I am sure that the employees who have been appointed by the powers that be in this House are competent, and very competent. [Applause.] Because if they were not, they would not have been selected entirely to the exclusion of people who might have desired to be appointed from Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. I yield two minutes to my friend from Indiana.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. NORTHWAY. If Colonel Coombs is appointed, what will his duties be?

Mr. ALDRICH. His duties will be the same, as I understand it, as they have been in the past.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Can not Mr. Vail perform all those duties?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is an open question. I am not sure whether he can or not. This is a larger House than it was twenty years ago, and the business of this House is constantly increasing, and the constituents are also increasing.

Mr. NORTHWAY. What will become of Mr. Vail if this report is agreed to?

Mr. ALDRICH. This does not affect Mr. Vail in any way, because Mr. Vail was appointed by the Doorkeeper.

Mr. NORTHWAY. He will draw the salary, but who will perform his duties?

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no doubt that the work will be divided, and I also have no doubt that there is enough work for both of them.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Is it a matter of necessity? Is there more than one can do?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think there is enough to keep both busy.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Well, Mr. Vail says that he does not need assistance.

Mr. ALDRICH. We do not know Mr. Vail in this matter. He has not appeared before the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. ARNOLD of Pennsylvania. Has Mr. Vail been consulted as to this matter, and does he ask any aid?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not so far as the Committee on Accounts is concerned.

Mr. ARNOLD of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that Mr. Vail says he does not need any assistance?

Mr. ALDRICH. I have not spoken to him on the subject.

Mr. ARNOLD of Pennsylvania. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have. He told me this morning that he did not need any assistance.

Mr. DOVENER. And he also said the same to me.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am so much of a partisan that I dislike to put myself seemingly in antagonism to the position taken by my colleague [Mr. HULL]. And yet I have such a strong feeling in regard to this matter that I must speak just as I feel about it. Colonel Coombs I know well. I believe he is a Democrat. He is also an honest man. [Laughter and applause.] I throw that in to give the boys a chance. [Renewed laughter.] He is one of the most courteous and efficient officers that I have known in connection with the duties of this House. He has been retained in two Republican Congresses.

In the Fifty-first Congress there was a united voice for his retention. Why? To answer that question let me go into detail. There are certain public documents put to the credit of members for distribution among their constituents; but those of us who have served in this body know that there are a large number of calls for documents constantly coming to us that are never placed to our credit; and, for one, I was baffled in meeting these requests from my district until I learned there was such an office as that of "Department messenger" filled by Colonel Coombs. Since then, when I get a request for documents outside of those put to my credit in the folding room, I refer it indorsed "Respectfully referred to C. W. Coombs, Department messenger." He will find that document if it is in this Capitol. [Applause.]

A MEMBER. Would not the other man do so, too?

Mr. HENDERSON. No, sir; I do not care what member of Congress was appointed to take that place it would take him years to learn to perform the duties. He goes into the archives of this Government. He knows every nook and corner where these documents are concealed and hidden, and I never felt a keener regret than when I learned he had been removed.

I do not care what his politics are. That man can do the best service for my people of any man that I know, and now that I have been made a full-fledged chairman of a committee and have not a private secretary I feel all the more the need of his efficient services. I do not want to discuss "combines." I fought for the views that I entertain in regard to the organization of this House and was licked out of my boots. [Laughter.] I took my medicine like a man, and I agree with my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, that the victorious troops have put competent men in office, nor do I challenge the competency of Mr. Vail. I have met him three times and he impresses me as a gentleman in every sense of the word, and I have no doubt that, with years of training, he can do good work for this House in that line; but I applaud the Committee on Accounts for striking down the army of extra employees and giving us the two men recommended—one an old soldier and the other a man equipped by years of training—twenty years, I am told—for serving this House in this respect as no other man, in my judgment, can do. Therefore, be he Democrat or Republican, I am going to vote for this report and with hearty good will, because it is in the interest of the public service and of my people.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I did not know the politics of Mr. Coombs until I heard the statements that have been made in this discussion to-day. I met him when I first came to Congress and understood that he had been connected with the House for many years. I found him to be a very honest and intelligent gentleman and one who thoroughly understood his duties. In the hurry of public life I have very frequently found that my duties would not permit me to go around and hunt up documents desired by my constituents. I was anxious to please them, and at the same time desirous of saving all the time I could, in order that I might study public questions and fit myself to discharge my duties in committee and on the floor of the House. I always found Mr. Coombs thoroughly efficient in attending to these matters for me, and while there may be many positions within the gift of this House which can be readily filled from the start, on the going out of the old employee, by some person of good general qualifications, yet I undertake to say that this is one of those peculiar positions that can not be properly filled by Mr. Vail or by anybody else without long experience, such as Mr. Coombs has had.

I am heartily in favor of the resolution reported by the Committee on Accounts; but the trouble in this case is that the cart has been placed in front of the horse. The proper course would have been to retain Mr. Coombs and then to bring in a resolution authorizing the appointment of Mr. Vail or someone else to assist him, if, in fact, any assistance whatever was necessary to Colonel Coombs.

I want to take issue, too, with a proposition that has been laid down here by my friend from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. I do not think that a man occupying a mere clerical position in the service of this House should be put out of office solely on account of his politics. Neither do I think that any man should be put into such an office merely on account of his politics. I think that Congress and the public have some interest in such a matter which is not to be needlessly sacrificed. I think that putting Mr. Coombs out of his position was a mistake on the part of those having the appointing power, and I think it was also, though perhaps unwittingly, an abuse of the appointing power. I am therefore glad that he is to be restored, and I hope it will be understood that the duties he is to perform in the future shall be those that he has so ably discharged in the past.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW].

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, by the remarks which have been made here in reference to political "combines" I am reminded of the witty clergyman who said that his "doxy" was orthodoxy, and that all other "doxies" were heterodoxy. We all believe in the combine that we ourselves belong to, and the bad fellows are always in the other combine. [Laughter.] Now, the success of a political "combine" means simply that somebody has had a majority. Two votes were taken here upon the question of the employees of this House, and every man who voted on the one side voted for one set of men, and every man who voted on the other side voted for another set of men. Of course, in all such contests one side or the other must necessarily prevail. For my part, I see no reason why the employees of this branch of Congress should not be increased as the body increases in numbers. You can not carry on the Government of the United States to-day with the appropriations that sufficed in John Adams's time, and neither can you carry on the business of this large legislative body with the small number of employees that were sufficient when it was smaller. Therefore, what sense is there in spending our time here over the question of securing an additional competent employee for this House, though he be a Democrat? I think the report of the committee is all right.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I dissent in toto from the low-down, disreputable spoils system that is defended here. [Laughter.] I have no doubt that it is for the interest of this House and that it is necessary to change about half the employees whenever the politics of the House changes, in order that the body may be properly served. But I want to say that while all this talk here is entirely honorable for the men who make it, in the light of the views they take, I should think it disgraceful in me from my standpoint. [Laughter and applause.] I think this resolution is one which we ought to vote for in order to repair, so far as we may, the injury that has been done by the "bosses" of the "combine" that have used their power relentlessly and to the damage of the public service.

Furthermore, I should like to ask gentlemen whether we are to have a reader here whom we can not understand on each side of the House at all—whose voice is loud enough, but of such a quality as to mingle with the sounds in the House so that on either wing we do not know anything that is being read from the desk. I should like to know whether or not that is to be continued through this Congress by the "bosses" of the "combine"—not by the officers of this House, not by the Speaker, not by the House, but by the two gentlemen who farm out the offices of this House. Noble business! [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to, there being—ayes 154, noes 10.

On motion of Mr. ALDRICH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to state if the gentleman will permit——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois make a point of order?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not wish to be heard on the question of order. I desire to make a statement in regard to the amendment I have offered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order.

The question being taken on the resolution reported by Mr. ALDRICH, it was agreed to.

Mr. Wolcott was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. TELLER, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

BATTLE SHIPS FOR THE NAVY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to the resolution of December 27, 1895, information as to whether it would be advantageous to the naval service to now contract for six battle ships instead of for the two at present authorized, on the basis of the bids now before the Navy Department, modified as might be, in the opinion of the Department, to the public interest; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 65) to authorize Lieut. Sidney S. Jordan, Fifth United States Artillery, and Capt. Edward C. Carter, assistant surgeon, United States Army, to accept medals from the British Government; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the First Baptist Church of Dayton, Ohio, praying for the passage of a Sunday-rest law for the national capital; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Akron, Ohio, praying for a speedy recognition as belligerents of the Cuban patriots in their struggle for freedom; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CLARK presented the petition of D. A. Hastings and 152 other citizens of Cheyenne, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation designed to secure a better grade of immigrants; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. GEAR presented a petition, in the form of resolutions adopted by Ed. Hamlin Post, No. 112, Department of Iowa, Grand Army of the Republic, of Wellman, Iowa, praying for the enactment of a service pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pueblo County, Colo., praying that a pension be granted to the widow and children of John R. Webster, deceased, late private in Company A, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment National Guard of Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon presented a petition of the legislature of the State of Washington, praying that an appropriation be made to pay the moneys due to the veterans who fought in the Indian wars in Oregon and Washington in 1855–56; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial in relation to the survivors of the Indian war of 1855 and 1856 in the Territory (now State) of Washington.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the legislature of the State of Washington, would respectfully represent that many of the early settlers of the Territory of Washington, during the years 1855 and 1856, in the protection of the lives of themselves and families, and their property, having to contend against the hostile Indians occupying the country at that time, upon the call of the governor of the Territory, freely volunteered to suppress the hostility of such Indians; that while fighting these Indians many valuable lives were lost and much property destroyed; that of those volunteers and early settlers but few now survive; that while the services of the soldiers of the Regular Army during that war were promptly provided for by the Government without diminution of any kind, and received full recognition at the hands of the General Government for their services, the brave men who volunteered and defended the Northwest Territory from the hostile Indians in the war of 1855 and 1856, responsive to the call of the governors of the Territories of Washington and Oregon, have failed to receive that recognition and consideration at the hands of the Government of the United States to which they are entitled.

That by the eleventh section of the act of August 18, 1856, the Secretary of War was directed "to examine into the amount of the expenses necessarily incurred in the suppression of Indian hostilities in the late Indian war in Oregon and Washington by the Territorial governors of said Territories for the maintenance of the volunteer forces engaged in said war, including the pay of the volunteers"; and he was authorized, if in his judgment necessary, to appoint a commission of three persons to ascertain and report such expenses; that by an order issued from the War Department, September 4, 1856, Capt. A. J. Smith, United States Army, Rufus Ingalls, United States Army, late Quartermaster-General, and Lafayette Grover, afterwards governor of the State of Oregon and United States Senator from said State, were appointed a commission to ascertain and report upon the expenses incurred by the Territories aforesaid.

The commission met at Portland, Oreg., October 20, 1856, organized a board, proceeded to the discharge of the duty assigned them, and, after full investigation and consideration, found, among other things, that the aggregate number of troops engaged in this war from the Territory of Washington was 1,896; that the approximate number of troops engaged at any one period was 1,000; and, in taking action upon the pay of the volunteers from Washington Territory, the commission—in the absence of any law of the Territory upon the subject—deemed it proper and just to recommend the same rates of pay and allowance as were reported in the case of the volunteer troops of Oregon.

The Oregon statute provided as follows: "Whenever such volunteers are called and received into the service of the Territory * * * each noncommissioned officer and private shall be entitled to receive $2 per day and rations, and $2 per day for the risk of his horse, except for horses actually killed in action, unavoidably lost or reported unfit for service; in which cases the owner shall receive the appraised value thereof. All commissioned officers shall receive the same pay as officers of the same rank in the Army of the United States: Provided, That commissioned officers shall receive the same pay for the use and risk of horses as noncommissioned officers."

The Commission upon that basis found that there is due for troops in the service of the Territory of Washington a total of $519,593.06; and it was further found in examining into the amount of expenses necessarily incurred for the maintenance of these volunteers that the total amount due for expenses was $961,882.39.

That said Commission visited extensively both Territories with the view of being informed fully as to the nature and extent of the Indian hostilities, means employed for their suppression, the rates of labor, the prices current for the property furnished for the service, and the facilities and expenses of transportation.

They examined into each distinct department of the service, and filed an exhibit of the total expense necessarily incurred in the suppression of the Indian hostilities in the late Indian war by the Territorial governors of said Territories, and further found that the expenses for the maintenance of the volunteer forces engaged in said war from the Territory of Washington, including pay, was $1,481,475.45, and for the State of Oregon the sum of $4,499,949.33; and the total amount reported by the commissioners as due the Territories of Oregon and Washington was $6,011,457.36.

That on the 7th day of February, 1860, the Third Auditor of the Treasury reported to the House of Representatives upon these claims and allowed, under said report, only $2,714,808.55, thus leaving a balance justly due these early pioneers of $3,296,648.81.

Your memorialists respectfully refer you to the report of the Commission above named, and the adjustment by the then Third Auditor of the Treasury, and respectfully ask that an appropriation may be made sufficient to cover the claims above set forth as due the volunteers from the State of Washington and State of Oregon during the Indian war of 1855 and 1856; and to that end your memorialists will ever pray.

Mr. BRICE presented the memorial of B. W. Campbell, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and the memorial of J. H. McBride, of Cleveland, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 291, to amend section 4426 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to vessels propelled by steam, gas, fluid, naphtha, or motor; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition of the legislature of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation to grant to Michael Sheehy, late of Company E, First Regiment Michigan Cavalry, a muster as captain; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas Michael Sheehy, late of Company E, First Regiment Michigan Cavalry Volunteers, now a resident of Yale, Mich., served as captain of cavalry from the 13th day of June, 1864, until the 29th of August, 1864, and was in command of a skirmish line and was wounded on that date and claims pay up to the 25th day of March, 1866, and through an oversight never received any commission as such officer, after having been duly appointed as such and recommended to such position and for such commission, and by reason of his not having secured such commission has been unable to draw any pay from the Government for serving in such capacity; and

Whereas House bill 5305, looking to his relief, was introduced in National House of Representatives at the second session of the Fifty-third Congress, and is now before the Committee on Claims of that body, a copy of which bill is as follows:

"A bill granting muster and pay allowance of captain of cavalry to Michael Sheehy from June 13, 1864, to March 25, 1866.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Michael Sheehy, late of Company E, First Regiment Michigan Cavalry Volunteers, the muster and pay and allowance of a captain of cavalry from the 13th day of June, 1864, to the 25th day of March, 1866, after deducting therefrom the pay and allowances he received as sergeant of cavalry during the same period": Therefore

Resolved (the senate concurring), That the Senators and Representatives from Michigan in the next Congress be, and are hereby, requested to use every honorably means to secure the passage of the said bill, and thus aid in doing justice to one of Michigan's bravest soldiers, who promptly answered his country's call in time of danger and need; and

Be it further resolved, That the clerk of the house of representatives of this legislature be instructed to forward a copy of these resolutions to each Senator and Representative-elect from Michigan to the next Congress.

JOSEPH R. McLAUGHLIN,
President pro tempore of the Senate.
WILLIAM D. GORDON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, Department of State, ss:

I, Joseph W. Selden, deputy secretary of state of the State of Michigan, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of a concurrent resolution of the legislature of the State of Michigan, passed on the 14th day of May, A. D. 1895, with the official daily journals of both the State senate and house of representatives of said date, and that it is a true and correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of such concurrent resolution.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Michigan on this 28th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1895.

JOS. W. SELDEN,
Deputy Secretary of State.

EXPLORATION OF THE OLYMPIC MOUNTAINS.

Mr. SQUIRE. I have a letter addressed to me from the War Department, transmitting a copy of the report of Lieut. Joseph P. O'Neil, Fourteenth Infantry, of his exploration of the Olympic Mountains, from June to October, 1890. It is a very interesting and important report. I move that the letter be referred to the Select Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, and that it be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 1404) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to enlist additional men for service in the United States Navy, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the bill be printed with the accompanying report and go to the Calendar, simply stating that it is a very important measure, covering the enlistment of men needed in the Navy, and also in an emergency authorizing the recruiting from the Naval Militia and from forces outside. I shall call it up at a later day with the leave of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar. The printing requested will be done under the rule.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1271) granting a pension to Elizabeth Moore English, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 649) granting a pension to Elizabeth Moore English, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 249) granting a pension to Charles E. Jones, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom were referred the following report, memorials, and resolution, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Select Committee on the Construction of the Nicaragua Canal; which was agreed to:

Annual report of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, for the year 1895;

Memorials of California fruit growers, favoring the building of the Nicaragua Canal;

Memorial of citizens of Monterey, Cal., urging the construction of the Nicaragua Canal; and Resolution of the Board of Trade of Ocala, Fla., favoring the construction of the Nicaragua Canal by the United States Government.

ISSUE AND RECORDING OF COMMISSIONS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 732) to regulate the issue and recording of the commissions of officers in several of the Departments, to report it without amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered. It is reported unanimously by the committee, and a short letter of the Secretary of State will show the importance of passing it now.

The bill was read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a short letter from the Secretary of State. Let it be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not include the Secretary of the Interior in the bill?

Mr. FRYE. The law already provides for the Interior Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. The object of the bill is to allow each Department to make out and record and have in its own records the appointment of its own officers. That is all there is of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Let the bill be read once more.

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the letter be read, which I think will explain the matter sufficiently. It is a brief letter.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a short letter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 4, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that it is deemed desirable that this Department be relieved of the duty of issuing and recording the commissions of civil officers who are under the direction and control of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Agriculture, and it is believed the service will be improved by legislation which shall provide for the transfer of this duty to the Departments under which the officers respectively serve, as was done in the case of postmasters by act of March 18, 1874 (Statutes at Large, volume 18, page 23); officers of the Interior Department by act of March 3, 1875 (Statutes at Large, volume 18, page 420); and judicial officers, including marshals and United States attorneys, by act of August 8, 1888 (Statutes at Large, volume 25, page 387).

I therefore request that there be introduced to that end a bill of which a draft is inclosed herewith.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

RICHARD OLNEY.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations,
United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING FOR FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report a resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be authorized to have printed and bound such papers and documents for the use of said committee as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered or to be considered by said committee during the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. MORRILL. This is the usual resolution that is passed in behalf of the committee.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the recent act, passed during the last Congress, regulating the public printing, which provides that no greater amount of printing for the Senate or House of Representatives, or a committee of either House, or a Department, shall be made by an order of one House than will fall below the limit of $500 in cost. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that in view of that law he would not be able, in all probability, to have the amount of printing done that is necessary for the Committee on Finance, and that the resolution had better be referred to the Committee on Printing, so that a joint resolution may be brought in and passed.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to the reference of the resolution, but the amount of printing required by the committee now or at any time will be exceedingly small. It may not cost $5.

Mr. GORMAN. I merely called attention to the law for the information of the Senator. I myself have no objection to the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ST. ALBANS, VT.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to call up for present consideration the bill (S. 697) for the reconstruction of the United States customhouse and post-office building at St. Albans, Vt., destroyed by fire May 19, 1895. The bill was reported yesterday from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The débris of the burned buildings and parts of the walls are something of a nuisance in the principal streets of St. Albans, and in order to preserve a considerable amount of valuable materials for rebuilding it will be necessary to have the appropriation made at once.

Mr. HALE. What is the order of business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there are no further reports of committees the introduction of bills is next in order.

Mr. MORRILL. There will be no debate; it is a short bill.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will wait until we get through with the routine business.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 1405) authorizing the purchase of law books for the use of the United States circuit and district courts; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1406) regulating the salaries of watchmen in the Departments of the Government; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KYLE introduced a bill (S. 1407) granting a pension to William Brown; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KYLE. Before introducing the bill I hold in my hand I should like to say a few words.

Despite the efforts of this branch of Congress and also the other, and despite the promises of the Washington Gas Light Company, the citizens of Washington and the District of Columbia are still paying $1.50 per thousand for gas. Notwithstanding the fact that some other large cities of the United States have gas furnished at $1 per thousand——

Mr. CULLOM. And less.

Mr. KYLE. And notwithstanding the fact that certain cities in New England have gas furnished as low as 75 and 60 cents per thousand, and certain companies are agreeing to furnish gas at 50 cents per thousand, and are making the statement that gas can be manufactured at 30 cents per thousand—notwithstanding these facts, I say, we are still paying in the District of Columbia $1.50 per thousand for gas.

I this morning introduce a bill which I introduced last year, proposing an incorporation supported by some of the strongest financial men this city and the United States afford. They are willing to give a guaranty that they will furnish gas for the District of Columbia, including Washington City, for 60 cents per thousand for the public buildings in this city and the District, and at 75 cents per thousand for the inhabitants of this city and the District. This you will see is almost cutting the present rate in two in the middle.

Some people may think that a company can not furnish gas at this rate. I beg to assure the Senate and the Committee upon the District of Columbia that this company is manufacturing a gas by one of the best processes at present in use in the United States. It is in use at various points in the West and the East. I beg to assure the Senate also that the company is going to furnish a gas of 22 candlepower, according to its guaranty. The present Washington Gas Light Company agrees to furnish a gas of 18 candlepower, but it has never gone beyond 16 candlepower. This company guarantees 22-candlepower gas, and at the rate of 60 cents for the city and 75 cents for the inhabitants. As a guaranty of their good faith for the construction of this plant, they are willing to put up a bond of $200,000, and if that is not satisfactory to the Committee on the District of Columbia and the United States Congress, they are willing to make their bond $500,000 or any amount that may be deemed necessary by the Congress of the United States.

In introducing this bill for the consideration of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I beg their most earnest and careful consideration that, if possible, they may bring in a bill, either this one by amendment or some other bill, that will deliver us from the thralldom, I might say, of the Washington Gas Light Company. I introduce the bill for reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 1408) to incorporate the National Capital Gaslight, Heat, and Power Company of the District of Columbia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to inquire what is the function of the Select Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia. This is a bill (and I have one or two bills which I propose to introduce) for the incorporation of some persons here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Chair would state to the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senator introducing the bill asked that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The question the Senator propounds the Chair will not undertake to decide, as to what the functions of the Select Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia may be.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to urge one policy or another in regard to the selection of a committee to which to refer such bills, but I should like to have some uniform policy pursued by the Senate. I supposed that the select committee was raised to deal with all such subjects.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that my impression is that the select committee was intended to examine into the affairs of the corporations here, the details of the operations and the reports made by the corporations, and not a matter of this kind, which I think should go to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 1409) providing for the construction and equipment of two steam revenue cutters for service on the Great Lakes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1410) providing for the construction and equipment of two steam revenue-cutters for service on the Pacific Coast; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM. I introduced the last bill after consulting with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], not desiring to take any jurisdiction whatever of the business of the Pacific Coast. I desire to have read, so that it may go into the RECORD, a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in reference to the two bills I have introduced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

Mr. CULLOM. It is a personal letter to me, but I think it is important.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 7, 1896.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 6th instant, I beg to say:

First. "The number and character of Government boats on the Great Lakes."

Answer. There are two revenue cutters at present on the Great Lakes—the steamer Johnson, stationed at Milwaukee, Wis.; the steamer Fessenden, at Detroit, Mich., and the tug Calumet, at Chicago. The Johnson is a very old wooden vessel, built in 1865; cost originally $92,000, and has cost since for repairs to keep her in commission upward of $87,000. This vessel is not now worth further repairs.

The Fessenden is a side-wheel vessel, iron hull, is a good vessel of her class, but of obsolete type.

The Calumet is a small iron steamer of 123 tons, new, and designed for harbor duty and anchorage work at the port of Chicago, where she is now stationed.

Second. "Whether the revenue cutter Perry is now on duty on the Lakes, or whether it has been taken away for service on the Pacific Coast?"

Answer. The Perry was ordered from Lake service to the Pacific last year, to reenforce the fleet of cutters there for the patrol of the North Pacific and Bering Sea. The Perry was of the Bering Sea fleet the past season, and is now temporarily at San Francisco.

Third. "I will be glad if you will inform me whether or not, in the judgment of the Treasury Department, there ought not to be an additional number of revenue cutters constructed for service upon the Lakes; and if so, what number?"

Answer. It is the opinion of the Department that at least two revenue cutters, additional to the one now being constructed at Cleveland, Ohio, should be provided for service on the Great Lakes. In view of the large advance in the price of material entering into the construction of iron and steel vessels, the sum named by you will not be too great for the class of vessels required for service on the Great Lakes. Your suggestion that several good vessels should be provided for Lake service is in perfect accord with the views of this Department.

I beg to say further, in reply to the closing inquiry of your letter, that an additional number of revenue cutters should be constructed for service on the Pacific Coast. The vessels now there are all very old and of obsolete type of construction—some wooden, some iron, all of them too small and too slow and of too small power to properly meet the service required of them. Vessels required for service on the Pacific Coast should be of size, general dimensions, and capacity to enable them to take and keep the sea under all conditions, with a cruising radius of not less than 2,500 miles.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. HAMLIN, Assistant Secretary.

Hon. S. M. CULLOM, U. S. S.,

SILVER COINAGE AND COIN REDEMPTION.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to offer and have read at the desk several amendments to House bill 2904 which I intend to propose. Let them be read for information and printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendments are printed under the rule. The amendments will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendments intended to be proposed to House bill No. 2904 by Mr. BUTLER:

Amend section 2 by striking out in line 11, after the word "be," the words "used in the payment of the current expenses of the Government," and insert in lieu thereof the words "covered into the Treasury."

Amend by striking out section 4 and inserting in lieu thereof the following sections, to be known as sections 4 and 5:

said coin obligations as they mature in silver coin, and continue to pay the same in silver coin until the market value of 412½ grains of standard silver shall be equal to the market value of 25.8 grains of standard gold; and said notes, commonly called greenbacks, when so redeemed, shall be reissued, as provided by the act of May 31, 1878."

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed, as now constituted, either by full committee or such subcommittee or committees as may be appointed by the chairman thereof, with the full power of such committee to continue during the coming recess of Congress the investigations authorized by the resolutions of May 13, 1890, and February 27, 1891, with the authority and in the manner and to the extent provided in said resolutions, and in the pursuance of such investigations to visit the several Indian reservations, Indian schools supported in whole or in part by the Government, and the Five Nations in the Indian Territory, or any reservation where, in the opinion of said committee, it may be necessary to extend their investigations.

Second. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It will have to be referred afterwards to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, the Chair would suggest to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I so understand it.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask now to call up the bill for the reconstruction of the United States custom-house and post-office building at St. Albans, Vt., destroyed by fire May 19, 1895.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Vermont in a few moments. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions?

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. MILLS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALL. There is a resolution lying on the table subject to be called up at any time, asking for certain information from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, presented by request of the labor associations. If there be no objection on the part of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, at whose instance the resolution was laid over, I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions?

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to expedite business I will move that the Senate do now adjourn. Senators are probably conscious of what I have in view when I state that I believe it would expedite business if an early adjournment could be had to-day. I think it would probably facilitate business. I do not wish to displace any gentlemen who have the floor for to-day; let them take it to-morrow. I submit a motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I should like——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable except by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent that the motion be postponed for an hour, so as to allow me to deliver the speech I intended to make to-day.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent to express the hope that the Senator from Nevada will not insist upon occupying an hour of the time of the Senate this morning. The motion of the Senator from Ohio to adjourn is a proper recognition of the great historic event which this the 8th day of January commemorates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair could not hear the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SHERMAN. I could not hear the suggestions made.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Ohio withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. WHITE. Some time ago I gave notice that I would address the Senate with reference to certain suggested changes in the rules of this body. I have not had occasion to do so heretofore, and give notice that I will to-morrow morning make such observations as seem apposite.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 9, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

ADMISSION OF HAWAII AS A STATE.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit at this time a joint resolution for reference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ask unanimous consent to have it read.

The SPEAKER. It can be filed with the Clerk.

Mr. SPALDING. I would like to have it read simply for the information of the House. I ask unanimous consent that it may be read prior to its reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the reading of a resolution and its reference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was read at length, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, may I ask how this matter comes before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan rose and asked unanimous consent to have the resolution read for information and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. To that request there was no objection.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. It is not now before the House for consideration?

The SPEAKER. Not for consideration.

PRINTING FOR THE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture be authorized to have printed and bound whatever documents and papers may be necessary for the use of said committee.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and agreed to.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rivers and Harbors be authorized to have printed and bound such papers and documents, for the use of said committee, as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered or to be considered by said committee during the Fifty-fourth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HEPBURN. Before consent is given, I wish to make an inquiry in regard to this matter. I wish to ask, Mr. Speaker, what kind of printing and binding is contemplated by the resolution which is now before the House.

It looks to me as if this resolution and resolutions of a similar character that we have been passing confer an authority on the committees of the House which may become a very dangerous one. As I understand the law, printing to the amount of $500 with reference to a particular subject may be indulged in under a resolution of the House.

Under such a resolution as this, as I understand it, the gentleman may on each day have $500 worth of printing done, to be determined by him or by his committee. It looks to me as if that were an unwise authority to confer, and yet we have been doing it from time to time. I have been hoping that some gentleman would explain the matter, so that the House could understand whether this view of it is erroneous or not.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, so far as the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is concerned, there will be no disposition or desire on the part of that committee to indulge in any such amount of printing as suggested by the gentleman. I understand this is the usual resolution that has been offered and agreed to for each of the committees. All that it is desired to have printed and bound for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is simply the reports of the engineer, which are necessary for the work of the committee in considering the different projects throughout the country. They are to be printed and bound, one set for each member; and, in addition to that, a small memorandum book. It is my understanding that that is all the printing and binding that are necessary for that committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me a word?

Mr. HOOKER. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the law——

Mr. PERKINS. I was going to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOOKER] that my understanding of the law is that under a resolution of this kind the committee would not be authorized to have printing done to exceed $500.

Mr. HOOKER. For the entire session.

Mr. PERKINS. For the whole Congress.

The SPEAKER. Debate on this side of the House must be with the consent of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. My understanding is that the printing for the committee for the entire Congress can not exceed $500 under this resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, if I yield the floor, I must insist upon hearing what gentlemen are saying.

Mr. PERKINS. If the gentleman from Tennessee will excuse me, I was undertaking to give some information to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. RICHARDSON. "The gentleman from Tennessee" will yield for that purpose.

Mr. PERKINS. "The gentleman from Iowa" will soon yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Now, in the view which I have stated, Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that the House can not be extravagant, and that the committee can not order printing to exceed the amount of $500 during the entire session, under this resolution.

Mr. HOOKER. That is all.

Mr. PERKINS. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Iowa has said, and probably said better than I could, about what I desired to say, that this leave to a committee to print, as I understand it, only gives permission to print within the limit of $500.

Mr. PERKINS. That was the statement I was making, in my feeble way and with my feeble voice.

Mr. RICHARDSON. As I understand it, neither House, without the action of the other, can order printing beyond $500, and therefore it could not authorize a committee to go beyond $500.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, if my friend will permit me for one moment, he is clearly in error upon this subject. There is not in the statute any limitation upon a committee to the session. The limitation of $500 is with reference to the particular act of printing, and not a limitation extending over months of time. The gentleman might as well say that the House can only authorize $500 worth of printing during the entire session as to say that the statute imposes any such limitation upon a committee. The limitation is as to a single order for printing.

Mr. PERKINS. Under a single resolution. Under one resolution, not to exceed $500.

Mr. HEPBURN. But this is a continuing resolution. A part of the authority may be exercised to-day, part of it to-morrow, and part of it next week. There is no question about it, Mr. Speaker, but that under this resolution any one of the committees of this House having this authority may, under the law, daily authorize an expenditure of $500 for printing. I do not intend to intimate that any extravagance of that kind would be indulged in, but it is not the proper kind of legislation, after we have taken the trouble, by law, to hedge the actions of the House. When we control ourselves in this way, making a bill necessary in order that more than $500 worth of printing may be done, it is improper that we should give to committees the right to exceed that, or to equal that sum, every day during the session.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the criticism of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] seems to be well founded, but he will find, and other gentlemen will find, that if any committee undertakes to exceed $500 under such a resolution as this it will be stopped at the Government Printing Office. The Public Printer construes a resolution of this sort to mean that it gives the committee authority to print within $500. These resolutions have been so construed heretofore. I have not interposed objections to any of these resolutions. They have been usual; but it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, while I have not examined the RECORD, that we are extending this privilege this session to committees that have not had the privilege heretofore.

Now, it is right and proper, eminently so, I think, for committees that have charge of appropriation bills, committees that have to make up appropriations upon estimates furnished by the Departments and otherwise, to have this right and discretion to print within a reasonable limit; but I do not think it ought to be extended beyond where it has heretofore been used. I do not object to this, and shall not object; but I do not think it ought to be extended too far. I think the gentleman from Iowa will find that there will be no exercise of the right to print beyond the limit of $500 at the Government Printing Office.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to ask unanimous consent that that committee may have leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors may have leave to sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chairs hears none.

VENEZUELAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I present a memorial adopted by the Welsh people in their National Eisteddfod, held in the city of Utica, N. Y., on the 1st of January, 1896, favoring the settlement of the Venezuelan question by diplomacy or arbitration, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I object to printing the memorial in the RECORD. I do not know what it is, but it is contrary to the rules.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

SECTION 3980 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the bill (H. R. 272) to amend section 3980 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and move its reference to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. HENDERSON. I withdraw the motion for a moment.

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama, Mr. HARRISON, desires to be relieved from service on the Election Committee No. 2, because his own seat is contested. Without objection, he will be relieved, and the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BAILEY, in his place.

There was no objection.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 9, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MONEY ISSUES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, acknowledging the receipt of a resolution of the 31st ultimo calling for a statement containing a copy of each obligation issued by the Government since March 4, 1789, with a reference by title and date to the laws, respectively, authorizing such issues, and showing the amount of each issue, etc., and respectfully informing the Senate that the information called for is being prepared and will be transmitted as soon as possible; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McMILLAN. I present a petition of the National Federation of Colored Men, of Detroit, Mich., praying that they be granted the right of citizenship due them as native-born citizens of the United States. I move that the petition be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRITCHARD presented the petition of Athen Green, of Bakersville, N. C., a volunteer in Company C, Thirteenth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, praying that he be allowed arrears of pension at the rate of $10 per month; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TILLMAN presented a petition of the executive board of the Young Men's Business League of Charleston, S. C., and a petition of the city council of Charleston, S. C., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide fortifications and other seacoast defenses; which were referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition, in the form of resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Thirty-second Ward Republican Club of Chicago, Ill., praying that the Government of the United States use its best efforts to prevent further outrages on the Armenians; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULLOM. I also present a memorial of sundry citizens of Beardstown, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 291 to amend section 4426 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to vessels propelled by steam, gas, fluid, naphtha, or motor. I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce to this memorial. There seem to be a great many protests against the passage of that bill.

Mr. FRYE. A perfect shower.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the bill will be so amended as not to interfere with the ordinary little pleasure naphtha launches that are in use about the cities.

Mr. FRYE. It may perhaps be as well to state that I have no idea that there will be the least purpose on the part of the Committee on Commerce to report a bill which shall affect the little naphtha pleasure launches and yachts. The committee may report a bill which shall affect vessels carrying freight and passengers for hire, running now from 25 tons up to 150 tons, utterly regardless of all the rules which provide for and control other vessels of the same kind.

Mr. CULLOM. I was aware that the chairman of the committee desired to report such a bill as he has indicated, and I thought perhaps if he would make the statement to the Senate he has made it might satisfy those who are uneasy lest an improper bill may be passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. On this point I desire simply to say that I am gratified to hear the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. I have had a flood of letters on this subject from parties in New England owning little launches, and it will be a great gratification to them to know that they are not to be put to annoyance and expense.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to ask a question. I am very glad, likewise, to hear the statement, because I have had letters also. What is the necessity for a law? Does the existing statute apply to steam and sail only?

Mr. FRYE. To steam and sail only.

Mr. HAWLEY. So that the proposed legislation is necessary?

Mr. FRYE. Therefore these launches are not subject to the ordinary laws of the road, to the requirements for carrying life-preservers, boats, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. HAWLEY. And the inspection of boilers?

Mr. FRYE. And the inspection of boilers. They are relieved from all of those requirements. It is all well enough when they are simply little pleasure launches where the owners themselves run them and where they do not carry passengers or freight, but especially on the California coast they are building to-day such launches of 100 and 150 tons.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; I know.

Mr. FRYE. And they are carrying freight and carrying passengers. Vessels of that kind must be subject to the ordinary rules which provide for safety at sea.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to state that I have received a great many communications from owners of small pleasure yachts on the coast of Florida, and I am glad to hear the remarks of the Senator from Maine, because I do not think that any legislation ought to be enacted which would be disadvantageous to the owners of yachts which are not used in the ordinary business of commerce.

Mr. CALL. I desire to add a single observation to what has been said. The people upon the Atlantic coast of Florida and the Gulf coast are very largely interested in the proposed law. I have also received a great many requests (and have stated the matter to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce and to the committee) that they should be exempted, as it has been declared they will be, from the operation of such a law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of G. A. Plens and sundry other citizens of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. DANIEL presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of Falls Church, Va., and resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of South Boston, Va., favoring energetic measures for the prevention of outrages on the Armenians; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry members of the bar of Roanoke, Va., praying Congress to secure one term annually of the United States district court at that city; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DANIEL. I present a petition in the form of resolutions adopted by the Business Men's Association of Newport News, Va., praying for the passage of the bill introduced by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] providing for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

Mr. President, I hope I may be indulged, by unanimous consent, to say just a word respecting these resolutions. The number of petitions which have been sent to the Senate in favor of a liberal provision by Congress for fortifications and seacoast defenses attests the general interest which our people feel in this subject. From Norfolk, Va., San Diego, Cal., Seattle, Charleston, Savannah, New York, and almost all of our seaboard cities the number of resolutions that have flowed in upon us shows that our people feel some sense of alarm in view of the rumors of war which have reached their ears. While I think the apprehensions are perhaps overstrained, and that it is quite likely none of those cities will ever be bombarded, the petitions show that the American people realize that this nation ought to be fully equipped and prepared for its own defense.

A bill, I understand, making ample provision for that purpose has been introduced, and I seize this occasion in presenting these resolutions to express the hope that the present Congress will see to it, as I have no doubt it will, that this country prepares itself for whatever emergency may happen.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BACON presented a petition of the Cotton Exchange of Savannah, Ga., praying for the enactment of legislation maintaining the present depth of water in the channel of the Savannah River and to create a port of safety for the merchant marine; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the city council of Brunswick, Ga., and a petition of the Board of Trade of Brunswick, Ga., praying for the enactment of legislation providing additional defenses for the harbor at that city; which were referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

He also presented a petition of the Cotton Exchange of Savannah, Ga., praying for the enactment of legislation furnishing adequate accommodations for vessels which, under quarantine regulations, are required to be sent to the quarantine station for the South Atlantic, at Sapelo; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of Mrs. A. M. Hollingsworth, of Allegany County, Md., praying that she be reimbursed for stores and supplies taken by the military forces of the United States from the farm of Harriet B. Hollingsworth, in Frederick County, Va.; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. Louise Stewart, widow of George B. Stewart, deceased, of Anne Arundel County, Md., praying that she be reimbursed for supplies and stores taken in that county by the military forces of the United States for their use during the war for the suppression of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF RAILROADS.

Mr. HALE. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], with an accompanying report. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. BRICE December 9, 1895, was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, of the annual report of the Commissioner of Railroads for the year 1895, 1,500 extra copies, in paper covers, with appendices, for the use of the Commissioner of Railroads.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. One moment, please. Have any copies been printed for the use of the Senate and the House?

Mr. HALE. Yes. If the Secretary will read the report that will tell the whole story. It is short.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution, introduced by Mr. BRICE, authorizing the printing of 1,500 extra copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Railroads for the year 1895, with appendixes, for the use of the Commissioner of Railroads.

The Commissioner of Railroads, under date of November 25, 1895, in a letter addressed to Senator CALVIN BRICE, and referred by him to this committee, says: "The number of copies printed heretofore for public official use has been 2,500. Under the law enacted by the Fifty-third Congress relative to the printing of public documents, which provides that no more than 1,000 copies of a bureau report should be printed without the authority of Congress, requisition was duly made through the Department for the printing of that number. * * * The number of copies of the report authorized to be printed under the new law will be wholly insufficient to supply the demand."

In a later communication from the Commissioner's office it is stated that it "has not been possible to supply the press of the country with copies of the report, as heretofore, and private as well as official requests therefore await compliance." Speaking of the value of the report, the Commissioner says: "As the subject-matter of the report is of considerable importance, pending a settlement of the debts of the Pacific railroad companies to the United States, and as the information contained therein is thought to be valuable and exhaustive, the necessity for printing the extra copies will be obvious."

The committee, to whom the resolution was referred, after carefully considering the same and fully weighing the recommendations of the Commissioner, report the resolution back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The cost of the printing, as per the estimate of the Public Printer, will be $135.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not offering any objection, but simply call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Printing to the fact that this is a step in setting aside the printing law, which was so carefully prepared and so ably urged by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, Mr. Manderson, who retired at the close of the last Congress.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. HALE. From the Committee on Printing I present the report of operations during the month of December, 1895, upon repairs and enlargement of the Government Printing Office and the erection of a fireproof building upon the site of the Government Printing Office stables, under the Chief of Engineers, and ask that it be printed as a document. It is a report made each month.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed.

FOUNDRY AT WASHINGTON NAVY-YARD.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 23) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to use a portion of the appropriation for new iron roof for foundry at navy-yard, Washington, D. C., in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," for repairs to the walls of said foundry, to report it favorably and submit a report thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BAKER. I ask that the bill (S. 808) for the relief of Simeon Motz, Nathaniel Robbins, and William J. Sloan; and the bill (S. 1326) for the relief of Eli Fox, George C. Fox, and Thomas Levick, which were referred to the Committee on Claims, be now referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It seems to me that the Committee on Military Affairs is the proper committee for those bills, and that they should have been so referred in the first place. Similar bills were introduced in the previous Congress and referred to the Committee on Claims, and the Committee on Claims was discharged from their further consideration and had them referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. After the lapse of some time these bills would probably take the same course, and I ask that the change of reference be now made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Committee on Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of the bills, and they will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CALL. I introduce a bill by request of a considerable number of citizens of the District of Columbia and some nonresidents of the District who frequently come to this city. It is a subject which they regard as of great importance, and I think it will commend itself to the consideration of the Senate. I hope the Committee on the District of Columbia will consider the bill and act upon it at an early day.

The bill (S. 1449) to provide a home and employment for reputable girls and young women of the District of Columbia who are without means of support and are unable to obtain work was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 1450) to reconvene the delegates of the United States to the International Marine Conference of 1889; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS.

Mr. CALL. I introduce a joint resolution, and if there be no objection I ask that it may have present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 46) prohibiting the Secretary of the Interior from patenting any lands under the swamp and overflowed land-grant act by the exterior or meander lines of surveys was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby prohibited from patenting any lands under the swamp and overflowed land-grant act by the exterior or meander lines of surveys, and he is required to conform strictly to the requirements of the acts of Congress in approving lists of lands under the said act or issuing patents thereto.

Mr. CALL. That the Senate may understand the necessity, and the urgent necessity, of the joint resolution, I present a letter from the Secretary of the Interior and also one from a citizen of Florida in relation to this subject, from which it will appear that the Secretary of the Interior has decided to approve and patent a large portion of the State of Florida, not by the report from the field notes of the surveyors of the United States, as required by law, but by the exterior lines of the surveys, without reference to the question whether the land within the interior of the meander lines is or is not within the terms of the grant and subject to homestead entry by the people.

I will state that the letters which I send to the desk from a citizen of the State of Florida exhibit the fact that land which is properly subject to homestead settlement is being taken away from the people who have a right to it, and not only under the old obsolete and void railroad grant, but also under the swamp and overflowed land-grant acts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. PLATT. I do not think anyone in the Senate knows what the joint resolution is which we have been asked to consider and pass this morning.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator will allow the correspondence which I have sent to the desk to be read, and he will then see what the joint resolution is.

Mr. PLATT. I merely rose for the purpose of suggesting that joint resolutions ought to be referred to a committee. They are introduced here in the morning when the Senate is paying no attention to business, and if the rule is to be adopted that joint resolutions affecting large interests are to be passed in this way we shall get into infinite trouble. It seems to me the rules of the Senate ought to be observed and that the joint resolution ought to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I make that motion.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator to withdraw the motion until the correspondence is read, so that he may be advised as to whether there is necessity for the motion, and if he then thinks it should be referred I shall make no objection to it.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to the correspondence being read.

Mr. PASCO. This is a matter that relates to my own State. I have not been consulted about it, and know nothing in reference to it. I have no objection to the correspondence being read, but it seems to me the joint resolution ought then to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The chairman of that committee is not present. Certainly it would be unwise to pass the joint resolution without giving even the chairman of the committee or myself an opportunity to know what the proposed legislation refers to and what is the full meaning and purport of the joint resolution.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent to say a word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will first state the question, and then the Senator will be recognized. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOAR. Is not that motion debatable?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is debatable.

Mr. HOAR. Then the Senator from Florida has a right to be heard upon the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has not ruled the Senator from Florida out; but he desires to state the question, upon which the Senator from Florida will be entitled to proceed.

Mr. CALL. I trust the Senator from Connecticut will not make the motion until the correspondence has been read.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Florida can read it as part of his remarks, or have it read at the desk as part of his remarks.

Mr. CALL. All right. Then after I have made a single observation I shall ask the Secretary to read the correspondence, in order that the Senate may understand it. If there is any interest on the part of any Senator to have a committee report whether or not the patenting of a large area of a State by the meander lines of a survey under an act of Congress which requires that each 40 acres shall be reported by a surveyor of the United States from the field notes as unfit for settlement, and when citizens of the United States who are within that area send in a petition here in the form of a letter to the Interior Department that their homes may be exempted from this unlawful act of the Interior Department, I have no objection to a committee investigating and reporting upon the subject.

If my colleague does not know that the area of the Everglades proposed to be confirmed by the meander line does contain within it not only land not subject to this law, but thousands of acres which are properly the homes of the people of the country, and under the law they have a right to it—if anyone needs information upon that subject, as to whether the Secretary of the Interior shall patent absolutely tracts of land, which are the homes of the poor people of this country, under a law which requires that each 40 acres shall, by the field notes of the surveyor of the United States, be proved to be within the class of lands subject to the swamp and overflowed land-grant act, then let it go to a committee.

I ask that the correspondence be read—first the letter of Mr. Lorbeer and then the letters from the Interior Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The correspondence referred to will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

YALLAHA, FLA., December 27, 1895.

HONORABLE SIR: The letter inclosed explains my object in writing to you at this time. What perplexes me at present is that they offer me "thirty days in which to file a motion for review." I supposed the honorable Secretary had reviewed the case and his action was now final. I do not know if it is worth my while to follow it up further. Will you oblige and give your opinion on my filing said motion for review?

I should like my home. Experience here has proven that those having their places given to them by the Government were able to live on them after the freeze last winter. I have done the same; but if I must pay the railroad company $10 per acre—it amounts to that, interest and all—I am forced off and my grove and place become a cattle range again, as thousands of others are, on account of extortion by railroad and land grabbers combined. It must be remembered I settled in "good faith" under the promise of $1.25 per acre for the land and put thirteen years' labor on a 7-acre grove, for which I can not get money enough to pay car fare away.

Please advise me.

Very truly, yours, EDW. A. LORBEER.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL,
United States Senator for Florida.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 21, 1895.

SIR: Responsive to your letter of November 12, 1895, I have to advise you that on October 11, 1895, the honorable Secretary of the Interior rendered a decision in your case against the Florida Railway and Navigation Company, involving the SW. ¼ of NW. ¼, NW. ¼ of SW. ¼, NW. ¼ of NW. ¼, and SE. ¼ of NW. ¼, sec. 9, T. 21 S., R. 25 E., Gainesville land district, Florida, in which he affirmed the decision of this office of January 13, 1894, holding for rejection your application to make homestead entry for the above-described tracts of land.

On November 9, 1895, said departmental decision was promulgated through the local officer at Gainesville, and they were directed to advise you thereof, allowing you the usual time, thirty days after notice, within which to file a motion for review, and at the proper time make due report to this office as to action taken by you in the premises.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

MR. EDWARD A. LORBEER,
Yallaha, Lake County, Fla.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 8, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 3, 1896, inclosing "correspondence" of Mr. Edward A. Lorbeer (notably letter F, December 21, 1895, addressed to him at Yallaha, Lake County, Fla.), and you request "that the time of thirty days in which to file a motion for review be extended to a longer limit."

In reply, I would state a compliance with your request is contrary to the Rules of Practice, rule 114, amended. (See copy office circular A, May 4, 1894, inclosed herewith; 18 L. D., 472.)

I would add that this office is awaiting report from local officers at Gainesville, Fla., and action by this office will be governed thereby, as the matter relates to motion for review of the honorable Secretary's decision.

Mr. Lorbeer's "correspondence" (two papers) is returned herewith.

Respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 8, 1896.

SIR: I have received your letter dated January 3, 1896, inclosing a letter from Mr. O. Hardgrave, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., asking "what right anyone has to make a settlement and home on unsurveyed lands in the Everglades;" also, "If I make a home there, will I have the first chance of entry or purchase when surveyed?"

In reply, you are advised that the whole body of unsurveyed lands known as the Everglades has been applied for as swamp land under the act of September 28, 1850, by the State of Florida, being described by the exterior meander lines thereof, and is now in process of being patented to the State of Florida. The disposal of tracts therein is therefore no longer in the hands of the Government. Mr. Hardgrave is referred to the State land agent at Tallahassee for further information.

In regard to Mr. Hardgrave's request for copies of maps this office has received the same request from him by another letter, and a copy of the answer thereto is herewith inclosed for your further information.

Should you still desire copies of these plats for your own use, they will be made and furnished to you upon receiving your request therefor, without charge.

Your correspondent's letter is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

Hon. W. CALL, United States Senate.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to the course desired by the Senator from Connecticut—that the joint resolution and correspondence shall be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, but I wish to state that a vast portion of the area of the State of Florida has been unlawfully—and I might say more than that—taken away from the people who have a right under the law to settle upon and occupy it, and if the people have any rights which Congress should protect it demands the action of this body, and early action on its part, not only to prevent the remainder from being taken, but also to restore to the people the homesteads unlawfully taken from them.

I insert in my remarks the laws making a grant of the swamp and overflowed lands to the States, from which it clearly appears that this action of the Secretary is entirely without authority of law.

SEC. 354. To enable the several States (but not including the States of Kansas, Nebraska, Nevada, and Colorado) to construct the necessary levees and drains, to reclaim the swamp and overflowed lands therein—the whole of the swamp and overflowed lands, made unfit thereby for cultivation, and remaining unsold on or after the 28th day of September, A. D. 1850, are granted and belong to the several States, respectively, in which said lands are situated: Provided, however, That said grant of swamp and overflowed lands, as to the States of California, Minnesota, and Oregon, is subject to the limitations, restrictions, and conditions hereinafter named and specified, as applicable to said three last-named States, respectively.

SEC. 355. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to make accurate lists and plats of all such lands and transmit the same to the governors of the several States in which such lands may lie, and at the request of the governor of any State in which said swamp and overflowed lands may be to cause patents to be issued to said State therefor, conveying to said State the fee-simple of said land.

The proceeds of said lands, whether from sale or by direct appropriation in kind, shall be applied exclusively, as far as necessary, to the reclaiming said lands, by means of levees and drains.

SEC. 356. In making out lists and plats of the lands aforesaid all legal subdivisions, the greater part whereof is wet and unfit for cultivation, shall be included in said lists and plats, but when the greater part of a subdivision is not of that character, the whole of it shall be excluded thereform.

* * * * * * * *

SEC. 359. All lands selected and reported to the General Land Office as swamp and overflowed land by the several States entitled to the provisions of said act of September 28, 1850, prior to March 3, A. D. 1857, are confirmed to said States, respectively, so far as the same remained vacant and unappropriated and not interfered with by an actual settlement under any law of the United States.

SEC. 360. The provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to enable the State of Arkansas and other States to redeem" the swamp lands within their limits, approved September 28, A. D. 1850, extend to the States of Minnesota and Oregon: Provided, That the grant shall not include any lands which the Government of the United States may have sold or disposed of under any law enacted prior to March 12, 1860, prior to the confirmation of title to be made under the authority of said act—and the selections to be made from lands already surveyed in each of the States last named, under the authority of the act aforesaid, shall have been made within two years from the adjournment of the legislature of each State, at its next session after the 12th day of March, A. D. 1860—and as to all lands surveyed or to be surveyed, thereafter, within two years from such adjournment, at the next session after notice by the Secretary of the Interior to the governor of the State that the surveys have been completed and confirmed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I introduce a joint resolution, which I send to the desk and ask that it be read.

The joint resolution (S. R. 50) authorizing the employment of a skilled architect to assist the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department in preparing the designs, plans, specifications, and other drawings for the public building at Chicago, Ill., was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That, in addition to the amount authorized to be expended for the temporary employment of draftsmen and skilled service in the preparation of plans and specifications for the public building at Chicago, Ill., as provided in the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1895, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to use, out of the appropriation heretofore made, a sum not exceeding $25,000 for the employment of a skilled architect to assist the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department in preparing the designs, plans, specifications, and other drawings for said building.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand the proposition is to give one architect $25,000 for assisting?

Mr. CULLOM. The proposition is to enable the Supervising Architect to do that which he can not do under the existing law making the appropriation for that building—to have such an architect as is desired by him to prepare the plans. The bureau has not the force, and under the particular technical construction of the statute making the original appropriation the Supervising Architect has no power to employ assistance. After two or three consultations by my colleague and myself with the Secretary of the Treasury, the Supervising Architect says that it is impossible for him to proceed and do anything preparatory to the construction of the building without the passage of a resolution of this kind.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear that clause of the resolution read relative to proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the employment of one architect.

Mr. CULLOM. The resolution says "a skilled architect." I do not know whether it means one or more.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be again read.

The Secretary again read the joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall certainly have to object to the joint resolution, and I shall ask that it go to a committee unless it is provided that the $25,000 be for the employment of architects to assist, and not $25,000 for one architect.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to making it "architects" instead of "architect."

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it read "architects to assist."

Mr. CULLOM. What is desired by the Secretary of the Treasury, as well as those of us who are interested in getting the plans of that building, is to push the work. The Secretary insists that with his present force it is impossible for him, unless allowed by law to employ an architect, to get the building started, under the pressure of hundreds of other buildings now being constructed.

I have no objection to the word being in the plural number instead of providing for one architect.

Mr. COCKRELL. As the joint resolution now stands it proposes to appropriate $25,000 for one year's service of an architect.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not want anybody paid any more than he is entitled to. Let the word "architects" be inserted instead of "architect."

Mr. BERRY. Is the joint resolution reported from any committee?

Mr. CULLOM. It is not.

Mr. BERRY. Then I object to it.

Mr. CULLOM. Let me say that the joint resolution simply proposes to take the money out of the appropriation already made for the Chicago building, because we are not able to start the work as the law now stands.

Mr. BERRY. I think the sum of $25,000 to pay an assistant architect is unreasonable and ought not to be permitted by a resolution of Congress. The amount is out of all proportion, it seems to me, for a year's service of an assistant architect, and I am unwilling to allow a resolution to pass which makes provision to pay such a sum to an assistant architect or architects, whether there be one or more than one. I think the amount proposed is entirely too large, and for that reason I think the resolution had better go to a committee, and let the committee report on it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not rise to object to the resolution offered by the Senator from Illinois, but only to say that in case his resolution shall be considered I shall desire to offer an amendment to it. I am fully aware of the fact that there is a lack of enough competent help in the Supervising Architect's Office to conduct that bureau in anything like the manner in which it should be conducted to have it managed in a businesslike way. Buildings in New Jersey are lagging behind on account of the want of additional force in the Supervising Architect's Office. He claims that he is a year behind in his plans with most buildings. If there is any special effort made for any particular post-office, I shall propose to amend the joint resolution so that the Supervising Architect shall be authorized and money enough furnished him to employ sufficient help for all offices which are in the same condition as the Chicago office now is, so that the work may be completed in some reasonable time.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, over a month ago, on the 5th of December, I introduced a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to the cause of the delay in the preparation of plans for the construction of a public building at Portland, Oreg., for which the first appropriation was made several years ago. That resolution was adopted by the Senate on that day, and I have been waiting very anxiously for a response from the Secretary of the Treasury, which up to the present time has not materialized. I hope it may be forthcoming before the resolution submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] comes up for consideration to-morrow, and I shall then be in better condition to know how to vote. Possibly I shall desire to join my friend from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] in amending the resolution, and possibly not, depending somewhat on the nature of the information we get from the Secretary of the Treasury or the Supervising Architect.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, this joint resolution relates to a special single public building. It has been prepared with reference to that building alone. It proposes to take from an appropriation already made $25,000 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to perform one part of his duty—an essential part of his duty. I regret exceedingly that any obstruction should be attempted to be thrown in the way of this particular resolution. After the most careful consideration by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the amplest conference among those who are interested, I think this special resolution ought to be passed.

In the face of the objection of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] I suppose the resolution must go over under the rules, but it is due to the particular interest represented that this shall be considered separately. I regret very much that it should be mixed up with other matters, because it has reference alone to a particular building which involves an expenditure of $4,000,000.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Illinois will be able to so amend the resolution which he has introduced as to include other cases of a similar character. It seems to me that that can be done. I have in my mind the case of San Francisco, which is suffering in a degree but little inferior to that of Chicago. The Chicago case is the most pronounced in the United States, and next, certainly, comes the city of San Francisco. The Government has invested a very large sum of money in a lot in that city, and it has been supposed, because the appropriation had been heretofore made by Congress, that the work would be commenced upon the Government building there. The condition of affairs in that city is a disgrace to the Government, and has been so for years in this regard, and it is all because the Congress of the United States has failed to provide adequately for the office under consideration. If practicable, I hope the Senator from Illinois will be able to so frame the resolution he offers as to provide the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department with the necessary means for carrying out the work enjoined upon that Department by Congress in reference to public buildings of the United States. The exigent cases are numerous and should be attended to, and from Congress must come the authority to do so.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it unfair, after the Illinois delegation has frequently conferred with the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the beginning of the work upon the building at Chicago, and after we have come to the conclusion that this ought to be done, when it is not proposed to take money out of appropriations for public buildings elsewhere, but merely to use a portion of the appropriation which has been made for the building at Chicago, that other Senators should insist upon tacking amendments on the resolution with reference to public buildings in their States.

This is, as my colleague says, a direct resolution, pertaining exclusively to the condition of affairs at Chicago, and I think in all fairness, as the subject has been thoroughly considered by the Illinois delegation and by the Secretary of the Treasury, and what ought to be done has been determined upon, that the resolution should be passed. Then the Senate can adopt such general legislation amending the law relative to the Supervising Architect's Office as may become necessary in order to meet the demands of other sections of the country.

I am willing to amend the resolution so as to make it apply to architects for that building, and change it so as to read:

That $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be applied to the employment of architects for the construction, etc.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I wish to state to the Senate that there is no public building in my State situated similar to the one in Chicago, and I do not desire to have the Senator's resolution amended. The objection I have to the resolution is that it says the Secretary of the Treasury may employ an assistant architect at a salary not to exceed $25,000.

Mr. CULLOM. It does not say anything about salary.

Mr. BERRY. It proposes to appropriate a sum not to exceed that amount. The Senator from Illinois says it is to be taken out of the appropriation already made for the public building at Chicago. There is no one who knows better than he that the time will come when it will be claimed that the appropriation originally made was insufficient to finish the building, and that other appropriations will be required. If it is intended to pay an assistant architect $25,000 a year for his services, and if the money is to be expended on the extensive scale proposed by the resolution, I think that is conclusive evidence that a very large additional appropriation will be required before that building will be completed. I think, therefore, that the resolution had better go to a committee, and let it be amended, guarded, and changed in such a way that it will not show that the Senate is willing to pay to an assistant architect the enormous sum of $25,000 a year.

Mr. CULLOM. I merely desire to say one word, and then the Senate can do what it wishes with the joint resolution. The Senate remembers very well that it has now been a year or more since the original appropriation was made for the beginning of the work upon a new public building in Chicago, and yet the Secretary of the Treasury has not been able to do the first thing with reference to it. Is it to be the fact that the city of Chicago, which is paying into the Treasury on account of the postal service millions upon millions more than is expended in the conduct of the post-office in that city shall go without proper accommodations for the transaction of its postal business? What we desire and what we are entitled to is to get the work started. We can not do it under the present condition of affairs unless Congress gives the Secretary of the Treasury an opportunity to employ assistants to help in the preparation of the plans.

The joint resolution relates exclusively to the post-office at Chicago, and it seems to me that the Senate ought to allow it to pass in order that there may be no further delay with reference to the work.

Mr. WHITE. I trust the Senator from Illinois will not suppose that I am insisting upon any objection to the consideration of the joint resolution. I merely called his attention to a condition of things which I thought he might conceive would warrant a change in the phraseology of the joint resolution. I have visited the Chicago post-office, and after I saw its condition I remained there for as brief a time as possible, considering it a measure of prudence to get out. I would not do anything in the world to impede the completion of the building.

But if it be the opinion of the parties most interested and the opinion of the Senators from Illinois that the joint resolution should be unamended I shall not interpose an objection. I have called attention to what I conceive to be a grave defect in the laws and in the administration of the laws regarding the construction of public edifices.

Mr. PALMER. In reply to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] I will state that if at any time an appropriation shall be made for public works in the States they represent, and they simply ask that a part of the appropriation already made shall be devoted to a particular purpose, I shall certainly assist them to the best of my ability in passing any resolution for which they may ask.

Here is a case where an appropriation has been made. The necessity of the work has already been determined by the Senate, and those who are familiar with the facts know that the need of a building is pressing. The present building is unfitted for public purposes. It has become dangerous. The Senate has considered all the questions involved in order to construct the building, and has joined in making an appropriation. As nothing is proposed here beyond a provision authorizing the use of a certain portion of the money for a specific purpose, which, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, is necessary and without which he can not proceed further, it seems to me this case ought to stand upon its own ground. It ought not to be mixed up either with the propositions or the complaints of other Senators. That is all there is of it. It is not proposed that a salary shall be paid to any particular person, but that the Secretary of the Treasury may obtain, by means of the appropriation already made, such additional architectural assistance as the particular case requires. That the Secretary of the Treasury himself insists is necessary. Without it nothing further can be done.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] intimates that a further appropriation may be asked hereafter. I will not say that that may not be true; but if such an event should happen, if the time should ever come when more money is asked, I suppose the Senate will then be prepared to act upon the necessity of that requirement. This particular sum of money is needed as a preliminary to the work. Without it nothing more can be done. The matter stands as it is to the detriment of the public interest, not the interest of Chicago alone, but the interest of the whole country, so far as it depends upon the conduct not only of the postal service, but of all branches of the public business, while the Government is paying large sums in rent because the building heretofore used is unfit for occupancy.

I trust, therefore, that we may be allowed to obtain the attention of the Senate to this particular joint resolution and secure its passage.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope my friend from Arkansas will not object.

Mr. BERRY. I object to the consideration of the joint resolution to-day. I am compelled to object to its passage to-day unless it is referred to a committee.

Mr. CULLOM. Then let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being interposed to the present consideration of the joint resolution, it goes over.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be read at length, and if there is no serious objection I should like to submit a few observations in reference to it before it is referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution (S. R. 49) to enforce the Monroe doctrine was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the United States of America will regard it as an unfriendly act for any foreign power, without our consent, by war, treaty, purchase, or otherwise, to extend its territorial limits in the Western Hemisphere on either of the American continents, or to or over any of the islands adjacent thereto which this country deems necessary or proper for its self-preservation. And the United States of America reserves the right to be the sole judge of the necessity.

That the principle herein enunciated is founded upon the law of self-preservation, which from necessity adheres in and belongs to every civilized nation as a sovereign and inalienable right, and this principle is attested by Washington's Farewell Address and by President Monroe's ever-memorable message of December 2, 1823.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I venture on this occasion, and because of the importance of the subject-matter contained in the joint resolution just read, to offer a few remarks.

The Monroe doctrine, as understood by the American people, is a doctrine of peace, not war; of preservation, not destruction. Washington, in his Farewell Address, enunciated a rule of conduct for the government of this country in foreign affairs which has been as fully observed, acted upon, and respected as though it had received all the formalities and power conferred by an act of Congress. The people for many decades have acknowledged the correctness of his views upon national affairs, and have applauded and approved the principle that we should avoid all entangling political alliances with foreign powers. From this prescribed rule of conduct, which is but the assertion of the doctrine of self-preservation, of national supremacy, another important principle has been evolved or legitimately drawn—that while we should avoid entangling political alliances with the powers of the Old World, we should see to it at the same time that those powers enter into no entangling political alliances with nor interfere in the affairs of the Republics of the Western Hemisphere.

The principle announced by Washington in his Farewell Address was the beginning of the American doctrine of noninterference and of nonintervention by and with foreign powers in the political and domestic affairs of the American Republics. This principle has been fought for, and any violation of it will be contested again.

Great Britain, strong, aggressive, and imperious, impressed American citizens and seamen in her wars and exercised the right of search on American vessels sailing in American waters, under the American flag, upon the tyrannical theory that "once a subject, always a subject." The assertion of this kingly and autocratic principle of interference in our political and domestic affairs was settled in that tribunal from which there is no appeal, in the contest of 1812, waged not for conquest, not for glory, but for the rights, dignity, and honor of American citizenship and of America. The powers of Europe at this time were contesting for supremacy. France, under the leadership of Napoleon, had undertaken to make all the nations of Europe subservient to her power. Russia, Prussia, and Austria, having felt the iron hand of the man of destiny, entered into a protective alliance to control the civil and religious destinies of the world.

The victorious eagles of Austerlitz went down in disastrous defeat at Waterloo. St. Helena obtained another resident, and France became a member of the Holy Alliance. The colonies of Spain in America were generally in revolt. They were contesting for independence and nationality by wager of battle.

At this time all Europe was practically arrayed against England. The sympathy of America went out to the Spanish-American colonies in their contest for liberty and nationality. America feared intervention of the Holy Alliance in the affairs of the Spanish Republics, whose independence had been recognized, and England feared the powers composing the Holy Alliance. Then it was, and under such peculiar circumstances, that England advised, consented to, and acquiesced in the doctrine pronounced by President Monroe in his ever-memorable message of December 2, 1823.

President Monroe, in discussing the question of nonintervention in his message, uses the following language:

The occasion has been judged proper for asserting as a principle, in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintained, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European powers.

It will be observed that he asserts the time had come in our national affairs when a principle or rule of conduct should be announced with reference to the future colonization of both of the American continents by European powers. He was discussing a condition, not a theory. He was formulating a rule of conduct not only for the present, but for the future. Again he declares:

It is impossible that the allied powers should extend their political system to any portion of either continent without endangering our peace and happiness. * * * We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety.

The principle of noninterference by this nation in foreign matters was as strongly indicated in this message, as a rule of conduct, as by Washington in his Farewell Address, and the importance of nonintervention by foreign powers in the affairs of the Republics on either of the continents in the Western Hemisphere was particularly and forcibly elaborated. It was the precise question at issue.

Such interference was declared to be dangerous to our "peace and safety," to our "peace and happiness," and could not be viewed "in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States." "The position taken by President Monroe in his message," says Mr. Adams, "was received by England not only with satisfaction, but with enthusiasm. Therefore England, by reason of her conduct at the time, as well as by every principle of law, moral or legal, is bound by the Monroe doctrine of nonintervention."

The people of this country, with all the warmth and zeal of patriotism, hailed it with delight as another declaration of American independence, and with singular unanimity have maintained and upheld it ever since, although the doctrine announced in this message has never been approved by joint resolution or act of Congress. However firmly the people may have adhered to the doctrine as a principle and rule of conduct for the present and future, the same unvarying loyalty to it can not be truly ascribed to all of our statesmen and politicians.

When the Holy Alliance had been dissolved, when its menace to the civil and religious liberty of the world was a thing of the past, then England, true to her traditions and history, ignored the principle and claimed that it never had any application, except to a particular case. Some American statesmen, inoculated with English principles, have sought to overthrow the doctrine of nonintervention by adopting the English idea. It has been denied as a correct principle when applied to the South American continent. Its applicability has been denied as to the islands adjacent to the American continents in the Western Hemisphere. Its applicability has been denied even as to the North American continent. Its applicability to the present existing conditions in Venezuela has been denied. So, Mr. President, there is not that entire and absolute unanimity there should be as to the principle which should control this country in the future with reference to intervention of foreign powers on this side of the ocean with the political and domestic affairs of the American continents and of the islands adjacent thereto. Therefore, it would seem to be an imperative duty devolved upon this Congress to declare in no uncertain language just what is meant and understood by the American principle of nonintervention.

The statesmen of America, at the time the principle was announced, understood it the same as the people do generally to-day. Thomas Jefferson, writing upon the subject of nonintervention, uses the following language:

> I could honestly therefore join in the declaration proposed, that we aim not at the acquisition of any of their possessions, but that we will oppose with all our means the forcible interposition of any other power as auxiliary, stipendary, or under any other form or pretext, and most especially their transfer to any power by conquest, cession, or acquisition in any other way.

Here, Mr. President, we find, as I believe, a correct statement of the Monroe doctrine. It is made applicable alike to the acquisition of territory by war, by cession, by treaty, by purchase, or otherwise, in any manner whatsoever. The danger apprehended was the acquisition of territory here in any manner by foreign powers, and the setting up of their forms of government or establishments adjacent to ours. The danger thus apprehended by American statesmen was imminent, and was the reason for the rule or principle announced. And the danger apprehended is just as great and imminent to-day, even more apparent.

Mr. President, I do not intend at this time to enter into a discussion of the questions at issue between Great Britain and Venezuela. The commission appointed by the President will discuss and decide those questions impartially. I may properly state, however, in passing, that the history of Great Britain for more than two centuries has been one of war and aggression against weaker peoples and nations. Her policy has been one of relentless conquest. Her possessions are so vast and extensive that the sun, in all its course, never ceases to shine thereon, and in her greed and rapacity the sullen roar of the British lion is heard round the world. In her tireless career of conquest she seized Gibraltar, Mauritius, Aden, and Malta, Trinidad, Soudan, Cape Colony, and Zululand, the islands of Jamaica, Ceylon, and Ascension, British Burmah, Borneo, Hongkong, and St. Helena. I have not mentioned her large possessions in India and South America, nor all in Africa. I have not mentioned almost innumerable stations, lesser islands, and ports seized for commercial advantage. I have not mentioned her many cruel and bloody wars. Her history, her rapacious greed, raises a very strong impression that she is out land grabbing in Venezuela.

On the 17th day of December, 1895, President Cleveland in his message to Congress attempted to state the American doctrine of nonintervention. Did he state it fully? From the general approval of the message by the press of the country one would be so inclined to believe. But upon a careful perusal of the message I am of the opinion that he did not state the American principle fully, and while announcing the principle generally he nullified it in one of its most important features. If we give to words their plain and ordinary meaning, then we are forced to the conclusion that he attempted to apply the doctrine to the American Republics only in case of a foreign power, by war or force, attempting to extend its territorial limits. In his message he expressly declares that Venezuela may adjust this matter with England. He says:

> Great Britain's present proposition has never thus far been regarded as admissible by Venezuela, though any adjustment of the boundary which that country may deem for her advantage and may enter into of her own free will can not, of course, be objected to by the United States.

We are here informed that if Venezuela should see fit to recognize the English claim and thereby concede 30,000 square miles or more of territory to England it could not be objected to by the United States. If territory can be thus obtained by peaceful means, by consent, by agreement, by concession, by treaty, why may not the entire territory of Venezuela, or of any other consenting nation, be transferred fully to some foreign power? Again he says:

> If a European power, by any extension of its boundaries, takes possession of the territory of one of our neighboring Republics against its will and in derogation of its rights, it is difficult to see why to that extent such European power does not thereby attempt to extend its system of government to that portion of this continent which is thus taken.

It will be observed that the President says that the acquisition of territory against its will would be in derogation of its rights. Therefore, if acquired with its will, its consent, it would not be in derogation thereof. If the Monroe doctrine is only to be invoked or applied when territory is sought to be obtained by war, or a condition equivalent thereto, the doctrine ought to be immediately amended so as to make it applicable to territory obtained by cession, treaty, purchase, or otherwise.

If not, then foreign powers may, by cession, treaty, or purchase, obtain large tracts of land on either of the American continents or on the islands adjacent thereto. Under such construction Spain can cede Cuba to England, and America would have no cause to complain. Surely the American people will never willingly adopt such construction. The American people to-day, with almost perfect unanimity, believe that Cuba should, as a matter of self-preservation, belong to us. In any event, that if it ever passes from the control of Spain, it must either become an independent power or else become subject to or a part of this nation; and this upon the principle of self-preservation or self-defense, a principle as old as men and nations; a principle just and right and of most generous application. The Gulf of Mexico, the mouth of the great Mississippi River, the Republics of Yucatan and Nicaragua, naturally fall under the protecting ægis of this island. Hence the great importance of it to America. And, more than all, when we shall have made the two great oceans one by constructing the Nicaraguan Canal, when the greater commerce of the world, on American bottoms, manned by American seamen, under the American flag, shall pass through this great thoroughfare, we shall want Cuba. That it will ultimately become a part of this great nation seems to me manifest destiny.

Mr. President, I am one of those who believe the American principle of nonintervention is not founded wholly upon the Monroe doctrine or upon any technical construction of international law, but rather upon a principle as old as civilization itself. It is founded, in my humble opinion, upon the natural law of self-preservation. And, Mr. President, in the assertion and maintenance of this principle each and every nation has the inherent and exclusive right to judge for itself what is best suited to its own condition and most likely to promote its happiness and welfare in its own way.

Mr. President, let us have peace, therefore, at this time, while we are attempting to settle the disputed facts as to whether Great Britain, by wrongful aggression, has, or is about to acquire, a large extent of territory in Venezuela, let us make known to the nations of the world in language so plain that "he who runs may read" our position and understanding of the American doctrine of nonintervention and at the same time let the nations of the world know that as a last resort we will maintain the principle by war, if necessary, in order that peace may come.

The principle announced in this resolution is not one of war, but of peace; not one of conquest, but of national honor and glory.

As the great powers of Europe are extending and rearranging their territorial lines in the Eastern Hemisphere for the final great contest of national supremacy, it is but just and proper that we should declare our position with reference to the American continents and the islands adjacent thereto in the Western Hemisphere, so that there may be no mistake or misunderstanding. No one deplores war more than I do. I do not believe in war except in case of necessity. My views upon this subject are fully expressed in the language of one of our greatest and most humane generals:

> Far be the day when we shall enter into war unless we are fully justified by our own inner consciousness that it is right, for "thrice is he armed that hath his quarrel just." And men should not engage in war unless they are fully conscious that the cause is just for so doing. War means desolation, destruction, sacrifice, and suffering, as well as heroism and glory.

Mr. President, national dishonor, national decadence, and decay are more deplorable than war. By announcing the principle contained in the resolution we shall not invite or provoke war. The justness of our cause will challenge and command the admiration of the civilized world. Opposition thereto will disappear like summer clouds before the morning sun. War may come in upholding this principle, but I do not believe it. But if it does come we shall triumph in a cause which Heaven will bless and crown with glorious success. And when the shock of fierce contending armies shall be heard no more, when the smoke of battle shall have been gathered in the hand of peace, then we shall behold greater America united, prosperous, and free, still the wonder and marvel of the world—matchless, incomparable.

Mr. President, let us have peace; and, in order that we may have honorable, lasting, and glorious peace, let us announce to the nations of the world the principle contained in the resolution as a rule of conduct for all time.

Mr. CALL. I desire to ask whether the joint resolution is before the Senate for consideration at this time.

Mr. BAKER. I understand that it is not. I desired to make a few remarks when introducing the joint resolution.

Mr. CALL. I merely wish to state, with the unanimous consent of the Senate, so far as is pertinent to the joint resolution, that I hope the Committee on Foreign Relations will at an early day and without delay bring into the Senate for consideration a measure according belligerent rights to the people of Cuba.

The application of the Monroe doctrine, whatever may be proper in regard to its extension as contained in the joint resolution of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER], now before the Senate, is certainly applicable to the present condition of affairs in Cuba. It is unquestionably true that the Government of the United States should not permit the terrible atrocities which are now being perpetrated upon the people of that island. There is no greater instance of heroism in the history of the world than that of a comparatively small population upon a little island successfully maintaining a war against one of the great powers of Europe. Without arms, without munitions of war, relying entirely upon the unanimous sentiment of the people, they have endured cruelties which outrage human nature and which find constant publication in the press.

Mr. President, I hope no delay will occur in the expression on the part of Congress of the right of those people to recognition as a belligerent power.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The Chair understands that that is the pending motion. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

IMMIGRATION FROM PENAL COLONIES.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Immigration be directed to inquire whether or not any legislation is necessary to prevent the introduction into the United States of aliens imprisoned in penal colonies of European nations established in their American possessions.

PAYMENT OF COIN OBLIGATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution by Mr. BUTLER relative to the purpose of Congress to keep gold and silver at a parity by investing the Secretary of the Treasury with the discretion of paying the coin obligations of the country as they mature in either metal.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand that the Senator from Nevada proposes to address the Senate on the resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has risen, and the Chair presumes that he desires to address the Senate on the resolution.

Mr. STEWART. I rose to request that the resolution of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] be temporarily laid aside without losing its place, and that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business a few minutes before the time when it will be laid before the Senate—I presume there is not time enough for anything of importance to intervene—in order to enable me to address the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BUTLER. I am willing that the resolution shall be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I gave notice two days ago that at the expiration of the morning business to-day I would move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 2904, being the bond bill. If the morning business has been concluded I will make that motion.

Mr. STEWART. I have the floor on the unfinished business, and should like to make some remarks upon the resolution of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. It will not enlarge the time if I should do so now, as I can make them on one measure as well as the other.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let me get this bill up.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to make my remarks on the unfinished business, because I think that is the matter immediately under consideration, and it is the subject on which I want to talk.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada how long he thinks it will take him to submit the remarks he proposes to make?

Mr. STEWART. About an hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question before the Senate is as to the disposition of the resolution heretofore submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. Unanimous consent is asked that it be allowed to lie on the table without prejudice. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SALE OF BONDS.

Mr. STEWART. Now I ask that the unfinished business be taken up in order that I may submit some remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent to address the Senate upon the unfinished business. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Is it the proposition of the Senator from Nevada to discuss the unfinished business or some matter coming over in the morning hour?

Mr. STEWART. The unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition is to discuss the unfinished business, which will not come up in regular order until 2 o'clock. It can come up before that time by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. At the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent that it be taken up now.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not want to be discourteous to the Senator from Nevada. At the same time, as I gave notice two days ago that I would make this motion, I do not think the Senator from Nevada ought to insist on taking the time of the Senate just now.

Mr. STEWART. I am entitled to the floor at 2 o'clock. I do not suppose it will take me until 3. I shall insist upon my right to speak at 2 o'clock.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Arkansas will permit a suggestion, I think a solution of the difficulty can be reached in harmony with the ideas of the Senator from Nevada as well as those of the Senator from Arkansas. If the motion proposed to be made by the Senator from Arkansas be submitted at this time and be adopted by the Senate, the Senator from Nevada can make his speech upon that measure, as I understand the rules, with as much propriety as if the other matter were pending.

Mr. STEWART. I have taken the floor to speak on the resolution with regard to the issue of bonds, and I wish to speak upon that resolution. I do not want to speak on the bond bill to-day.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Nevada has had the floor twice to make a speech, and I think it is hardly fair that he should not have an opportunity to make it now, when he has secured the floor for the third time.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no idea of being discourteous to the Senator from Nevada. I only hope there is some way to avoid postponing the measure any longer. I know he feels as much interest as I do in taking up the bill which I have in charge; but, of course, I can not object to the Senator taking the time he desires. However, at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Nevada I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be now taken up. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution by Mr. ELKINS relative to the sale of bonds by the United States.

Mr. STEWART. Let the Secretary read the resolution and the proposed amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution and the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. The resolution submitted by Mr. ELKINS December 31 is as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that hereafter no bonds of the United States shall be sold at private sale or under private contract, and in case of any sale of bonds under existing laws the same shall be made only after due advertisement of such sale and proposals invited, and then only to the highest bidder.

It is proposed by Mr. BUTLER to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "sold" and inserting the words "for any purpose whatever, without further authority from Congress;" so that the resolution when amended will read:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that hereafter no bonds of the United States shall be sold for any purpose whatever without further authority from Congress.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the reasons why the resolution of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], as proposed to be amended by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], should pass seem to me to be overwhelming. In the first place, I shall show why reasons against the issuance of bonds have accumulated since the resolution was last under discussion, and instead of complying with the spirit of the original resolution offered by the Senator from West Virginia, the Administration has taken a departure which is much worse than the original private sales.

REASONS FOR THE RESOLUTION.

Before I proceed to show that there is no authority and no law for the sale, which I shall do, I propose to call attention to the very remarkable call issued by the Executive for the sale of $100,000,000 of United States bonds, bearing 4 per cent interest, and running twenty-nine years, the coupons from last February being cut off. In the first place, the bids are to be for $50 and any multiple of that sum. In the next place the bidders must estimate what premiums they will pay, which involves a very difficult calculation. I do not suppose one in a thousand of the people of the United States, perhaps not one in ten thousand, can make a calculation to show what interest their bid would bear, if they named a certain premium. That takes it out of the reach of ordinary bidders. Then $50 is entirely too much. It, too, takes the bonds out of the reach of the ordinary bidder. Then there is contained in the offer a declaration like this:

The right to reject any and all bids is reserved.

That is not all. It is further provided in this offer that the purchasers will be required to pay United States gold coin. Yet this is called a popular loan. Can it be so called in any just acceptation? We never have had a popular loan in this country, but they have had such loans in other countries. After the Franco-Prussian war, France was compelled to pay a ransom of $1,000,000,000 to make peace with Germany, and she raised that sum by a popular loan.

WHAT A POPULAR LOAN IS.

I think the best way to describe a popular loan is to state how France did it. The minimum size of the bonds she offered was 10 francs, a little less than $2 of our money. They were offered to be paid for in French money, and no bid was to be rejected, but the bidders were to receive the bonds pro rata. There was no obstruction in the way, no fooling about it, no underhand scheme about it, no syndicates behind it. What was the result? Every servant who could raise 10 francs bought a bond. They were bought with French money, and the result was that the $1,000,000,000 was subscribed two or three times over by the French people. What effect did it have upon France? The $1,000,000,000 of these bonds of small denominations operated like so much currency. It changed from hand to hand. The people had that much money really, and the $1,000,000,000 which France paid did more good to France than the $1,000,000,000 which Germany received did for Germany, for within two years from that time France was the most prosperous country in Europe.

How did that happen? Having an abundance of money, all the people went to work. The wealth of a country depends upon its labor and its resources. The French prospered as no other people did. What has been the result since? With the impetus that France got by the $1,000,000,000, there was plenty of money and all hands went to work. She has since accumulated $900,000,000 of gold and $700,000,000 of silver, and has put out about seven or eight hundred million dollars of paper money, with less than 40,000,000 people. France has kept her people at work and has prevented falling prices, and thus secured the balance of trade in her favor.

How has the United States done? What kind of a policy has the United States pursued? The United States during the war put out various kinds of bonds, which were used as money. In fact, the whole national debt was practically money. The holders of the bonds used them as a basis of credit in the place of money.

Some of the bonds passed from hand to hand as money. When the war closed what happened? Europeans invested in them because there was no question of their payment. They became the best of security. The Europeans bought them and took them away from the people and contracted the circulation enormously. What happened then? The debt was refunded and taken by syndicates and kept from the people. I think the people of Washington will remember very well that when an opportunity was given to invest in a popular loan of $10,000,000, there was a string of people a mile or two long to get the $10,000,000 of bonds. The next day the syndicate had taken up all the bonds and none could be bought.

THE PRESENT LOAN A MOCKERY.

This advertisement, coming at the present time, it seems to me, is a cruel mockery. In the first place, the amount of the bonds is too large. They ought not to be more than $5 each, if you are going to have the people take them. It is all nonsense to talk about a popular loan in $50 bonds. France never made an experiment of that kind. If she had she would have failed. If that had been tried in France it would have been a failure.

Mr. HAWLEY. I had a chance to hear a good deal about the French loan, and it is my recollection that France issued bonds as low as 100 francs, $20.

Mr. STEWART. As low as 10 francs.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thought the Senator from Nevada said nothing as low as $50.

Mr. STEWART. I said, referring to the offer of the President, that $50 was too much. Bonds of that denomination can not be taken by the people at large, but they could take bonds of $2 or $3 and they would all take some if they had an opportunity. When they needed money they would bring the bonds out.

I received a letter from my wife in Paris when the French loan was being taken. She said that every servant about the hotels and all the waiters were gathering up money to get 10 francs to buy a bond. They all took an interest in it. We have no such opportunity here in the United States. Here comes the fifty-dollar bond; then comes the assertion that they must be sealed bids, and that they may be rejected, to discourage the people. That is a matter of uncertainty about it. Then the ordinary person can not fix the price to determine any given per cent. If this had been intended as a popular loan the denomination of the bonds would have been not to exceed $5. It would have been arranged that they should be paid for in American money, and the Government would have fixed a price which would have made it a 3 per cent bond. The Government officers could have figured it out so that everybody would have understood it, and the people, no doubt, would have taken about all the bonds the Government wants to issue. The Government should have figured it out, whether it was 116, 117, 118, or 119, so as to make it a 3 per cent bond, and stated that price. Then the people could have taken the bonds; they would have been within the reach of the people. But the proposed issue is placed out of their reach by a dozen different arrangements in this proposition.

Then comes another obstruction. The bonds must be paid for in gold. That is required by an Administration which has been declaring all along that it was going to maintain the parity between gold and silver; that there should be no discrimination; that there should be no degradation of the money of the country; "that one dollar should be as good as another." That phrase has been used in all our elections since Harrison invented it. It has been taken up and echoed and reechoed—that one dollar should be as good as every other dollar. Yet here the Executive requires a particular kind of dollar to maintain the parity! That is a great way to maintain the parity, to say that other kinds of dollars are not good enough with which to buy those bonds.

UNITED STATES TREASURY NOTES.

Mr. President, from the foundation of this Government until 1861 there was never a period of five years when there was not circulating paper which would pay all Government dues and which was at par and never went below par. From time to time, until 1816, they issued Treasury notes and received them for Government dues. Then the circulation of the United States Bank was received for Government dues from about 1816 until 1835, and it never was at a discount. Then Treasury notes were issued again under Van Buren's Administration. Those Treasury notes were received for public dues, and they never fell below par. Then, in 1861, we had Treasury notes put out. Those Treasury notes were as good as gold, and after greenbacks were dishonored by the refusal to receive them for customs dues, then the $62,000,000 of Treasury notes—I think that was the amount—remained as good as gold to the end of the war. In those days notes were issued upon which there was no limitation of legal-tender power, and so long as they paid Government dues they remained at par.

THE EXECUTIVE DEGRADES THE NATION'S MONEY.

Here the Executive says that no kind of money but gold shall be received on the bids. It disparages the greenbacks and the silver certificates and all other money about in the same manner that it would to refuse to receive them for custom dues. "Resume specie payments; make one dollar as good as another; no discrimination between dollars." Here we have this document put out, saying, "we require gold and we will repudiate all the other circulation."

Now, it has been suggested, and circumstances appear to point in that direction, that this offer was put out under a stress of circumstances, on account of the clamor against the sale of bonds to the syndicate, in order to excuse the Administration for dealing with a syndicate. If that is the object, they offer it in the right shape to be used for that purpose, for it can be used for no other purpose. The money of this country is in a condition where the people can not get gold. The syndicate has it hoarded.

I have here an article from the Washington Post entitled "A grip on gold," which contains a statement made by the Treasury Department, being a summary of the condition of our currency, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper will be read, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is recalled that private subscriptions to the first loan of $50,000,000 amounted to only about $745,000, and to the last loan but little more. The last issue resulted in the payment into the Treasury of $65,116,244 in gold, for which the Government issued 4 per cent thirty-year bonds to the amount of $62,315,400. The premium realized by the Government, therefore, was $2,800,844, or 4.494 per cent, the investor realizing a rate of interest of about 3.75 per cent. The market price of the bonds is now about 114. The Treasury now holds legal tenders to the amount of $147,495,510, of which $115,825,143 are in United States notes, $2,845,000 in currency certificates, and $22,044,511 in Treasury notes of 1890. The amount of legal tenders now in circulation is $378,187,642, as follows: Treasury notes of 1890, $115,726,769; United States notes, $230,855,873, and currency certificates, $206,653,836. Of the amount of legal tenders in circulation, the 3,712 national banks on September 28 last, the date of the last report, held $143,866,685, the remainder being held by State banks, trust companies, savings banks, and private banks, aggregating in number 10,038, and by private individuals.

NO GREENBACKS OR GOLD FOR THE PEOPLE.

Mr. STEWART. It will be observed that there are nearly $150,000,000 of legal tenders in the Treasury, and that outside of the Treasury there are three hundred and seventy-eight millinos and some thousands; that of the $378,000,000 of legal tenders over $143,000,000 are in the national banks, and the balance, as stated in this article, in about 10,000 other private banks, trust companies, etc. The probabilities are that there are not $50,000,000 of legal-tender notes circulating among the people. So that the bankers have the means of calling on the Treasury for gold, and nobody else has the means of doing it, and no way of getting the gold.

As to the question of the amount of gold in the country, nobody knows that any worth naming exists outside of the banks and the Treasury, except on the Pacific Coast, where there may be twenty or thirty million dollars in actual circulation. But there is no gold whatever in circulation east of the Rocky Mountains; whatever there is is in the banks, and undoubtedly the pool understands that.

THE WAYS OF THE ROTHSCHILD SYNDICATE.

When this call was issued, what did the syndicate do? It will be remembered that there was a syndicate formed to take this entire loan, and that was composed of Europeans. Did they encourage a popular loan in the United States? I have in my hand telegrams from Europe showing how they boomed our popular loan. They were cooperating to destroy it, with the intention of having a pretended coercion upon the President, a sham coercion to make him give them the bonds. I think it might be well to insert in the RECORD the kindly way the Europeans who belonged to this syndicate, of which Morgan was the head, undertook to aid the popular loan in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

EUROPEAN BANKERS' VIEWS—THEY WILL ACCEPT NOTHING BUT A BOND PAYABLE IN GOLD.

NEW YORK, January 6.

The World to-morrow will publish the following cablegrams:

"LONDON, January 6.

"In answer to your telegram of the 4th, we beg to say that under ordinary circumstances we would never venture to offer an opinion on any financial question which is under discussion by a foreign government and its legislature, but we are always ready to give our advice on any practical issue when called upon to do so by those who have power to act.

"Last year, during the financial crisis in the United States, we made an offer for a 3 per cent gold loan, and failing Congress giving necessary powers to enable such an issue to be made, we undertook, with others, to place a certain amount of 4 per cent coin bonds.

"As you now have done us the honor of asking our opinion, we must tell you very frankly that in our judgment the severe financial situation at present is chiefly caused by the political crisis, and as soon as the American and English Governments have satisfactorily settled the questions at issue the financial strain will be considerably relaxed, if it does not altogether disappear.

"Until this boundary question is arranged we do not believe that either the European public or capitalists will take many American bonds for investment, if any, and we believe that although a certain number of people on this side of the Atlantic have signified their intention of taking a share in a syndicate to be formed in New York, they have only done so in the belief that at the present moment they could at once resell the bonds in America.

"When the political horizon is quite clear and it is finally established in the minds of all men that the good feeling and understanding which exists in the hearts of the people in England and America is beyond doubt and is acknowledged and ratified by the two Governments, then will be time and opportunity for America to apply to the British capitalists.

"We offer no suggestions how this is to be accomplished. It is for the Governments to decide this.

"All we can say is that good feeling exists among our people on this side, and you, sir, have proved by your patriotic efforts that it exists on the other side of the Atlantic.

"N. M. ROTHSCHILD & SONS."

Mr. STEWART. There were a number of other telegrams by other bankers, indorsing the Rothschilds. Of course they had to indorse the Rothschilds and sustain their position. Now, mark this significant telegram. A few days previous to this offer to the public, the agent of the Rothschilds who formed the other syndicate, Pierpont Morgan, was in this city, as all the papers announced, with Mr. Stetson, the same attorney who helped manage the other pool. The Messrs. Rothschild & Sons tell us they were part of the other pool. It was announced in the press that a new pool had been formed to take this loan, but it was the old pool, the old syndicate somewhat enlarged, a few more American bankers being taken in, and here were Messrs. Rothschild & Sons, with a pool already formed, and with the gold all cornered.

When this offer was published—which, if I might express my opinion without being impolite, I would call a "sham offer"—in order to defeat it, the members of this syndicate telegraphed from London that the bonds could not be sold, that they would not take them under existing circumstances, when their agent had been in this city and had made arrangements to take them and expected to get them, and still expects to get them, and get them cheap, when the force of a popular loan has failed.

They wanted to discourage the American people. It seems to me that such a message coming from a syndicate which was proposing to buy bonds for less than their value shows a conspiracy against the finances and honor of this country that should make us pause; and it is time to stop selling bonds until there is some mode provided for their issuance by law and some regulation, so that a syndicate can not fool with the Government in this way.

The Rothschilds are in a syndicate to buy the bonds, and when the offer is put out, in order to discourage the American people and to damage the finances and credit of this country, then come telegrams from members of the syndicate, disparaging American credit; and our papers have been teeming with laudation of the patriotism of the syndicate—the syndicate saved the country!—and the commercial press throughout the land has been commending the syndicate for the last year. Now come these same individuals applying for $100,000,000 of bonds, after they have collected the gold which nobody else can get. This proposal, pretending to be a popular loan, is trammeled by the necessity of bidders having gold. Then come telegrams from the same banking syndicate disparaging the credit of the United States. If there is anything more important for consideration than this, if there is anything which more appeals to American pride and American honor than this, I should like to have the subject suggested. I will insert in my remarks the full dispatches.

The papers referred to are as follows:

BERLIN, January 6.

Not having taken part in the negotiations for a new loan, we think it inopportune to give an opinion on the subject.

S. BLEICHROEDER & CO., Bankers.

LONDON, January 6.

In my official capacity I can not express any opinion.

GOVERNOR BANK OF ENGLAND.

LONDON, January 6.

Can not express opinion as to continental investors. Doubt if sufficiently attractive here in form suggested.

COUTTS, Bankers.

LONDON, January 6.

In our opinion the success, or otherwise, of an issue of American bonds in England would depend on the feeling existing between the two countries at the time of issue.

CHILDS & CO.

PARIS, January 6.

Believe European investors would readily take United States threes, principal and interest payable in gold, but coin or currency bonds, even 4 percents, would find quite limited market.

LONDON, January 6.

If your inquiry refers to United States bonds expressed in coin, an expression regarded here and on the Continent as equivocal and dubious, we don't believe any such 3 per cent bonds would be taken abroad. In ordinary times a 3 per cent United States loan, expressed in gold, would no doubt go well here and on the Continent, but these are exceptional times, and at present even that may be uncertain. In our opinion, also, the absence of small hoarded savings in the hands of the people of the United States, such as among the French form the support of popular loans, makes a popular issue in the United States unpromising.

BROWN, SHIPLEY & CO., Bankers.

PARIS, January 6.

French capital would largely participate in United States loans provided principal and interest be paid in gold. Terms would depend on circumstances.

THE CREDIT LYONAISE.

THE POPULAR LOAN EXPECTED TO FAIL.

Mr. STEWART. But other things have appeared. It now appears to be generally conceded by the syndicate that the popular loan will fail. The first intimation that we had came from the little evening paper here which always feels for the Administration—the little Star that twinkles dimly but actively. It gives us the first inkling of what is anticipated. I ask the Secretary to read what the Star says, and then I will make some comments on it. The extract I desire to have read is from the Star of yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE RAID ON GOLD—WHAT THE PRESIDENT MAY DO UNDER CERTAIN CIRCUMSTANCES.

The withdrawals of gold from the Treasury thus far this week are looked upon as ominous by Treasury officials, but this result is not altogether unexpected by the Administration. They would not be surprised if a serious raid should be made, taking practically all of the gold out of the Treasury, and if this should occur they will be disposed to say, "I told you so." It is what the President and his Secretary expected to result from an attempt at a popular loan.

It is said that in anticipation of a raid on the gold a course has already been decided on, to be followed as soon as the reserve is run below a certain point. As soon as it becomes apparent (if it does) that the gold in the Treasury is being drawn on for the purchase of the proposed bonds the President will, it is said, withdraw the advertisement for bonds and at once make a contract with the syndicate for gold. It is believed that he will not wait for the reserve to sink much lower before doing this, provided it is evident that the gold is being withdrawn in consequence of the offer of bonds.

THE STORY OF JOE SANDS.

Mr. STEWART. Though not in the habit of telling stories, this article reminds me of one. We had a bad man in California whose name was Joe Sands. He was very bad. He played three-card monte in Stockton, and had to run away from that place because he cheated everybody. Then he went up to Sonora and played a swindling game, and was run out. He went around playing tricks of that kind, and as soon as he was discovered in one place he had to leave for another. He was always prepared to leave on short notice, and had his horse saddled. He worked his games along up to Placerville, and then to Mormon Island, and then to Nevada. Each time he had his horse saddled and had to go. He marked cards, loaded dice, and did all that kind of thing. He finally got over into Plumas County on Jim Crow Bar. The water was so high there that the people could not get into the stream. They were all very poor, and nobody had any money.

Joe Sands discovered a large, good-looking, but very lank dog. There was only one very small meat market in the place, where Joe Sands actually bought a good-sized piece of beef; he did not steal that time, he made an exception. Then he held the meat before the dog and made the dog stand on his hind legs and roll over. He teased the dog in that way for a long time, but finally took a piece of paper, rolled the beef up in it, put it in his pocket, and said he would have to go, that the meat was for another dog. The trick Joe played on the dog ended his career. The miners voted unanimously that he was too mean to live. They did not give him time to escape, but dealt with him in a way that put a stop to his wicked works.

The President is now offering these bonds. The people are hungry for them, but they can not reach them. The President will withdraw them and give them to his pet syndicate. The evidence is accumulating that the people are not going to get any of them.

GIVING THE LOAN "A BLACK EYE."

In the New York Sun of this morning we find an interview with a Cabinet officer. The Sun is pretty careful about misrepresenting high officers of the Government in its interviews. In discussing the question of the probable failure of this popular loan the reporter says, among other things, what I now read:

Discussing the question with the Sun correspondent to-night this Cabinet officer——

Mr. GEORGE. Who was it?

Mr. STEWART. He does not give the name. He says the Cabinet officer requested that his name be not given.

Mr. GEORGE. You can take any one you please, then?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; you can take any one you please.

The interview continues—gave the reason why the Administration is absolutely confident of the success of the new loan. This reason is that the loan is practically underwritten now by bankers, and that an arrangement has been made with banks to produce the gold necessary to prevent a financial crash whenever it is threatened, between now and February 5, the date when the bids are to be opened and passed upon.

Nobody doubts that the country is perfectly secure, now that it is underwritten by Morgan! The failure of the offer would be an excuse for selling bonds at a remarkably low figure. Then we shall hear Rothschild lauded as the only patriotic American anywhere. We have to go to the other side of the water to get patriotism. The same syndicate which has underwritten the bonds already tells you, "You put them out and we will give the loan a black eye, and then the honesty and the patriotism of the country will justify you in selling to us very cheap; the ten or fifteen millions we made in the other deal is not satisfactory; we want to make more; we want to destroy the credit of the country, so that we can make more money under this loan than we did under the former one."

There is another thing in this interview which is very significant, but which we all knew:

This same Cabinet officer says that there are plenty of statistics at hand, in addition to the piles of telegrams that have arrived from financial centers during the last few days, to demonstrate that the people of the country have not hoarded away the vast sums of gold they are credited with.

We have heard about the vast amount of gold in possession of the people, when everybody knew the people did not have any gold, and the bonds can not be purchased with anything else. Is it not tantalizing the people to offer them these bonds when the gold is all pooled and everybody knows it, to offer them under conditions when they can not buy them?

THE BONDS UNNECESSARY AND ILLEGAL.

I say now there is no necessity, there is no law for this proceeding. The President tells us there is necessity for it. What does he say in his annual message? I will have the passage I send up read, and I hope the Senate will pay attention to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE, FIRST SESSION FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

It is possible that the suggestion of increased revenue as a remedy for the difficulties we are considering may have originated in an intimation or distinct allegation that the bonds which have been issued ostensibly to replenish our gold reserve were really issued to supply insufficient revenue. Nothing can be further from the truth. Bonds were issued to obtain gold for the maintenance of our national credit. As has been shown, the gold thus obtained has been drawn again from the Treasury upon United States notes and Treasury notes. This operation would have been promptly prevented if possible; but these notes having thus been passed to the Treasury, they became the money of the Government, like any other ordinary Government funds, and there was nothing to do but to use them in paying Government expenses when needed.

Mr. ALLEN. With the permission of the Senator from Nevada, I wish to call his attention to a rumor which was in circulation in February, 1894, when the first loan was effected, and which attached to every loan which has been made by this Administration. It was charged that of the fifty or sixty million issue of bonds only about thirteen millions of the sum were received in actual gold—that is, in actual gold money or bullion—or gold certificates. The same charge has been made with reference to subsequent loans, that not to exceed 25 per cent of those loans have been received in gold, or gold certificates.

Mr. STEWART. I do not know how that may be, but I know that the people have to pay gold to get the bonds, and I know they have not the gold and can not get the bonds, and that has been known from the beginning. But to the point.

There is now $178,000,000 cash balance in the Treasury, nearly $150,000,000 of which is legal-tender notes. If we put out another $100,000,000, the syndicate can buy up all those notes and make more contraction. It is undoubtedly the object to continue to buy them up and pile them in the Treasury for the purpose of depriving the people of what little money is in circulation. The President says he does not need any more revenue, but he needs this money to sustain the honor of the Government. He has got to deal with this Rothschild syndicate, which is disparaging our credit and is speculating off the Government, getting bonds 10 or 15 per cent less than their actual value, piling up debt on us, and we must do this to sustain the honor of the Government! How long will this Government have honor or credit if these outrageous speculations and peculations are allowed to proceed? We can not imitate the press, which says it is patriotism for Rothschild to disparage our credit and buy bonds for less than their value. We should not be intimidated by the Executive power, which offers these bonds in such a way that the people can not get them. We should stop these wicked transactions, and stop them now.

The resolution as proposed to be amended by the Senator from North Carolina ought to pass this body to-day. But this is not all. There is an ample surplus in the Treasury. The President says he makes this loan to maintain the gold reserve. I deny that he has any right to maintain the gold reserve, whatever may be said about the coin reserve. I shall not discuss that, but I believe there is no law for that either. As to the gold reserve, however, it is a thing unknown to the law. It is only by the combination of the Executive with gold gamblers that a gold reserve ever has been made in this Republic.

THE STANLEY MATTHEWS RESOLUTION.

A clamor for gold arose in 1878, and Stanley Matthews, one of the brightest lawyers who ever sat in the Senate or who ever adorned the bench, drew a resolution which was passed by more than a two-thirds vote in each House of Congress after mature debate. That disposes of the idea of a gold reserve up to that date.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the date of that?

Mr. STEWART. January, 1878. The resolution is as follows:

Whereas by the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment, in coin or its equivalent, of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver; and

Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semi-annually in such coin; and

Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved July 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and

Whereas at the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" to be a legal tender of payment according to their nominal value for any sums whatever: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds issued by the United States, issued or authorized to be issued under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited, are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.—Congressional Record, volume 7, part 1, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, page 564.

The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Carlisle, voted for this resolution, and the law was then supposed to be settled that there was no distinction between the coins of this country.

Mr. GEORGE. Was that a concurrent resolution, or a Senate resolution?

Mr. STEWART. It was a concurrent resolution. We had in the White House at that time Mr. Hayes, who would have vetoed it, of course. He was there for that purpose, as all his successors have been.

THE AUTHORITY FOR LOOTING THE TREASURY.

The act of 1875 which was recited in this resolution, the resumption act, contains the clause which I am about to read, and this is the only authority in the books by which bonds are sold. There is nothing else to be found. There have been some other laws enacted, but they have all been repealed. There is only this one authority. Now, let us examine this authority for looting the Treasury, to satisfy these benevolent and patriotic citizens on the other side of the Atlantic.

This is the resumption act of 1875. I read the clause wherein the authority to sell bonds is obtained, so far as any authority is supposed to exist:

And on and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem, in coin, the United States legal-tender notes then outstanding on their presentation for redemption at the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States in the city of New York in sums of not less than $50, and to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and provide for the redemption in this act authorized or required he is authorized to use any surplus revenues from time to time in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to issue, sell, and dispose of at not less than par in coin either of the descriptions of bonds of the United States described in the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions, to the extent necessary to carry this act into full effect.

THE FRAUDULENT "PARITY."

The Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to redeem the greenbacks then outstanding. He was given a right under that law to sell bonds for coin to redeem the greenbacks then outstanding—for coin, not for gold coin. But a more recent, a more fallacious, absurd, and insulting pretext has been found than was ever invented before. It was invented at the tail end of Harrison's Administration, and it has been iterated and reiterated constantly. It is to the effect that the act of 1890 required the redemption of everything in gold coin. I have the clauses of that act here, and I propose to call attention to them, because I think the construction placed upon the act is the greatest outrage upon common sense and law that ever emanated from the executive department; and that is the climax of all that can be said upon that subject. This is the act of 1890 for the redemption of the Sherman notes:

That upon demand of the holder of any of the Treasury notes herein provided for the Secretary of the Treasury shall, under such regulations as he may prescribe, redeem such notes in gold or silver coin at his discretion, it being the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio, or such ratio as may be provided by law.

Now, it is said that because it was declared in that act as a policy—that simply because a recital declaring a policy is found in the act—the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay in gold or silver coin is taken away, and that he is bound to pay in gold coin to maintain the parity. This, too, is claimed in face of the fact that both political parties in the campaign of 1892 declared in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money.

Mr. GEORGE. Standard money.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; standard money, both coins. This, too, is claimed in face of the further fact that from Harrison down to the present they have been iterating and reiterating that every dollar should be as good as every other dollar; that they would not disparage one coin in favor of the other. Now they propose to maintain the parity between gold and silver by rejecting silver, by cutting off its market, by not using it, and throwing the whole demand upon gold alone. Everybody knows that the disparity has been created by the demonetization of silver. That is not disputed by any intelligent man. The Royal Commission found that that is what created the disparity. It was done by cutting off the market for silver. It was done by the suspension of the coinage of silver. Here to create a parity, they not only refused to coin silver, but they refused to use it, and what has been the result? Silver has gone down, down under the blows of this Administration and its predecessor in refusing to use it. How logical, how honest the pretext! That is the way they created the disparity, under the pretense of creating a parity. That is the pretense of this Administration, and never was excuse more false than this. They presume that the American people are idiots, and do not know that cutting off the demand for one article and placing all of the demand on the other will increase the disparity. That is what they intended to do.

THE EXECUTIVE TRAMPLES ON THE LAW.

But that is not all. Every lawyer knows that the entire context of a law must be taken into consideration in interpreting it, and the last clause always has more weight than the first as the final conclusion of the lawmaking power. Now, what follows your parity provision? Here is a positive mandate; yet the Executive tramples upon it as chaff. Section 3, following the section which contains the parity clause, provides—

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall each month coin 2,000,000 ounces of the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act into standard silver dollars until the 1st day of July, 1891, and after that time he shall coin of the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act as much as may be necessary to provide for the redemption of the Treasury notes herein provided for.

Mr. GEORGE. He says it is not necessary.

Mr. STEWART. Ah, it is not necessary if you use only gold, but he has no means of getting gold. When he has silver there in the Treasury it is his duty to coin it. But he says that he can not get redemption money without involving this country in untold obligations—without ruining the country, without letting in syndicates, Morgan, Stetson, and the Rothschilds. He must do it to save the honor of the country, when the statute had pointed out a plain way. The wayfaring man, though a fool, could not err on that statute if he had an honest purpose. In order to relieve him from his pretended embarrassment the last Congress passed a bill through both Houses requiring the coinage of the bullion in the Treasury, the whole of it, and allowing him to use the seigniorage, $50,000,000, immediately. He vetoed the bill. Why? Because it was for silver, and to use silver and give it any value whatever would destroy the parity. He could not do it because it would destroy the parity, and he vetoed that bill, refusing to carry out the wishes of the legislative department as expressed in it, and preferring to manufacture a law of his own.

I have given the Matthews resolution, which recited the laws up to that date. There is nothing else to justify the course pursued by the Administration except the act of 1890, and that provides a mode of redemption, giving a discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury. It was supposed the Secretary would exercise that discretion in an honorable way. In the debate here the idea that the enactment would not be carried out was repudiated. We had that point discussed in the debate here. It was said to be a reflection upon the Executive to suggest that he would not coin and pay out the silver.

A SYNDICATE RUNS THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. President, with $178,000,000 of money in the Treasury, with authority to coin silver bullion, with an abundance of it in the Treasury, but with not only the authority but the duty of the Executive to coin it to provide for the redemption of these notes, with the means of getting any amount of silver to coin, we are in a crisis. What has produced the crisis? Have twenty-five years of peace and abundant harvest made times harder than they had been since the landing at Jamestown? Is that the cause? If not, what? Congress meets and suggests no remedy. The banks and the syndicate run the Government, and the people suffer. Two bills are sent to us from the other House. What are they? We stayed here during the holiday recess to consider these matters. What came here? First a bond bill, which nobody wanted, which they knew would not become a law, to which the Rothschilds were as much opposed as anybody; but to show simply that a certain political party was in favor of low-rate bonds.

Has a resolution been put through in either branch like the one now pending, declaring it the sense of Congress or of either branch of Congress that these proceedings should not go on? No; there is no remedy proposed. The bond bill came here. It is reported back from the Senate Committee on Finance with a free-coinage amendment. Upon that bill every free-coinage man can record his vote, and thus become a free-coinage man, I suppose. Everybody knows it is harmless to vote for the bill; it will go to the other House and die there; it will do no harm. Even the Rothschilds would be willing to have us vote for that measure for the purpose of quieting apprehension. It is a dress-parade measure, and all on dress parade will vote for it. I will vote for it on dress parade or on any other occasion. That is what will be done.

Then comes another bill, a tariff bill for the purpose of reviving the tariff agitation. What is the use of agitating the tariff when all the silver countries already have a tariff against us of 100 per cent in the difference of exchange? What is the use of talking about a tariff on manufactures that will offset the tariff that the Asiatics hold against us in the difference of exchange? Of course, silver is their money, and it will buy as much in their country as it ever did. They produce a yard of cloth worth in their country 20 cents. They can sell it for gold at 10 cents and get their price. Young manufactories are springing up in the Orient, and the manufacturers of this country are going to feel it severely.

ASIA IS UNDOING US.

Already the French and English consuls have reported to their Governments that if nothing can be done to equalize exchange the manufacturing of the Western World will be transferred to the Orient. This is the unanimous testimony of learned men who have investigated this subject. Our consuls of course dare not say that much, but they report facts upon which you can predicate your conclusions. The cotton planters have not understood what ailed them. Cotton is coming here from India, and it will soon be coming from China. China is able to produce good cotton. China and Japan can manufacture cotton enough to supply the world. Cotton has been developed in India, so that instead of being out of the market India is shipping now about $60,000,000 worth of raw cotton. Cotton industries are growing up all over the world. The South thought they had a monopoly of cotton; that is not true at all. The Asiatics can produce cotton at prices that will starve the people of this country to death. We have come in competition with the Asiatics in the production of cotton and the price has gone down.

So it is with wheat. A bushel of wheat is produced in India for two rupees, a dollar in their money. It is sold in Liverpool for an ounce of silver, which has been the price of wheat for a hundred years there. That ounce of silver taken back to that country is worth over $1.30, and it has the effect of $1.30 in their products. When an American sells a bushel of wheat in Liverpool for an ounce of silver he takes it back to this country and gets 67 cents.

LOOK AT RUSSIA.

Look at Russia and see what a spectacle she presents. If they have a despotic government, the people who govern Russia love Russia. That is evinced more in the way they have treated this question than any other. They have their silver ruble behind. They do not coin any silver, but they put out paper in sufficient quantities to keep it on a par with the silver ruble, and that is their circulation. The gold they get they hoard or loan. They will let us have some gold if we want it. They keep it for military purposes. There is a large quantity of it deposited in the banks of Western Europe, to be drawn out of those countries if war is threatened. They hold it as a check. They would let us have some of it, for there seems to have been a proposal of that kind.

How did Russia accumulate this gold? She has five or six hundred million dollars of gold; nobody knows how much. How did she get it? Twenty years ago she had poor credit. Our credit stood high above that of Russia; 15 or 20 per cent above on the same kind of bonds. How is it now? She would come to our relief in a crisis. How does it happen that she can do it? Stable money has kept stability of prices in Russia. When wheat was sold at the rate of an ounce of silver per bushel and the money for it was brought back to Russia it was there worth over $1.30. The ounce of silver is brought to this country, and it is now worth only 67 cents. The practical result has been that Russia has accumulated an enormous reserve, and is strong and powerful because the balance of trade has been with her. She has kept her people at work by giving them abundant circulation. We, on the contrary, have robbed our people of a circulating medium, and on falling prices we could not compete with her. Twenty years ago we had almost a monopoly of all Europe for our wheat and our cotton, but when we had these disadvantages forced upon us by the gold standard and falling prices Russia came forward and enjoyed the benefit that is now being enjoyed by all Asia.

THE TARIFF CRY A TRICK.

Do Senators talk about rescuing our country with a tariff? You must have a specific duty which will be prohibitory, if you intend that anything shall be manufactured in this country when manufactories are fully established in the Orient. The farmers, planters, and woolgrowers felt it first. Now, wool has gone down constantly under all tariffs. This was shown by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] the other day. He gave us a table showing that wool has been continually declining. Why is that the case? Our competitors are in Mexico, South America, China, and India. Our competitors produce wool on a silver basis. For instance, a pound of wool that costs in Mexico and China 20 cents in their money can be sold here for 10 cents in our money.

While they were destroying the farming interests of this country, when the South and West were groaning under the heavy strokes of Asiatic competition, the manufacturers of the East seemed satisfied. It gave them cheap supplies and they did not complain. Their withers were unwrung. It took some time to inaugurate a manufacturing system. It is much easier to start with farm products. They could start with farm products at once, and it took no time for preparation. But time is making all things even. I received a letter a few days ago from a gentleman in Philadelphia which I ought to have brought with me. It inclosed a toothbrush that his neighbor was selling. It was made in Japan, and his neighbor was selling it for 5 cents. It was a pretty good toothbrush. He stated that the bristles in it were worth 3½ cents in this country. He ascertained from his neighbor that the price of those toothbrushes was 2 cents apiece in Japan. You can not compete with that at all. So it is with a great many articles. They have just started on this line of manufacturing.

Japan has opened the ports of China by the recent treaty. The Japanese and the Chinese are now united, and Europe is having a boom in supplying them with manufacturing machinery. The native population have only to see a thing done and they can do it.

Here you are talking about a paltry tariff, an emergency tariff measure, that is soon coming up here. Who ever heard of an emergency tariff—a tariff proposed to last for two years only? What good will that do anybody? We have heard much talk about disturbing business, and here you propose to keep business disturbed all the time. What is the object, what is the plain, palpable object, of the whole of this tariff bill? It is not expected if it passes this body that it will become a law. The President says we do not need the revenue, and he is not going to sign any tariff bills, but there will be a tariff bill pending. For what purpose? To attract the attention of the people from their real distress. That is what it is.

Of course the Democrats will fight a tariff bill, and if it should pass and become a law it is only for two years, and it is open for contest in the next Presidential election. It is to bring the tariff to the front, as we have had the tariff to the front for a hundred years. I know it is a great rallying cry. The great mass of the people of the South are free traders; those of the North are protectionists, and you can array the North and West against the East and have a tremendous conflict upon which politicians will ride into office. The tariff plan is the club which is to beat down the financial question. It has been the cuttlefish which has darkened the waters and prevented the country from seeing what the real difficulty was. You have had tariff legislation. It made times no better. We had the McKinley Act, and times were worse. You have your Wilson Act, and they still grow worse, and you may have your Dingley Act, and they will be worse still.

THE ONLY REMEDY.

Times will continue to grow worse, and there can be no protection that will do this country any good until silver is recognized as a standard money of the country and has free access to the mints on the same terms and conditions which apply to gold. There is no other remedy. Shall we live in a crisis in which syndicates are going to rob us and destroy the credit of this country eternally? I say, no. What would be thought of a merchant doing business who made contracts to deliver what his rival has? Do you not think he would break pretty soon if he confined himself to selling what his rival neighbor had and what he could not get anywhere else? That is just what the United States is doing. We are contracting to deliver gold which a British syndicate has pooled, and if we obtain and deliver it we have to obtain it on their terms, and their terms mean lower prices, harder times, less industries, more dependence, more degradation. That is what they mean.

I never saw a class of men who could endure the miseries of mankind with equanimity equal to that of the gold ring. They care not what happens to others so that it does not happen to them. We are at the tender mercies of the Rothschild syndicate, which committed the robbery before and now has this robbery planned, ready to carry it out. It consented, perhaps, to this sham offer, and then came thundering across the ocean to the disparagement of the credit of this great Republic. They sneer at us now. We did not need their help or support in the struggle of the rebellion. Neither side had it. No; not then; but now we have property for them to take; we have services which they desire to command. We are making them rich, and they have a tender regard for us—the same regard that the hawk has for the chicken, and no other.

OUR DEBTS, MONEY, AND PRICES.

Look at the condition of the civilized world. The debts of the civilized world, according to the estimates of the best statisticians, exceed the assessed value of the property of the world for taxation. That is certainly true of the United States. In the United States it is estimated that the debts, public and private, aggregate between twenty-five and thirty billion dollars, and the assessed value of the taxable property a little over $20,000,000,000. Is it a very small thing to double that debt by cutting the volume of money in two? The value of money is like the value of everything else. It depends upon the law of supply and demand. The property for sale on the one side, and all the money in circulation on the other hand, are reciprocally the supply and demand of each other, and all political economists agree that if you diminish the volume of money general prices must fall; if you increase the volume of money general prices must rise. We have been decreasing the volume of money. We have cut off the metallic supply more than one-half by adopting the gold standard, and still we have not reached the bottom; still we go on with falling prices.

What has been the result? Falling prices the last five years have produced a greater loss than the amount expended by both sides in the civil war. The whole wealth of the country is reproduced in three or four years by its labor. But all the labor has been paralyzed, and millions of men have been out of employment for the last five years. The daily loss now is greater than the expenses of the war in the most flagrant times.

Is there no way to avoid it? Ah, but they say you can not create values. Governments can create money, however. From Aristotle down to the present time every writer whose opinion is worth anything, every sensible man who has expressed an honest opinion, has agreed with Aristotle that money is the creature of law. Suppose that brown paper of a particular kind were the only material upon which money could be stamped. Would not that be the best money in this country? All that is necessary to make good money is to clothe any material with the exclusive monopoly of paying debts and taxes. That makes money. Anything clothed with the exclusive monopoly of paying debts and taxes is money. Then the value of each dollar will depend upon the number of units. If all the gold and all the silver were banished and we made our own money, properly limiting quantity, we would be the richest nation on earth, if we would make enough to keep up the stability of prices. Prices depend upon quantity. You want enough money, so that prices will not fall, and statisticians can tell you what the general prices are, whether they are rising or falling. It is as sure a test as the gauge that determines the amount of steam in a steam boiler.

Our dear President talks about the money of the world. There never was any such money. He ought to know it. Of course he does not know it or he never would tell us that he wants the world to know that we will pay our debts in the money of the world. The world has no money. Every kind of money is national, not international. It is made money by law, and whatever the law makes money is money.

HOW NATIONS RISE AND FALL.

Here is the greatest nation in the world, with more resources than any other, with 70,000,000 people, and it can make the best money, for nobody will believe that the United States will break up. The difficulty with the money of the South was that the people were afraid the Confederacy was going to break up. The quality of money depends upon the strength and the stability of the Government. Rome for two hundred years had fiat money, and she had no other money. The Romans had simply a metal piece with the value fixed by the Government, and the quantity was controlled by law, and Rome grew from nothing to the greatest republic the world has ever seen. She used nothing else in her better days. It was not until she made conquests and robbed other nations of gold and silver that she used the precious metals. Gold and silver then came into her treasury until she got nearly two thousand millions of gold and silver in circulation, according to Jacob and Gibbon. Eighteen hundred millions is about the estimate as the best they can get from the Roman writers.

Then the mines failed; they were worked out. The Romans had falling prices. The money lenders demanded more and more collateral until they got all the property of the people, and the grand old Romans, who bore the eagle from the tropics to the frozen zone, became feudal slaves and were sold with the land. Take our money away from us and we will share the same fate. It is not a question of manhood or bravery. Every man will make sacrifices to get bread for his children, and the terms grow harder and harder on each generation, until the people become accustomed to slavery.

Thus are civilizations blotted out. The dark ages came. There was only one star that appeared during the fourteen hundred years of gloom, and that was the star of Venice. There the Romans had to flee, on account of the ferocity of the savages. They took their ships and their gold and their silver and settled upon the marshy islands on the northeast of Italy. They were without money to accomplish any purpose. They formed a republic, and they took what money they had and put it in a government trust. They allowed interest at 4 per cent upon it for a time, and they made it legal tender for all debts, public and private. They exempted it from mortgage or execution, so that it could be transferred only on the books of the government. They took in gold and silver and sold them. They did not keep any of them. This went on for six hundred years, until all the world believed that it was the best money in the world; and it was so long as the Republic of Venice lasted. But Napoleon with a rude hand overran Venice and captured the bank, expecting to get great treasures; and all he got was the books. That was fiat money, with the power of Venice behind it; and so long as that government lasted the money was good.

Take the experience of Great Britain. When Napoleon was overriding the world and all was gloom, she declared the paper of the Bank of England legal tender and suspended specie payments for twenty-two years. During that time her commerce extended all over the world, and she was able to loan money on the Continent, to conquer Napoleon, and to take the first place among the nations of the world. She did it by the fiat power of the Government. But when that was done there was a vast sum owing by England and the English people. Then the Rothschild syndicate was formed, and it secured the passage of a law that all those obligations should be paid in gold alone. The misery that was entailed upon the people blotted from the face of the earth the middle class that had given the constitution to England. The yeomanry was no more. The aristocracy that were in the deal were saved. All the rest were lost. A moneyed aristocracy was created as heartless as sin, as grasping as the devil, and it has been preying upon mankind ever since. That aristocracy has reached out its octopus tentacles and grasped the United States. Great Britain can not meet us in arms. We have had two wars with her, and each was a blessing to mankind.

An English syndicate now dictates terms to us, and it is said that the credit of America must be protected by a set of English gold gamblers. Have we come to that? Is there no other relief? If our civilization is to be destroyed thus, let it be known. Is it not lamentable that Congress should meet and see the country languishing, see it suffer more than at any time during the war, while we are offering inconsequential bills, playing for position, trying to fool the people again, trying to make an issue of the tariff without grappling with the tariff question, trying to make an issue of money without grappling with the money question, discussing how we can get the money from Europe. If we continue to agree to pay the money of Europe, which we have done, Europe will continue to make us slaves.

LET US HAVE FINANCIAL INDEPENDENCE.

Let us have an independent policy as Venice did. Let us have an independent policy as England did during her struggle. Let us have an independent policy for the United States. When the war broke out the legal tenders, the Treasury notes, which were receivable for all dues, were at par, and remained at par all during the war. But when the fatal stab was made at the greenbacks, then the gold board was established. That gold board is working upon us now. It was more dangerous than the foe in the field. The same gold board which found a foothold by destroying the greenback in 1862, denying to it the power to pay customs dues and interest upon Government obligations, cost thousands of millions. Poor old Thaddeus Stevens, when he was beaten on the conference committee, according to Judge Kelley, came from the room shedding tears. He said it would cost the Government a thousand million dollars. But he had to do that or let the Government starve. He had to submit, and we have constantly been submitting to such outrages.

We have had large gold deals before. We remember very well Black Friday, when Gould and one or two others borrowed four or five million dollars in legal tenders and locked them up for the purpose of breaking stocks. That was a small operation compared with the syndicate which is said to have control now of over $400,000,000 of gold. That includes all the gold in this country, and they must have secured some gold from Europe in order to make that sum. It is said the syndicate has control of that sum, and yet the President of the United States tells the people to get gold from Rothschild and they can have bonds. Oh, that will not do! We must have a government of the people and for the people. Compare our financial operations with those of France and the business conditions here and there, France a limited country, with no resources to be compared with ours, yet France could get rich by borrowing from her own people a thousand millions and we are getting poorer and poorer every day. Look at our condition. How are we to get gold? Must we always borrow? According to the lowest estimate our annual gold obligations to Europe certainly equal $350,000,000. That is the lowest estimate which has been made.

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. STEWART. Let me get through with this sentence.

Mr. BUTLER. Say coin obligations instead of gold obligations?

Mr. STEWART. The creditors make them gold obligations.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; but that is not correct.

Mr. STEWART. They are gold obligations because we will not pay in anything else. Of course that is not the law; I understand that. I thank the Senator. But I am repeating other people's lies; I do not lie myself.

That is the way they put it out—$350,000,000 annually. That was in 1894. In that year our exports exceeded our imports by about $100,000,000, so that we got in debt in that year only about $250,000,000. But in 1895 the balance of trade has been against us, and we have increased our debt to Europe to the extent of about $500,000,000 in the last twelve months.

Now, the only way to get gold besides what little we produce, which is a mere bagatelle, is to sell our products, cotton and wheat mostly, in the foreign markets in competition with Russia and Asia. We can not sell enough to pay them for what we have to buy. Consequently we must give our notes, and let them accumulate. We have a foreign debt accumulating at the rate of from four to five hundred million dollars a year, and no way to pay it. Yet we are told that it is necessary to go on and increase the debt, and that we must borrow gold, when there is no obligation on the statute books for any such purpose and the law allows us to use our own money. I am sorry it does not, just now, allow us to coin our own money; but we are allowed by law to use it. But the Executive will not obey the law and use it. Here is the Treasury with $1,100,000,000 of paper and silver money—a thousand millions anyhow—and $61,000,000 of gold, on which it all rests, because the Executive informs us that the silver, and the silver certificates, and the greenbacks, and the bank notes, all depend upon gold for redemption. Sixty-one millions behind it, with no way to get gold but to borrow, and you have to borrow every year. You can not run the Government in that way. The policy you allow to stand here means an eternal increase of the national debt and a decrease of the power of the people to pay it. Increasing the debt and impoverishing the people is the policy of the present Administration and was the policy of the preceding Administration.

Here we are talking about having a tariff discussion to attract the attention of the people. If we are going to protect the people of the United States and make them again prosperous, we will give them money and stop the crisis. We must equalize exchange, and then we can discuss the collateral matter of the tariff. There is no tariff that will now do us any good; and I wish to say to my Eastern manufacturing friends that when they ask to be protected from Asiatic competition, from cooly labor, in their manufacturing establishments, they ought to remember that the West and the South have been already destroyed by that competition, and when they ask us to increase tariff taxation and to make them an exception, they ought to remember our situation, and be willing to place us, who produce wheat, cotton, and wool, at least on an equality with the Asiatics and other silver-standard countries producing the same articles. We are at a disadvantage of 100 per cent; our civilization will be destroyed if this inequality continues. Besides, what good would a tariff do you if you had it high enough to shut out Asiatic products, if the people of the South and West had no money to buy your manufactured articles? We must be one country.

I am in favor of protecting the American people and all of the American people. I am in favor of an independent financial policy for the United States. I am in favor of this great Republic taking the stand to which it is entitled as the greatest and most intelligent people on earth, with resources to which there is no parallel. I am in favor of cutting loose from all entangling alliances with Europe; I am in favor of laws which will protect the farmer, the mechanic, and the manufacturer, and all alike. I am in favor of laws which will give to the laboring people of this country a chance to live. I am opposed to laws that involve this country in debt through syndicate transactions. I am opposed to eulogizing as patriots men who take the country by the throat and extort money from it in times of distress—men who have produced the distress by their infernal policy. I am opposed to eulogizing the Rothschilds when they have robbed us once, and when their syndicate here and on the other side of the Atlantic are disparaging our credit.

CONGRESS CAN RELIEVE THE COUNTRY.

Oh, it is shameful for us to sit here idly by and see this country more miserable than it ever was before in its history when there is no reason for it but our shortcomings. This Congress can raise the country out of its depths of despair; it can give hope, prosperity, and good times to all. Every willing hand could find work if Congress would but say the word. We do not want charity; we want a chance to work. That is the spirit of every true American; that is the spirit of this people. They are crying for work and not for charity. Give them money and start the wheels of industry, and they will accumulate wealth beyond a parallel.

Our resources are greater than those of all Europe. Why should we bow our knees to Europe? When we talked about vindicating the Monroe doctrine, how did England reply? She replied by saying, "We will bankrupt you; you can not defend yourselves." "The idea of the American people asserting American rights" was treated with contempt by our tormentors. If we can get no money except what we get from England, England can do what she pleases with us.

I tell you the people have about come to the conclusion that anything would be a relief from this intolerable peace. War, with all its horrors, would not decimate the population as fast as the English gold standard. The population to-day would be at least ten millions more than it is if all the people had work; but starvation and want are more decimating, and destroy population faster than the plague or any other calamity. Starvation and want are the destruction of population. That has been the history of every country. They are more potent than artillery for the destruction of human life. Not 10 per cent as many can be killed by England's guns and ships as she is constantly killing by her infernal gold policy, which brings want to every household.

Let us have our own policy, and when we say the word that will be the end of it. We are not in such a desperate condition as some imagine. Suppose we were threatened by a foreign foe, could we not raise money without asking the aid of this foe, which is gnawing at the vitals of the Republic and which is worse than any foreign foe? Let us whip this foe; let us whip the monster of contraction, and expand the currency and extend the blessings of an ample circulating medium to all the people of this broad land; let all come and enjoy it; but do not let Congress fritter away its power and insult the people by maneuvering for party position. Let party go.

DOWN WITH PARTY; SAVE THE COUNTRY.

What has been done in the name of party? In the name of party there has been more misery brought upon the country in the last twenty years than all it had seen in its previous history. The members of each party think they must stay with their party and stay with the gold power, because in that way they get money for elections. Let Wall street keep her money; let the Democracy declare for themselves. Freemen do not want money to vote. They can vote without it. The Republican party try to please Wall street so as to receive their share of contributions. If Manhattan Island could be isolated during the elections and all communication cut off with it, right might prevail, but so long as both parties regard party machinery as essential in order to get money for elections they have to do the bidding of the Rothschilds for that purpose.

I have heard a man say: "I am for silver, but I can not give up the principles of the Democratic party." In God's name what principles have the Democratic party left when they give up free coinage, when they give up the money of the Constitution? You say you are opposed to consolidation; you are for State rights. What State rights have you left when the Executive is the sole power and wields the patronage and runs the whole Government? That is State rights! I was a Democrat for many years, but during the war I became a Republican, because I was in favor of the Union. When I found the Republican party belonged to an alien organization, I quit that party. I am not dependent upon party. I am opposed to any party that is opposed to the country.

If any Democrat can get up here and state what great principle of the Democratic party is left after he has surrendered State rights, surrendered the money of the Constitution, and consolidated the Government, I should like to hear him. I should also like to know what the Republicans have. They started out as the friends of the people with the sublimest creed that man ever uttered. They were for the freedom and equality of man. That appealed to the sentiment of the whole world, and that party had the sympathies of the world against the South on account of that magnificent, that sublime sentiment that inspired the human heart. The result of their grand career was the liberation of 4,000,000 slaves and the preservation of the Union, a record of which they are justly proud. What have they done since? They have turned the Government of this country over to the hands of an alien gold syndicate, and they look with complacency upon the sufferings of the people. No sentiment of humanity can be addressed to them. They are willing that all else shall be sacrificed, provided the gold king shall be forever worshiped. That is the Republican party.

I believe individually the Republicans and Democrats alike in the Senate would be glad to see the country prosper and would do all they could to promote it if they were not trammeled by party. With a proper financial policy there is no doubt that we should be relieved and have the greatest country in the world; we should be the clearing house of the world; and so far from getting into controversy with other nations the word of the great American Republic would settle disputes everywhere. We have the resources, the men, the intelligence. All we want is patriotism to inspire us with American sentiments and raise the flag of America financially, politically, and commercially. Let us do this and prosperity will come, and come to stay.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. I inquire what becomes of the resolution? Can it not be, by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee on Finance? There is no use of letting it remain on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

SILVER COINAGE AND COIN REDEMPTION.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 2904, being Order of Business No. 15.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me to call up a small bill, which it will not take two minutes to pass?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator will allow the vote to be taken on taking up the bill I have indicated, I shall then yield to whatever motion he wishes to make.

Several SENATORS. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to take up the bill referred to by him, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 2904) to maintain and protect the coin redemption fund and to authorize the issue of certificates of indebtedness to meet temporary deficiencies of revenue.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I now yield to the Senator from Vermont.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ST. ALBANS, VT.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 697) for the reconstruction of the United States custom-house and post-office building at St. Albans, Vt., destroyed by fire May 19, 1895.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SILVER COINAGE AND COIN REDEMPTION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill (H. R. 2904) to maintain and protect the coin redemption fund and to authorize the issue of certificates of indebtedness to meet temporary deficiencies of revenue is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Arkansas does not desire to speak upon the bill this afternoon, I suggest that he yield to a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. At this late hour I believe I prefer not to go on, but of course the bill will be taken up to-morrow at 2 o'clock as the regular order, at which time I shall ask the attention of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand the bill will be the unfinished business.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It will be.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that we have an agreement that the bill referred to by him be taken up to-morrow at the expiration of the morning business.

Mr. WHITE. I shall object to that, as I have given notice of my intention to submit some remarks on another matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The morning hour has been taken up for several days past with morning business, and probably the morning business will not be completed to-morrow before 2 o'clock; but if it is disposed of before that time, we can then act upon the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 10, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

Mr. BRUMM. In the Philadelphia Press of December 29, in a statement and analysis of the vote here on what is commonly known as the bond bill, I find the following:

Mr. BRUMM of Pennsylvania was not present and is classed as a dodger.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that on the Thursday night preceding the vote on that bill I received a telegram stating that my son, who was lying ill in the Presbyterian Hospital at Philadelphia, had had a relapse, that it was serious, and that I ought to come on immediately. I had but a quarter of an hour to make the train. I got my grip and did make the train at 10 o'clock that night, but, before leaving, I requested my friend from West Virginia, Mr. DOVENER, to have me paired, and I am informed that he did so.

I am not surprised at all at the correspondent thinking that I should be classed as a "dodger" upon this theory. He knows very well that I know that in a great, rich country like ours, united and at peace, there is no necessity for creating a bonded or any other form of interest-bearing debt. Upon that theory the correspondent doubtless supposed that I desired to oppose the bill, and that, not wishing to go on record as voting against my party, I had abstained from voting, and was therefore to be classed as a "dodger." But in taking that view of the matter the correspondent seems to have forgotten that it is "a condition and not a theory that confronts us," and he probably did not know that under the condition which does confront us I would most cheerfully have voted in favor of that bill, and would be glad to have been recorded as so voting. [Applause.]

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLUE, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. Mr. MCMILLIN. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Points of order are reserved.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the attention of my colleague of the committee [Mr. BLUE] for a moment. I understand the Committee on Rules will make their report in the morning; and if it meets the views of my colleague, who has just reported the pension appropriation bill, I suggest he give notice that as soon as the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules is concluded he will call up this bill for consideration.

Mr. BLUE. That is what I was about to do. I was about to suggest that this bill would probably be taken up to-morrow or next day.

Mr. HENDERSON. In view of that statement, I give notice that we expect to take up the report of the Committee on Rules in the morning.

Mr. BLANCHARD presented a petition of the Board of Trade, Limited, of New Orleans, La., praying for a reduction of letter postage; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. KYLE. I present a series of resolutions prepared by a delegation of 500 settlers upon the Sisseton and Wahpeton reservations, in South Dakota, praying to be relieved from the payment of $2.50 per acre, required by the Government from all homestead settlers who settled upon this land, believing it to be good agricultural land; but it is in the drought-stricken portion of the State of South Dakota, and the land is really not fit for anything except pastoral purposes. The petitioners therefore wish that these resolutions may be taken in hand by the Committee on Public Lands, and that a bill be considered at an early date for their relief. When that order of business is reached I shall introduce the bill. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE.

Coke, 20 per cent ad valorem.

All laws and clauses of laws inconsistent with this amendment are hereby repealed.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, the amendment I have proposed pertains essentially to the material welfare of my State and section. I do not offer it for the purpose of crippling the revenue bill which is now under consideration by the Finance Committee, but it is submitted as a basis of some remarks and with a view to its adoption as an amendment to the revenue bill when reported. My chief object in urging the adoption of the amendment is to secure to the Southern section of the country its proportionate and equitable share in the administration of our beneficent Republican protective tariff system. However, I do not wish to be understood as giving my sanction to the revenue policy embraced in the bill, as now constituted. Its function is to meet an emergency, produced by the operation of a makeshift Democratic tariff law, which the President denounced as an "act of party perfidy and dishonor." It is practically "war legislation," and is justified only by the grave crisis that confronts the country as the result of a Democratic Administration. Dire as the alternative may seem, I am not fully persuaded that we should resort to temporary expedients, but that we should enact legislation along distinctively Republican lines, and let the responsibility of Executive disapproval rest where it belongs.

It can not be successfully denied that our present financial trouble grows out of the fact that under the present Democratic tariff law it is impossible to raise a sufficient amount of money to pay the ordinary expenses of the Government. It is due to this calamitous condition of affairs, caused by unwise Democratic legislation, that the Republican party, in a spirit of patriotism, has decided to adopt this measure as a temporary expedient only; for no tariff law can bear the badge of genuine Republicanism which does not provide ample protection for every home industry. It is claimed by our Democratic friends that the gold reserve fund can not be maintained and that it is being absorbed by the redemption of Treasury notes and silver certificates. They insist that with the retirement of these notes they would have no trouble in keeping a sufficient amount of gold in the Treasury to guarantee the obligations of the Government. To this proposition the Republican party will never consent, for Republican management in the past has floated these notes among the people as the most convenient currency, without the slightest impairment of our national credit. When we come into power (as we certainly will at the next election), we shall maintain these notes as a part of our circulating medium. No sane business man questions or doubts it. Republicanism is synonymous with national integrity and sound finance.

The reports show that there is not now a sufficient amount of money in circulation to meet the business demands of the people. When we are confronted with such a state of affairs it is folly to expect the Republican party to enact legislation which will further contract the circulating medium. I call the attention of Democratic Senators to the fact that in 1893 we were assured by them that the only menace to our financial and industrial prosperity was the Sherman silver law, and that its repeal would insure speedy and permanent relief. The law was repealed, and times have been growing worse and worse ever since. Disasters have accumulated, and we see nothing ahead but a bankrupt Treasury and general impoverishment. They then called upon us to repeal a law which had for its object the increase of our circulating medium to the amount of about forty-eight millions annually. They now ask us to go a step further and withdraw from the channels of business the sum of $346,000,000. That means the complete and final triumph of the money power and the enslavement of the people. It means "the despotism of wealth," so eloquently depicted by the distinguished Senator from Missouri a few days ago. As an excuse for this outrageous proposition more gold is demanded, with which, as alleged, to maintain the credit of the Government. That we should keep our gold reserve fund sacred and unimpaired no one will dispute, but I remind Democratic Senators that there is but one certain way to keep gold in this country without a further issuance of bonds and a consequent increase of our public debt.

We can do it by reenacting the McKinley law, which will transfer the balance of trade to our credit. It is easy to understand the fact that a law which increases importations from a gold-standard country in excess of its exports makes it only a question of time when the gold supply will be exhausted. Then the reenactment of McKinley duties, the adoption of a law forbidding, under any circumstances, the private sale of bonds, an imperative inhibition to issue bonds without the consent of Congress, the free coinage of silver, the redemption of outstanding silver certificates and Treasury notes with the silver now hoarded in the Treasury, the return of the Republican party to full power next November, and the country will realize a wholesome, speedy, and permanent reaction. The "irrepressible conflict" so woefully depicted by the Senator from Missouri will have ended.

The truth is, this country is suffering from an overdose of free-trade, bond-issuing, debt-contracting, disintegrating, distracting Democracy. As an evidence of this fact I desire to call attention to the following editorial, which appeared in the London Standard of the 27th of last December:

When the barriers of McKinleyism were partially demolished goods rushed in from abroad to fill up the empty spaces in the home markets of the Republic. Our woolen manufacturers in particular benefited by this change, as the trade and navigation returns of the United Kingdom very clearly exhibit. For the eleven months of 1895 for which we have the figures, the United States have taken nearly six millions sterling worth of woolen and worsted tissues from us, as compared with less than a million and a half's worth last year, and not much more than two and a quarter millions' worth the year before. A gap produced by the long suspense of the tariff question had to be filled up, and the enlarged market opened by the reduced tariff further increased the buying. To a less extent the same phenomena were discernible elsewhere, and the broad general result was that at the very time when the States were finding the markets for their own productions restricted or unprofitable abroad, they saw foreign goods pouring in upon them in an augmenting volume. They therefore had more to pay and less to receive, and as they also owed a great deal of money abroad their foreign exchange market became permanently adverse. Shipments of gold to Europe were soon the order of the day, to such an extent that the Government of Mr. Cleveland has had to intervene three times within two years by selling interest-bearing bonds in order to replenish the stock of gold in the public Treasury.

Under the McKinley law there was sufficient revenue to meet every public demand, and during its existence about $48,000,000 were added annually to the circulating medium. Under Republican financial management silver certificates and Treasury notes were kept in circulation among the common people of this country in order to meet the demands occasioned by the establishment of new industries, and labor and capital everywhere found profitable investment and employment.

In this connection we have a striking illustration of the fact that the one certain way to keep money in circulation among the people is by legislation that offers inducement to investors in manufacturing enterprises, which necessarily involves the expenditure and distribution of money in purchasing the raw material of the people and farm products at living prices, and giving employment to labor at remunerative wages. Now, as to the application of this theory to North Carolina and other Southern States. Had our Democratic friends of the South observed their pledges to the Southern people since the war, I would not be compelled to stand here to-day and demand in their behalf that protection be extended to the articles covered by my amendment. Democratic recreancy does not justify Republican remissness, and I shall insist, by way of perfecting the House bill, that the products of the farm and the raw material of the Southern people shall be fully protected in the impending revenue legislation. The Democratic party has maintained its supremacy in the South since the war by election frauds and false pretense. In every campaign Democratic leaders have promised the people that once the party succeeded in getting in power they would remove from the statute books of this country every vestige of legislation which afforded protection to the manufacturers of the New England States. By such appeals to the prejudices and passions of the people, supplemented by "Democratic election methods," they had no trouble in keeping the South solid until the enactment of the Wilson bill. Now, what has happened under the Wilson bill? How fares the New England manufacturer by comparison with the farmer and producer of raw material in other sections?

The New York Herald, an ultra free-trade journal, in a recent issue, among other things, says:

All who scan the returns of the National Bureau of Statistics can not fail to make the exceedingly pleasing discovery that beyond all doubt the manufacturing industries of the United States generally entered in 1895 upon an era of unprecedented promise.

I have not had the opportunity, Mr. President, to verify the Herald's statement, but I admit for argument's sake that it is approximately correct. And this is "tariff reform" from the Southern Democratic standpoint. Unexampled prosperity to the manufacturer, and bankruptcy to the farmer and the producer of raw material. Who is responsible?

Mr. GALLINGER. If it will not disturb the Senator, I would like to make a suggestion.

Mr. PRITCHARD. It will not interrupt me.

Mr. GALLINGER. The New York Herald is a newspaper which sees prosperity not only in low tariff, but in absolute free trade. It does not speak for the Republican party or the people of New England. It never represents fairly the condition of manufacturing enterprises in the Northern States.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President——

Mr. PEFFER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PRITCHARD. In one moment. In reply to what the Senator from New Hampshire has said, I understand the case as he does; but I am giving the statements of the other side for argument's sake, to show the manner in which the Southern people have been treated by the very men who have assured the Southern people that they were their friends and only wanted an opportunity to show their friendship. My desire is to show that when they got an opportunity, they turned their backs upon the Southern people and joined hands with the very men they had theretofore been denouncing. That is the object I had in making the statement.

Mr. PEFFER. I simply want to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether it is not a fact that the Democrats and Republicans of New England are very fast coming together upon the subject of protection.

Mr. GALLINGER. My reply to that is that the Republican party of New England will be glad to welcome Democrats to their ranks whenever they are ready to advocate and believe in the doctrine of protection to American industries and American labor. I think Democrats are coming to us very rapidly, as was evidenced in New Hampshire in the last election; for, while heretofore we have frequently not had a majority of the votes, we had at that election 12,000 plurality.

Mr. FRYE. But they are not coming as Democrats.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly not.

Mr. FRYE. But coming as Republicans.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, as Republicans.

Mr. HILL. I understood the Senator from North Carolina to complain because, as he alleged, the Democrats had gone out of their way to protect the manufacturers of New England in the Wilson bill. Am I correct?

Mr. PRITCHARD. The Senator is correct in part and in part he is not.

Mr. HILL. I will complete my idea. I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the fact that it was only the other day that the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] who just now interrupted him made the announcement here that under that very Wilson bill the manufacturers in New England were upon the verge of bankruptcy.

Mr. GALLINGER. The manufacturers of woolens.

Mr. HILL. You can not pull the wool over our eyes in that. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRITCHARD. I know of no better way to answer the Senator from New York than to quote from a speech delivered by the Hon. W. H. Bower, of the Eighth Congressional district of North Carolina, when the Wilson bill was under consideration. Before reading his statement I desire to say that Mr. Bower was one of the ablest Democrats in the last Congress. He had this to say in regard to that bill:

Almost every raw material, certainly every important one except leaf tobacco, instead of being taxed 10 per cent ad valorem, is put upon the free list, while the duties on the manufactured articles into which they enter, instead of being limited to 20 per cent, range from 20 to 50 per cent, the average being over 30 per cent.

This is evidence from a Democratic Representative which confirms me in the statement when I say that the Democratic party, after promising the people of the South to stand by them, deliberately abandoned their interests and joined their Democratic brethren of the North in protecting the manufacturers of the New England States.

I want to say further, before proceeding with what I had intended to say, that it is the policy of the Republican party to not only extend ample protection to the manufacturers of the New England States, but it is the policy of the Republican party, as evinced by all the legislation they have enacted in the past, to likewise extend protection to every article in which the Southern people are interested.

The record shows when the Wilson tariff law passed the last Congress, Democratic Representatives and Senators from the South constituted a majority of that body. Though treated by the President as nullius filius, it is an easy matter to establish its paternity. It is the product of Southern Democracy. It is a palpable repudiation of Democratic free-trade theories and a demonstration of Democratic recreancy at the enormous cost of Southern progress and the prosperity of the people who are not engaged in some line of manufacturing. The Wilson bill—conceived, concocted, and consummated by Southern Democratic Congressmen in the interest of the manufacturer—was the "culminating atrocity" of either Democratic ignorance or Democratic malevolence. Whatever the influence, the result has caused alarm and indignation in the South, and unless I am entirely mistaken in all the signs, the Southern people will resent it at the next election. In the last and in many preceding campaigns Southern Democratic leaders, and among them the late senior Senator, Mr. Ransom, from North Carolina, who I regret is not exercising the privilege of the floor to-day to hear what I say, denounced protection to the manufacturers of the country as "robbery," but for some strange and incomprehensible reason we find them all, representing what might be termed "the best thought" of the Democratic party, engaged in a war of extermination against Southern raw material, the great basic element of Southern development and Southern prosperity.

The South believed in Democratic promises to establish a revenue tariff, but the Wilson law has undeceived the people. It is established by Democratic confession that it does not yield enough revenue for the ordinary expenses of the Government by monthly deficits of several million dollars. And unless the official figures of the Bureau of Statistics do not speak the truth, it is abundantly established that the Eastern manufacturer is the chief if not the sole beneficiary of the law of "perfidy and dishonor."

The authors of this destructive legislation "dare not face the farmers with this record." If there is one lingering doubt in the minds of Southern Democratic Senators as to public feeling on this question, the letters on my desk, which I shall ask to have read and incorporated in my remarks, remove it. They come from Virginia and North Carolina, and reflect the sentiment of leading business men without regard to party. A large majority of them are Democrats, and they implore me to insist upon and demand the legislation contemplated in the amendment offered by me.

I ask that the letters may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

BESSEMER CITY, N. C., January 4, 1896.

DEAR SIR: I learn from the press reports that the tariff bill is now in the Senate, and I trust you will make a determined effort to have the duty on iron ore raised to $1 per ton, or at any rate have it restored to 75 cents. It is, as you know, now 40 cents per ton of 2,240 pounds, which is practically free ore. Dr. J. M. Worth and associates have bought the Greensboro Iron Furnace, and I learn will start it up, and the manager told me in person their plan was to get Cuban ores by rail from Wilmington. Owing to the cheap labor with which the Cuban ore is mined and cheap transportation, they can get the Cuban ore at a cheaper rate than we can afford to mine it. I have seen with my own eyes several hundred thousand tons of the Cuban ore in bulk at Sparrows Point. The only remedy is a protective duty on foreign ore, or our mines will remain undeveloped for years to come, and thousands of our laboring men will remain out of employment. The Wilson bill is full of discrimination against the interests of the South. Pig iron, the lowest form of manufactured iron, bears a high rate of duty, as well as steel rails; in fact, a duty which is practically prohibitive. Now, why not protect the poor miner who works in mud and water ten hours a day as well as the laborer in a warm machine shop or furnace yard? All we ask is that just such treatment be meted out to us as is given to the manufacturers.

Sincerely, yours,

J. A. SMITH,
Vice-President of Southern Manganese Company.

Hon. J. C. PRITCHARD,
Washington, D. C.

NEWBERN, N. C., December 26, 1895.

DEAR SIR: We note that Congress intends revising the tariff. We earnestly and respectfully request that you will use your influence in having lumber, both rough and dressed, put back on the dutiable list.

Our State, as you are aware, is largely interested in lumber, and as a very large number of our people get their support from that source, it has been up-hill work ever since it was placed on the free list, and we desire its restoration.

Whatever assistance you give in the matter will be highly appreciated by us, and we feel quite sure that it will be indorsed by the entire State.

Respectfully,

Hackburn & Willitt, merchants; J. R. Parker, jr., merchant; Robt. S. Primrose, M. D.; James A. Bryan; Joel Kinsly, farmer; M. Hahn, ex-sheriff; J. A. Jones, sales stable; O. Marks & Son, wholesale dry goods; J. J. Woguder, real estate; Charles Hunter; T. A. Green, president City Bank; Ferdinand Ulrich, merchant; Thomas Daniels; Watson & Daniels; Enoch Wadsworth, farmer; S. E. Sullivan Lumber Company; The Blades Lumber Company; K. R. Jones, merchant; Trent Lumber Mills; Roberts & Bro., merchants; J. J. Baxter; D. F. Jarvis, merchant; J. M. Howard, merchant; Pine Lumber Company; Sam. B. Waters, merchant; Howard & Hughes, insurance; James Redmond; L. H. Cutler, president; John Dunn, merchant; A. E. Wadsworth, farmer; A. E. Hibbril, jeweler.

Hon. JETER C. PRITCHARD.

LENOIR, N. C., January 6, 1896.

DEAR SIR: I note with much satisfaction that you are advocating the restoration of duty on lumber, iron, and kaolin. The lumber industry in this section of the State, Caldwell County, has been seriously interfered with by the removal of the duty, and a number of enterprises have been seriously crippled and all have lost money. If the duty is restored it will help to revive the industry. No kaolin whatever has been taken out in this section, though it exists here in large quantities. It is of vital importance to help the kaolin industry that pottery should be protected, as that is the principal thing for which kaolin is used. I trust your distinguished influence may prevail on behalf of these interests.

Yours respectfully,

CALDWELL LAND AND LUMBER CO.
WM. S. HARVEY, President.

Hon. J. C. PRITCHARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

NORFOLK, VA., December 30, 1895.

DEAR SIR: We take the liberty of addressing you at this time in regard to a subject which is of such vital importance to us as, in our judgment, fully justifies us in thus infringing upon your valuable time.

We allude to the revenue tariff bill, and particularly to that portion of it bearing upon the lumber trade. We are free to say that at this time we have no knowledge of your views on the subject, yet we feel, beyond question, that on this, as well as on all other matters coming before the Senate of the United States, your voice will always be lifted and your vote cast in behalf of the interest and welfare of your constituents.

You are doubtless aware that the lumber business of North Carolina and Virginia is one of the greatest manufacturing industries which exist in those States to-day. Its development has been rapid, and when one considers the vast timber resources which are yet undeveloped, it is easy for the mind to grasp the priceless heritage which the Creator has so bountifully bestowed upon these two grand old Commonwealths, and we therefore believe that you will agree with us that the subject is one of more vital interest to the welfare and prosperity of the people of Virginia and North Carolina than any other piece of legislation with which they are now confronted. As you perhaps know, the product of the mills manufacturing North Carolina pine finds its market almost entirely in the Eastern and New England States. We would also call your attention to the fact that the largest and chief Canadian manufacturing center is located in what is known as the Ottawa district, from which point the Canadian product has the advantage of a very direct and cheap outlet to the United States by way of Lake Champlain and the Hudson River. From Burlington, Vt., Albany, N. Y., and New York City this product is distributed through the same territory our North Carolina pine depends upon for its market, and it therefore becomes our greatest competitor. It is needless for us to say to you that no other manufacturing section of this country is brought into such close competition, or is so vitally affected by the Canadian product as our North Carolina pine mills.

That the Canadian manufacturer has some decided advantage over us, we think, can not be questioned. In starting his manufacturing operations he has only had to go to the Government land department and state that he wishes from ten to fifty thousand acres of timber lands entered up in his name, and upon payment of a small entry fee these lands are secured to him, and he has been required to make no further payments for this timber until such time as, in the course of his operations, he finds it necessary or advisable for him to cut the timber and manufacture it. With us all timber purchases have to be made outright, and very few careful and conservative mill operators in this country would deem it safe to spend from fifty to one hundred thousand dollars in building a mill plant unless they had first secured enough timber to run them for a period of, say, ten years. They are therefore required to make a larger investment in timber than in their mill plant, and the interest for a long term of years on the capital which is tied up in these timber lands cuts no small figure in the expenses of our operations.

The Canadian operator has no difficulty in getting plenty of common labor at an average of $15 per month, while our mills here are paying their common labor from 75 cents to a dollar per day.

When the Wilson tariff bill went into effect the manufacturers in this section had, through the competition of the Canadian manufacturers, been forced down to a point where any reasonable margin of profit on their investments could not possibly be obtained. To-day this little margin of profit ha. been entirely wiped away, and in addition to it the price on standing timber in North Carolina and Virginia has been lowered at least from 20 to 25 per cent and labor from 10 to 20 per cent. To bring this matter down in more comprehensive form to you, we beg to submit you the following figures in regard to the cost of production with us, together with the selling prices of our product:

	Per M.
Average cost of stumpage	$1.00
Average cost of logging	3.50
Average cost of railroad freights and other expenses in getting logs to the mills	3.50
Average cost of manufacturing and kiln drying	2.50
Average cost of selling, shipping, office expense, insurance, taxes, etc	1.50
	12.00
Average price, net, by Norfolk mills during year 1895	12.00

These figures are based upon operations at this point. At points farther south the cost of manufacturing, etc., will be lighter and the freights to the market higher, so that we are safe in saying to you that the operations of the Norfolk mills are on about the same basis as those at manufacturing points in North Carolina or south of Norfolk, and we assure you that the mill manufacturer in this section who has been able to do anything better during the past year than the figures above quoted would be difficult to find, while in the majority of cases the operators have run their business during the past year at an actual loss. When you take into consideration that there is invested in this business from ten to twelve million dollars of capital, employing from fifteen to twenty thousand men, which means the support of at least 50,000 people, you will readily see that the hardship which the present situation lays upon us is shared in by a vast number of people outside of the manufacturers.

None of the lumber-producing sections of the United States is within such easy reach of the great metropolitan cities of the East as we are. We maintain that the farmer of Virginia or North Carolina who owns a hundred or two hundred acres of timber land should realize more for his timber than he has ever been able to do in the past, but this condition of affairs will never be brought about so long as Canadian lumber is placed on the free list. The manufacturers and the labor employed by our mills will not be the only sufferers, but every owner of timber lands in North Carolina or Virginia, both large and small (and they number thousands), must continue to feel the effect of the blight which has been placed upon this trade.

We maintain that the interests of Virginia and North Carolina, as well as of all the timber sections of the South to-day, imperatively require that not only should the small duty proposed under the revenue tariff bill be placed upon lumber, but that it should be put back to $2 per thousand. It is our candid opinion that had the duty remained at $2 per thousand every timber owner in these States would to-day be able to realize at least 50 per cent more for his timber holdings, while every laborer engaged in this trade would be commanding 50 per cent more for his services than he is now able to do.

We have trespassed upon your time and good nature to quite a lengthy extent and we trust that you will pardon us for so doing; yet, as before stated, the question is one of grave importance to us, and we feel that in writing you we might be able to give you some points or ideas in regard to the matter which heretofore have not been brought to your observation. We know that when one undertakes to consider a question pertaining to a great industry like ours, spreading over such a wide field and affecting such a multitude of other interests and thousands upon thousands of people who at the first glance would not appear to be interested at all, it is no easy matter for the mind to reach out, grasp, and fully realize the benefits which must necessarily follow if the present bill should become law and a slight duty be placed on Canadian lumber, which the bill contemplates.

We therefore trust that we are not asking too much in requesting that you give this matter your earnest and thoughtful consideration, feeling that after doing so it will be a pleasure to you and an undoubted service to your constituents should you see fit to give the bill your support and your vote.

With much respect, we remain, yours, very truly,

Hon. JETER C. PRITCHARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PRITCHARD. These letters give but a faint idea of the blighting effect of Democratic "tariff reform" upon the industries of the Southern people. The lumber interest has been a source of much revenue, especially to the people of North Carolina and Virginia. Alabama, North Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, and West Virginia abound in vast, undeveloped mineral wealth. Immediately after the passage of the McKinley law a rapid development of the resources of these several States at once began, and our people were just beginning to taste the fruits of industrial progress and development when, for some inscrutable reason, the people voted the Democratic party back into power. Scandal, humiliation, and disaster have swiftly followed. But the end is at hand. We are told by this Democratic Administration that we are in the midst of a crisis, but what is the nature of the emergency? Too many Treasury notes in circulation! Another explanation is that, as a result of Republican legislation in the interest of silver in the past, the country is threatened with a silver basis. From the inception of the Cleveland Administration this has been the common excuse for bond issues. That is what a Democratic "crisis" means. The cause is apparent. Democratic mismanagement, Democratic misconstruction of the laws, Democratic defiance of the people's weal, and the subordination of the common welfare to party expediency.

When I realize the deplorable condition of affairs in the South, I am impelled by a sense of duty to my constituency to urge the adoption of this amendment. I appeal to my Northern friends in this body to come to our relief. I appeal to you to accept this amendment and save Southern industries from inevitable destruction. I appeal confidently to you whose section has so long been the beneficiary of protection and whose great wealth and splendid civilization is the direct result of Republican tariff legislation, to come to the South's rescue in its heroic struggle for industrial emancipation. I realize the fact that the Republican party has not a majority in this body, and of itself is unable to enact any legislation; but I earnestly appeal to our Populist friends to stand by the people in this life and death contest.

The amendment I offer gives the owner of the raw material and the farmer an equal show in the race of life. In the light of recent history the South expects little at the hands of Southern Democratic Senators in this matter, but I am almost persuaded that the operation of the Wilson law has convinced them of its iniquity from the Southern standpoint. It is not too late to undo the wrong and wreck of Democratic mistakes in this particular. The votes of Southern Democratic Senators can pass this amendment. This one solitary act of common business sense would cover years and years of folly, of false pretense, and of broken promises. You have permitted your Northern Democratic associates to stab to the death every struggling Southern enterprise, and at the same time you have aided them in protecting the Northern manufacturers whom you and they, in common, have repeatedly denounced as "robber barons." Is it too late to appeal to your manhood and beg you to vote for this amendment as the only remaining alternative of Southern self-preservation? While the lamp holds out to burn the most extreme Democratic tariff reformer may repent. This is the day of atonement.

This appeal may not be heeded now, but take my word for it, Mr. President, the time is at hand when the great iron, coal, and cotton producing States, imperial in vast but undeveloped wealth, will speak with one voice in this Chamber on this momentous subject. Where now this great interest is represented by a single Republican Senator on this floor, a little while hence and there will be other choice vacant seats on the other side of this Chamber. The day of tradition and sentimentalism in the South has passed. With honest elections has begun a business era which is the hope of our people, and the solid South is a thing of the past.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I do not intend at this particular time to open up a tariff discussion, but I simply call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the peculiar situation in which Congress is placed. It strikes me it is somewhat difficult for Congress to gratify the people of North Carolina, for the reason that that State recently sent to the Senate two distinguished gentlemen, who are its Senators, elected substantially at the same time, by the same body, and by the same combination. One of them the other day in his speech arraigned the Democratic party because it had been false to tariff reform, and he gravely told us that the people of North Carolina earnestly desired extreme tariff reform. The Wilson Act, he thought, did not embody it sufficiently, and that is the reason he left the Democratic party and joined the Populists. Now comes the other end of the combination, and he says the people of North Carolina want the reenactment of the McKinley Act and extreme high-tariff duties. I do not know how we are going to gratify both of those Senators at the same time.

I shall not speak of the other subject. It is a matter about which both parties seem somewhat divided. But I was rather amused to hear the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] say that the Democratic party is responsible substantially for the repeal of the Sherman silver law, when we all recollect that a majority of his own party upon the other side of the Chamber cast their votes for the repeal of that act. The Democratic party is entirely willing to be responsible for all that it has actually done either upon the tariff question or on the silver question, but we certainly are not able to gratify the inconsistent claims which are made here in behalf of the great State of North Carolina.

Mr. WHITE and Mr. PRITCHARD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE].

PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE OF THE SENATE.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire at this time to offer a few remarks in enforcement of the position of those Senators who have heretofore insisted that there should be changes in the rules of the Senate looking to the more logical transaction of public business. I ask in this connection that Senate resolutions 14, 15, and 16, submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], and Senate resolution 18, submitted by me, be read from the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. HILL to the rules of the Senate, submitted December 11, 1895:

"Resolved, That subdivision 2 of Rule V of the standing rules of the Senate be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"If at any time during the daily sessions of the Senate a question shall be raised by any Senator as to the presence of a quorum, the Presiding Officer shall forthwith direct the Secretary to call the roll, and shall announce the result, and these proceedings shall be without debate; but no Senator, while speaking, shall be interrupted by any other Senator raising the question of the lack of a quorum, and the question as to the presence of a quorum shall not be raised oftener than once in every hour, but this provision shall not apply where the absence of a quorum is disclosed upon any roll call of the yeas and nays."

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. HILL to the rules of the Senate, submitted December 11, 1895:

"Resolved, That Rule IX be amended by adding thereto the following section:

"'SEC. 2. Whenever any bill or resolution is pending before the Senate as unfinished business, and the same shall have been debated on divers days, amounting in all to thirty days, it shall be in order for any Senator at any time to move to fix a time for the taking of a vote upon such bill or resolution, and such motion shall not be amendable or debatable, and shall be immediately put, and if passed by a majority of all the members of the Senate the vote upon such bill or resolution, with all the amendments thereto which may be pending at the time of such motion, shall be had at the date fixed in such original motion without further debate or amendment, except by unanimous consent; and during the pendency of such motion to fix a date and also at the time fixed by the Senate for voting upon bill or resolution no other motion of any kind or character shall be entertained until such motion or such bill or resolution shall have been finally voted upon.'"

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. HILL to the rules of the Sen ate, submitted December 11, 1895:

"Resolved, That Rule XII be amended by inserting an additional clause, as follows:

"'When upon a vote by yeas and nays it shall appear to the Presiding Officer, upon recapitulation and before the announcement of the result, that a quorum has not voted, he shall call upon Senators present who have not voted by name to vote; and shall direct the Secretary to add to the list of the Senators voting the names of the Senators present not voting, including those announcing pairs, or who may or may not be excused from voting, and to enter the same in the Journal; and if the whole number constitute a quorum, and it shall appear that a majority of a quorum (or two-thirds of a quorum where the Constitution prescribes a majority of two-thirds) has voted on either side, the question shall be deemed to have been determined and the result shall be announced the same as if a quorum had voted.'"

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. WHITE to the rules of the Senate, submitted December 12, 1895:

"Resolved, That Rule XIX be amended by inserting at the end of paragraph 1 thereof the following: 'All debate shall be relevant and confined to the subject directly before the Senate.'"

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, during the last Congress many resolutions suggesting alterations in the procedure of the Senate were introduced. Several were to the purport that Senators in addressing the Senate should be confined to the subject under inquiry; others that debates should be restricted; others that for the purpose of making a quorum every Senator actually present, or at least signifying such presence by announcing a pair or otherwise, should be counted.

So many propositions emanating from so many able sources ought to be enough, without further argument, to convince us that material departures from our present procedure must be desirable. Error long practiced is difficult of eradication. Habits grow upon us. The ability and public services of many of our members have compelled their return here time and time again. Pride, indisposition to retract opinions once expressed, unwillingness to accord to later generations the credit of improvement, have made it hard to effect reforms. More than this, the more venerable Senators have viewed as semisacrilegious the efforts of comparative novices to vary our fossilized processes. Perhaps it is hopeless to attempt the task now. However, I am somewhat encouraged, because not only is the twentieth century approaching, but I note that some of those who have heretofore opposed more businesslike methods have changed their views and are now anxious for revision.

The Constitution of the United States contains, inter alia, the following:

Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, etc. (Article I, section 5, subdivision 2, Constitution.)

The rules now in existence, as far as mooted points are concerned, were formulated at a very early date, and I concede that the onus of showing a reason for alteration is upon those who seek to bring it about. This presumption might, indeed, be met and perhaps overcome by the admitted general demand, but as I will later on discuss the effect which the opinion of the public, and especially of our constituents, should have upon our acts, I will not now avail myself of this counter presumption. I shall endeavor to state generally the ground upon which I stand, and shall refer to analogous cases and to the variable and peculiar conditions which have brought about prevailing embarrassments. While there are cogent considerations justifying many modifications, the principal defect, as I presume to term it, which should be remedied is the entire omission in our so-called rules to provide for the bringing of a subject to a vote otherwise than by unanimous consent; because as long as a Senator can stand up and talk, and read or have read, matters relevant and irrelevant, the question can not be put.

Next in grade descending is the recognition by the Senate of the ancient but not honorable fiction that a majority of the Senate may be in the Senate and yet no quorum be present, and that although a Senator may answer a roll call by stating that he is paired with another Senator, and although he may help to make the one-fifth of those present who demand a roll call, still, in conflict with his assertion of presence, we, with eccentric and patient indifference to the truth, rule that he is not here.

Then the Senate permits unlimited talk—discussion it is called—upon subjects absolutely and completely, entirely and obviously, foreign to the bill or question appearing by the record to be pending. It is interesting to know that at an early date the difficulties which now confront us were to some extent felt. We are informed by Mr. Schouler (History United States, volume 3, page 369) that Mr. Randolph during the last years of his public service was prone to wander from the actual question to which his remarks should have been addressed. In speaking of the Senate this author says:

The decorum of this quiet Chamber was outraged as never before, and Virginia was mortified at the unseemly exhibition. As a thorn in the flesh of an unpopular Administration Randolph was not to be despised, and on this account perhaps Calhoun bore gently with him, watching from his chair the flow of poesy and vituperation which the rules of the Senate, so he alleged, forbade him to interrupt.

I find by referring to 30 Niles's Register, pages 146–147, that the Senate rescinded the then existing rule which vested in the President the appointment of the Senate committees and the supervising of the Journal, and Mr. Calhoun made an elaborate statement in connection with this action, and also concerning his jurisdiction to confine Senators to the subject of debate. His argument in part is thus expressed by the reporter:

From the direction which the debate, in some degree, took, as well as from what has been said without these walls, it becomes, on this occasion, proper that I should state, for the information of this body, the construction that the Chair has put on the sixth and seventh rules of the Senate. They are in the following words:

"When a member shall be called to order he shall sit down until the President shall have determined whether he is in order or not; and every question of order shall be decided by the President without debate; but if there be a doubt in his mind he may call for the sense of the Senate.

"If the member be called to order for words spoken, the exceptionable words shall immediately be taken down in writing, that the President may be better enabled to judge of the matter."

The Chair, said the Vice-President, has bestowed its most deliberate and anxious attention by night and by day on the question of the extent of its powers under a correct construction of these rules, and is settled in the conviction that the right to call to order on questions touching the latitude or freedom of debate belongs exclusively to the members of this body and not to the Chair. The power of the presiding officer on these great points is an appellate power only, and consequently the duties of the Chair commence when a Senator is called to order by a Senator. Whenever such a call shall be made, the Chair will not be found unprepared to discharge its only functions in such a case—that of deciding on the point of order submitted. And the opinion of the presiding officer in relation to the freedom of debate in this body it will be time to declare when a question may be presented; but such as it is, it will be firmly and, I trust I may add, fearlessly maintained.

Mr. Schouler also writes that in the course of the next Congress, in 1828, the Senate gave to the Vice-President concurrent power in calling members to order, subject to appeal from his decision.

We all know that this prerogative is never exercised by either the Senate or the Vice-President in so far as it refers to the obligation to keep within the limits of the question under discussion. Matters which are germane and matters which are not germane seem to be alike in order here. I believe that even under our rules, properly construed, Senators should be required to adhere to the question; but the contrary practice prevails, and will only be corrected by positive prohibition.

THE ANTIQUITY OF OUR RULES DOES NOT INHIBIT THEIR AMENDMENT.

In examining this question it is fair to admit that rules which have been in operation during such an extended period, and have been found frequently competent to discharge the functions for which they were designed, should not lightly be set aside. That a plan of action has been, for a period, found advantageous suffices, perhaps, to make out a prima facie case in its favor. This, however, is all that can be claimed. This is as much as the doctrine of presumption warrants. It must likewise be granted that no regulations sufficiently comprehensive to include the advanced requirements of an alert nation can be devised for all time. We can not photograph the future, or even comprehend it. However wise we may be, or however closely we may have studied that which has gone, we are not permitted to penetrate the mystery of that which is to come. The unexpected developments of an active world we can but partially forestall. The phonograph does not store the pronunciation of the sages, the heroes, the philosophers of antiquity. Ages unborn will hear the voices of Gladstone and Bismarck, but the tones of their predecessors in greatness must be ever absent.

To suppose that rules adopted in the days of the nation's infancy by her Senate will be sufficient for all exigencies in maturer hours is to expect that there is never to be any actual development; that our country must be monotonous and nonprogressive. It needs no discussion to show that we are a go-ahead people; that we are fully alive to inspiring demands.

According to the census of 1800 the United States then contained 5,308,483 persons, and of these nearly one-fifth were slaves. It now contains a population but little less than 70,000,000. At that time Cincinnati contained, perhaps, 15,000 people. Buffalo was not laid out. There were a few cabins upon the site of Cleveland. Pittsburg amounted to little. Rochester did not exist. Boston contained a population of about 25,000; New York about 60,000, and Philadelphia, which then headed the list, some 75,000. Chicago was unknown. The great West was undeveloped. The vast resources of the Pacific Coast had been untouched.

The Western frontier was located within the Empire State. The entire banking means of the United States in 1800 would not, as a contemporaneous historian has remarked, "have answered the stock-jobbing purposes of one great operator of Wall street in 1875." The same author tells us that in 1800 "the normal capital of all the banks, including the Bank of the United States, fell short of twenty-nine millions. The limit of credit was quickly reached, for only the richest could borrow more than fifteen or twenty thousand dollars at a time, and the United States Government itself was greatly embarrassed whenever obliged to raise money. In 1798 the Secretary of the Treasury could obtain $5,000,000 only by paying 8 per cent interest for a term of years, and in 1814 the Government was forced to stop payments for the want of twenty millions."

It is perhaps accurate to say that the gross exports and imports of the United States at the dawn of this century did not more than balance at about $75,000,000. The States were few in number. This body was exceedingly small. When the Senate contained three or four dozen members, there was but little necessity for the enactment of stringent rules. There was no opportunity to filibuster. No chance was afforded to obstructionists for the retardation of public affairs.

Although it is true that civilization, with its varied social requirements, molded somewhat by climatic conditions, and influenced, too, by many other causes, has developed characteristics in one locality and among a certain set of men at a particular date, nevertheless, human nature is very much the same the world over and through the generations. The people of the United States had been governed under the English system. They had imbibed much of the hard sense and practical ideas which begot the common law. Moreover, the severe experiences of border life, the trials of war, and the demands of a new and unprecedented situation evoked love of country and smothered tendencies to indiscretion. Thus it came about that a country not then remarkably important commercially, offering but limited opportunity for the accumulation of lucre, sustained the most generally patriotic people who ever lived. This spirit has not become inactive, but many contentions which were entirely foreign to those who sat in this Chamber when the rules which I am attempting to consider were adopted are now urged upon us. It passes without saying that the development of the United States has induced many innovations and made imperative the enactment of numerous laws. The wisdom of our earlier Congresses, however marked, was not equal to the task of modeling statutes wide enough to cover the demands of 1895–96. Laws have multiplied until they have become so numerous that no one pretends to have more than a passing knowledge of the public and private bills which have become absolute rules of conduct. Our Constitution, the best result of the greatest wisdom of our predecessors, did not satisfy all necessities. Men who now sit here took part in changing that instrument and vitally adding to its prohibitions. These circumstances amply answer the claim that no revision should be made in the mere rules of a body which is itself constantly revising the statute law and sometimes aiding in the alteration of the organic instrument.

I assume that the causes which have made it necessary to add to or take from our Constitution, our statutes, our Federal and State systems must have made amendments to the Senate's procedure advisable. Apart from the concrete consideration of this topic, an intelligent stranger to the present discussion would doubtless say that if our rules are perfect, fit for unvaried endurance, the Senate must have been divinely organized and at all times acting in accordance with a plan born in omnipotent wisdom, or else that such rules must be behind the age, partaking somewhat of those proofs of the existence of ancient marvels which are furnished by prehistoric formations, petrified forests, the remains of various monsters, etc. These physical reminiscences are important because they are extremely old and not available for present use. They form examples of that which has been, and are valuable for the scientific lessons which are taught from them. Our rules are too modern for display and too ancient to suit our purposes.

I do not wish it to be understood that our rules ever will become or have become so obsolete as to suggest their exhibition with Cleopatra's Needle. I merely advert to the possibility of their improvement. They are still capable of being read by the public, but can not, it seems, be understood in all regards, even here. During my limited incumbency I have noticed grave differences among our parliamentary Nestors as to their proper interpretation, and when such controversies have been submitted to the Senate, the solution has been accomplished along party lines, presumably because the safest course to pursue was that dictated by faith in tried and trusted leaders. But mutations which ought to affect about everything depending upon human intelligence have not interfered with these creations of the remote past to which the future is to be sentenced, because, Mr. President, I contend that in this regard we are behind the times; that it is our duty to be up and doing; that we can not hold the world back; that however great we may assume and presume ourselves to be we are atoms to be crushed if we seek to stay the march of intelligence; that we must either keep abreast of the chariot or be dragged at its wheels. These are propositions not susceptible of refutation. I would not change a rule merely for the sake of change; I would not alter one without a reason; but I would not retain a rule merely because I or my predecessor had made it.

We can not, I know, vary our conduct as the dictators of the fashionable world do their raiment, but when the test of thought confronts us, ought we not seriously ask whether we, even we, may not be in error? The boys in the gallery many times suggest to the accomplished theatrical manager some defect in the acting or staging of his piece which the boxes have not detected. May it not be that those who have sent us here are right in their present criticism? "We owe it to ourselves," says one, "not to yield to public clamor. Let us take our time about it." This advice seems to be heeded. We are taking our time about it. Senators declare that we can always pass a bill if the majority wishes it to be passed. This may be true, but such passage is brought about only when the opposition is practically taken out on a stretcher. Such proceeding is not intellectual. While not novel here, it excites universal surprise everywhere else.

THE MAJORITY IS AT THE MERCY OF THE MINORITY.

Under our programme a single voice neutralizes, nay, vanquishes 87. Sir Boyle Roche would have said that one Senator outnumbers 87. True, a single Senator may be subdued, but no thanks to our rules for this boon. Give the credit to that nature which can not be conquered. Thus is afforded the relief which our rules attempt to negative. We can not overcome a single and determined opposing Senator until, his physical powers having weakened, we march to the roll call over his prostrate and panting form. Such procedure is not dignified surely, and if there is reason behind it no one has disclosed the same. If a sufficient number of obstructionists to order a roll call be present and a proper supply of positive Senators be here to watch and pray with their fellows—which must nearly always be the case in the great controversies now pending or plainly in sight or hereafter to occur—no vote can be reached until the minority so wills it. The more numerous Senators, the more need for firmness and positive regulation. We have now the largest Senate that ever convened in the United States, and the end is not yet. Let us look at this matter in the light of the present and consider the experience of the past. The tariff discussion in the last Congress furnished competent lessons. We sat here day after day and were treated to essays of enormous length, compilations, treatises, etc. Many of these were not listened to throughout by a single Senator beyond the member who had the floor, and except perhaps the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], who listens patiently to everything. I am told that he has felt it to be his duty to harken with the hope of hearing that which might instruct, and I am also informed that he feels that his self-sacrifice has been but partially rewarded, and that after all his trouble he is ready to confirm the generally accepted theory that everything said is not relevant or manifestly instructive.

Mr. President, I witnessed during the last tariff discussion a Senator of great ability and long experience speaking in this Chamber when there were but four of his associates present. One was in the chair, and one was attentive. I marveled why it was necessary to talk under such circumstances. The fourth Senator was writing a letter. After a while an absentee strolled into the Chamber, and, with a desire to emancipate us, moved an adjournment, and the Senate adjourned, leaving the Chamber but slightly less agitated than it had been. Was this deliberation? Did the Senators who left the Chamber pending the argument, speech, or recitation leave to deliberate? Perhaps so—perhaps so. After certain religious instructions the auditors are remanded to solitude for reflection. Maybe those who leave while the lone member deliberates aloud do so to deliberate in silence.

In a note to the second edition of Brice's American Commonwealth (volume 1, page 116), it is said:

> One is told in Washington that it is at present thought "bad form" for a Senator to listen to a set speech; it implies that he is a freshman.

I had not heard of this, but our custom gives color to the theory that such is our faith.

The numerous calls of the Senate, the appearances and disappearances, the exits and entrances of Senators, summoned from the cloakroom and immediately thereafter returning thereto, indicate that lack of interest and want of proper regard for public business which are the legitimate result of the procedure I condemn. It must be conceded that it would have been cruel to force anyone to hearken to the many repetitions dealt out here during the tariff debate. Those addresses were not made to be listened to. No Senator was offended because his colleagues absented themselves. Why should he feel offended? He exercised a similar right himself, and he did unto others as he desired others to do unto him. I know that many able speeches were delivered upon the tariff; that our opponents, especially in the running debate, made trenchant criticisms, and, from their standpoint, appropriate remarks; but I do not hesitate to affirm that folios after folios of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are filled with statistical and other compilations, originating on the Republican side which, while wholly cumulative compelled modifications in our bill, yielded under compulsion as the only means of shortening that which threatened to last world without end. Much of this profuseness will not be studied or read until the hieroglyphics of ancient Egypt have all been deciphered; until the partially eradicated stories which linger in the ruins of Asia Minor or arrest the archæologist's attention in the land of the Aztecs have been fully interpreted and understood.

During the discussion to which I have referred a diminutive minority (diminutive as to numbers) upon the other side of this Chamber declared themselves ready to talk until March 4 to beat the bill. And if there had been a slight addition to their strength the threat would have been executed.

Another and very striking illustration of the consequences of our rules was furnished on February 9 and 11 by a distinguished Senator. The bill making appropriations for the maintenance of the Post-Office Department of the Government was under consideration. A certain amendment thereto was proposed by the committee, and a point of order was made to the effect that the amendment was such general legislation as to conflict with the first subdivision of Rule XVI. The Senator referred to thereupon took the floor and proceeded to discuss the Alabama election controversy, devoting hours to its consideration, presenting numerous affidavits, statements, etc., bearing upon the transactions incident to recent proceedings at the polls in that State. That Senator, whom we all know to be able and intelligent, did not pretend that he was addressing himself to the subject then before the Senate. On the contrary, he had sought to be heard upon the election matter during the earlier part of the day, and being cut off by the parliamentary situation, did not hesitate to say that he would take the floor and make his speech in any event. He is not to be greatly blamed for this. He was merely exercising a privilege allowed him by the absurd procedure which the Senate tolerates, in defiance alike of sentiment and sense.

The following is one of many samples of the working of the present rule. Omitting names, I will read the report of an occurrence of the last session, which was published in a journal of this city. The report was substantially correct:

AIMS A BIG GUN.

Mr. A did not attempt to further prolong the delay in passing the bill, although for a few moments it looked as if the Senate was on the verge of a speech three months long. Mr. B's amendment providing for legal proceedings to test the constitutionality and validity of the tax before the taxpayer had paid it had been ruled out of order, and the decision of the Chair had been sustained by an overwhelming vote. Thereupon Mr. A, in order to get a vote upon the question directly, offered another amendment to the same effect; but Mr. D, declining to let the proposition be voted upon on its merits, raised the point of order. It was immediately sustained by the Chair, Mr. E being the presiding officer. Never a word said Mr. A, but, reaching beneath his desk, produced a pile of manuscript that was a foot and a half high and must have contained at least a thousand pages. It was a speech.

Mr. C laughed out loud. Mr. A smiled quietly and Mr. G nearly fell out of his chair. Mr. A, with a face as solemn as any clergyman's, unbuckled the great leather strap with which the immense mass was fastened, took up the topmost pages and began to look through them. Half a dozen Senators at once gathered around him.

"Are you going to make some remarks?" one of them asked him.

"I am going to make these remarks," was the Senator's reply, pointing to the mountain of manuscript, and the very ludicrousness of the situation brought a smile to his face.

Mr. H went over to plead with him. Mr. I also approached to view the threatened danger, and then Mr. G walked across the Senate to interview Mr. A. The result of the conference was seen a moment later, when Mr. A again introduced his amendment. This time no point of order was made against it. It was voted upon, and, as Mr. A had doubtless anticipated, was defeated by a vote of 19 yeas to 32 nays. But he had gained his point, and sinking back in his chair with an expression of beatific satisfaction he watched his clerk once more buckle up the thousand pages and stow them away under the desk, where they still remain to be again forthcoming when Mr. A has anything to gain by their appearance.

I know that some will probably say that there has not been any filibustering here. I am not particular about words or names. I am referring to transactions as they occur. During the last session, and after the tariff bill finally passed, it was pretty well known that there were in that bill defects—certain errors—which the alleged dominant party wished to correct. The adoption of all the Senate amendments by the House rendered the usual committee revision impossible. It was suggested here that one or two of the inaccuracies should be cured; but no; the minority informed the majority that this could not be done, and the few had power to control the many. We threw up our hands and submitted without more than a murmur. Hence but little effort was made in the line of even clerical improvement. The press correctly informed us that the leaders of the other side concluded that there should be no more tariff legislation. The minority thus dictated to the majority, and the majority acquiesced. Others again affirmed that there must be no financial legislation. It may be that the majority here believe, as I do, that it is practically impossible to enact a complete financial scheme at this session; but it is wholly immaterial whether the majority or the minority favors legislation. The majority can do nothing unless the minority consents.

True, the minority can not enact a bill disagreeable to the majority, but practically the Senate is governed by a minority. It is common experience for a majority leader to say to his restive subordinates: "Wait a while; have patience; I have been in consultation with Senator Blank, the leader of the minority, and he agrees that if we will make the following concessions he will see that the majority is allowed to proceed." The followers sometimes are irritated, use nonparliamentary language in the cloakroom, refuse for a day or two to bow down, but they always come to time. They have to come to time under the rules—the constitutional rules of the Senate. Even our leaders do not relish having to do this. No one pretends that it is just right. The most plausible excuse that can be given is that nothing is perfect, even in the Senate, and that these difficulties are of less moment than those that might, could, or would be produced by more positive and less curious regulations.

I will show that there is nothing in these excuses or arguments. Just now there are various important bills before us. Perhaps we may be allowed to vote upon them. Many of them present no party issue. But one opposing Senator may baffle us. If we assume that there is a majority of 10 or 20 only, either for or against one of these bills, and if the measure reaches a roll call or a determination, it will be because the minority have so willed. In other words, the passage of a bill is effected when the opponents thereof agree thereto. This is certainly a harmonious anticipation involving peace and good will. We vote because of the magnanimity of those whom we outnumber.

I know that some who differ from me declare that bills are always passed on. This is not true. But if it were better founded it would be a remarkably weak response. Are those rules the perfection of human wisdom whose only value is that notwithstanding their existence legislation may be had? Rules framed for a legislative body defended because in spite of them work may be done! Rules are everywhere supposed to be designed to promote work. If the argument is worth anything, it is for the reason that it means that the essence of Senatorial statesmanship is the impeding of legislation. A body formed to legislate is, according to this view, performing its obligations when it does its best to negative the object of its creation, Organized for action, it luxuriates in inaction and deliberates and deliberates and deliberates, while one part of the country is swearing and the other is yawning.

ILL-ADVISED LEGISLATION IS NOT AVOIDED BY A SYSTEM WHICH CONSUMES TIME AND ENLIGHTENS NO ONE.—THE DISCUSSION WHICH RESULTS IN BENEFIT IS PERTINENT, DIRECT, AND PITHY DEBATE.

The person who tells me that addresses which are listened to only by the suffering Presiding Officer and by the party who is talking enlighten anybody does not appeal very strongly to me. When a minority resolves upon the death of a bill the speeches, while fatal to the measure, are also dull to the Senate and void of intelligent consequences. If mistakes have been made in bills which have passed here after lengthy debate, it does not prove that we did not spend enough of time upon such measures, but does establish that our hours were not as well employed as would have been the case had there been a brisk and apposite discussion upon which was centered the undivided attention of the whole body. The present plan inhibits such educating consideration. Reasonable rules will produce the improved condition. I frankly admit that I do not like to be driven, and I also know that self-respect requires us to maintain our integrity against demagogic onslaught. If you do not respect yourself, how can you expect others to respect you, is a pointed inquiry upon a proper occasion. It is an inquiry which I would address to those who inflict kill-bill compilations upon their brethren, which compilations are never read again nor intended to be read by men or angels—certainly not by angels who are not paying the fearful penalty of transgression. It is because I revere this place, long and now tenanted by many great and good men; it is because I trust that our posterity may see in this Chamber nothing to offend and but little to improve, and it is because I feel that unless we remodel our practice we will be righteously condemned that I make this appeal, especially to those Senators whose extended and valuable services to their country leads me to hope that they will finally decide aright.

THE DIGNITY OF THE SENATE IS NOT MAINTAINED BY ADHERING TO PARLIAMENTARY ANOMALIES.

Much has been said with reference to the dignity of the Senate, and it appears to be intimated that it would not be dignified to have a previous question here; that other bodies may condescend to such restrictions, but that it would be indecorous for us to do so. But the Senate was created for the purpose of, to some extent, legislating for the country. Such, certainly, is one of its most important duties. It was designed to act with the House of Representatives, and both together to form the National Legislature. It was not organized merely that its members might be impressive. But dignity (dignus) is the equivalent of true worth, of excellence. It does not depend solely or chiefly upon external manifestations nor lofty bearing. Senatorial dignity should result from the full discharge of the obligations of a Senator. It is not begotten of rules; it exists only in just appreciation of high responsibility, and is the companion of onerous, patriotic labor, carefully, ably, and conscientiously done. Due comprehension of the importance of his trust should influence the manner and conduct of a Senator. He should ever remember that his fealty to the great power which he represents inhibits improper and unseemly action. But the people of the United States did not make this body for any other purpose than to conserve, develop, and perpetuate the principles of liberty, which they hoped would enable them to pursue, without fear or favor, their legitimate affairs. The Government, after all, is an agency of a strictly business character. The unessential embellishments of power, the pomp and circumstance of authority, are daily becoming less and less tolerable. The diffusion of education, the fact that the printing press is so generally in use and literature so available tends toward the equalization of mentality as far as such equalization is natural, and renders too much display and obtrusive consciousness of the possession of authority repulsive to the average American. Recognition of the courtesies of enlightened life must undoubtedly prevail; the enforcement of regulations dictated by regard for order and adequate veneration of our country's institutions is also vital, but here the patience of our constituents is disposed to cease.

THE SENATE SHOULD NOT BE AN EXCEPTION TO ALL LEGISLATIVE BODIES.

Every effective assemblage in the civilized world is controlled by rules which make the transaction of business by the majority always attainable within a reasonable period. This is true of short-lived bodies, such as conventions, of more permanent organizations, such as parliaments, diets, chambers of deputies, etc. Even the Senate claims to have rules, and I think I have heard it admitted that these are valuable as aids to affirmative action. How absurd to fix hours for morning business or to designate a time when the Calendar may be considered or anything else taken up, when we contumaciously and with premeditation so manage our affairs that one-fourth of the body can readily defeat a roll call on the merits. That a quorum may be present and actually debating, and yet by declining to vote members present may make the record show no quorum, is a condition perfectly familiar and indefensible. If we are to have rules at all, let them reach the vital part. If we are here for work, let the work be done. If it be better for the country that no legislation should be had—and I have heard a distinguished man defend our rules on this ground—then let us meet only to adjourn. If a bill is good, ought it not to pass? If it is bad, should it not be disposed of according to law? Talking a bill to death, while in harmony with Senatorial usage, is unreasonable. Rational consideration, full consideration, every measure indeed should have, even at the risk of weariness, but a minority should not be allowed to effectively say, "We will not permit clerical errors or other obvious defects in a tariff or other bill to be changed. Our policy is to compel the country to act under the measure as it is. We claimed that the bill was defective, nevertheless it was made a law. We will now decline to permit mistakes to be rectified, even though the same may have been exposed by us. It is against our policy to permit the majority to act."

Is it wonderful that the people of the United States censure the Senate? Is it remarkable that this is not a popular body? Is it singular that every one asks us why the Senate is so slow? And is it not peculiar that our excuse must be that our rules will not permit us to do anything—that we are disciplined to inaction? Is it true of other advanced peoples that their highest legislative chambers are compelled to admit that their rules, their own instruments, created to facilitate business, are efficacious only to prevent the determination of important issues? It was never designed by the framers of the Constitution that this body should be an insuperable obstacle to reform, or that it should place about its limbs shackles of its own fashioning and justify its torpor by referring to impediments of its own proper design.

THE FORCE BILL.

I am aware that several Senators whose abilities and statesmanship long ago justly won for them high national reputation object to anything approaching a cloture, because they say we ever stand under the menace of the force bill, that the effort to enact that bill is a warning of the presence of kindred perils. Stated in a different form, this means that there is always danger that the majority may become tyrannical or may scheme for continuous dominancy, or may plot against the country's interests. The force bill seems to be used by each and all of those upon the Democratic side who rest upon this so-called argument. The pertinency of the illustration is hardly admitted by our Republican friends who defend the rules. I shall consider the subject first as it regards the obnoxious bill so fortunately buried. Then I shall attempt to maintain that the good or evil of any special measure can never warrant a general and century-extending policy which can not be justified except as a preventive to such ill-advised legislation.

Is it true that the country or the Democratic party would have been ruined had the force bill become a law? I do not think so. I have the highest respect for Senators who regarded that concoction as an edict of proscription and death. I fully agree that it contemplated an unrepublican system. I concur that the time of its introduction—a generation after the close of our lamentable civil strife—was most unhappily selected. Nevertheless, had that bill been enacted there would have been no temporary or other Democratic falling off, either North or South. The common danger would have solidified expression in the ballot box, and an attempt to repeat the criminality of carpetbagism or the errors of electoral commissions would have stirred the Union to such an extent that election cyclones would not have been causes of discomfort to this side of the Chamber. If I am not right about this, and if still I be correct in my disapproval of the force bill, it follows that our Government is a total failure. For if an odious, unpatriotic, enslaving, power-perpetuating enactment, unjust in its conception and cruel in its workings, be not doomed to swift destruction by the honesty of the land, it can only be because it reflects public immorality and general wanton disregard of sacred privileges. Nor is it any response that the nature of that bill was such as to place the machinery for counting in and counting out in the hands of politicians, who would have exercised such authority selfishly and to the fullest extent.

This condition would no doubt require more decided public expression, greater majorities than are ordinarily determinative of party struggles, but the difficulty is purely theoretic. The American people occasionally "go out gunning" with weapons thoroughly charged. During these uprisings schemers, gerrymanders, force-bill men, id genus omne have only one recourse, viz, to take to the woods. Sometimes even the innocent go down with the guilty. If, which I do not deem likely, the Republican party shall come into complete power once more, having under its control the executive and legislative departments, its astute leaders will not attempt to enact a force bill any more than they will seek to reenact the McKinley bill. They have tasted both to their hearts' discontent, and will be found somewhat homeopathic even as to protection. While the people will often go too far—while, as in the late elections, they may perhaps visit the sins of one party upon the other—yet in the end the matter will be honestly adjusted—the fair thing will be done. To hold differently is to write oneself a pessimist, an unbeliever in republicanism, or, at best, a political agnostic.

I can well appreciate that Senators who lived under the impositions of carpetbag control, who watched the looting of their treasuries and of their people by imported conscienceless and merciless speculators upon patriotism, who saw not only their personal belongings taken away, their families humiliated and terrorized, their rights as citizens ignored and repudiated, but who also suffered from enormous State and municipal debts and the infliction of numerous other evils, should shudder at the remembrance of such a condition, and should protest against any concession rendering the recurrence of such enormities possible. But this very experience, the presence of hearts and frames yet bearing the scars of outrage and sorrow, is apt to exaggerate the peril. We are not upon the heels of an awful war; our people are commercially and otherwise one; and no such sad state as that to which I have alluded can be born of force bills or miscalled legal writs. The American people are too well educated in liberty and law to allow long life to any cruel or clearly unjust measure. So much for this feature of the case.

I affirm that we must not spend our time in rendering legislation difficult because we fear that the majority may pass an iniquitous bill. When I say the majority, I mean as far as this body is concerned—the Senate.

There are instances—as in the case of the expulsion of a member or upon impeachment trials or the ratification of a treaty—where more than a majority is required; but I allude now to those cases where those who sum up more than half a quorum are given by the Constitution the right to express the will of the Chamber. The Senate mentioned in enacting clauses and which Senate concurs with the House, is not practically and necessarily composed of more than a majority of a quorum. Of course nothing less than a quorum constitutes the Senate. The contesting minority either does not participate in the enacting of a law, or if it participates, it is by way of protestation. It does not enact. It seeks to prevent enactment. That this minority has a right to require deliberation I grant. That it may dictate the extent of the deliberation and define what constitutes deliberation I positively deny. To admit such a proposition would be to permit the minority to deliberate to the death. Consideration there should be; patient, painstaking, earnest reflection; but as either the minority or the majority must determine when deliberation ceases and the wasting of time begins, I at once select the majority as the repository of the power.

Majorities are not infallible. The majority and minority both come from a body speaking a common language, living under a common Constitution, governed by a common Federal system, and having a common aspiration. They are all samples of one stock. Hence it is obviously demonstrable that the majority will be oftener correct than the minority. I prefer to live under a plan which sometimes leads to wrong rather than under one which generally leads to wrong. Usually the majority is in sympathy with the latest expressed will of the people. Hence it is not easy to avoid the conclusion that the majority will commonly enact the popular will, and no one is bold enough to claim that we should not, as a rule, defer to the public will by which we have been inducted into our places. There may be an extreme case, but I am not discussing such. My argument is a protest against the adoption of a policy based upon exceptions. I repudiate the view which forces me to follow a line of conduct usually which is only tolerable in isolated instances. I ask for a rule that now and then may work an inconvenience, but which, in the vast mass of cases, must be beneficial. My adversaries invoke a plan which, as I have said, ignores the rule and recognizes the exception, adopts the special and rejects the general. I am afraid of majorities, says one. Very true. But I am afraid of minorities. If we can not trust the majority, a fortiori minorities must be avoided. The basis of our Government is the recognition of the majority. Many of those who have endeavored to enforce minority control are in jail. Some of them have been disposed of according to law and with the judicial prayer, "May God have mercy on your soul." Outside of the faith of this Chamber, the American people do not believe in minority control. Mr. Webster well said "Liberty exists in proportion to wholesome restraint." Without some curtailment of the obstructive power of the minority liberty is in peril. When the majority representing the people can not prevail within a reasonable time the condition is menacing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 2904) to maintain and protect the coin redemption fund, and to authorize the issue of certificates of indebtedness to meet temporary deficiencies of revenue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] as being entitled to the floor on the unfinished business.

Mr. WHITE. I inquire if the Senator from Arkansas prefers to proceed immediately? It will not take me very long to conclude.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. How long will it take the Senator from California to conclude?

Mr. WHITE. About fifteen minutes.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should be very glad indeed to proceed, but I do not like to interfere with the Senator's speech. I yield to him if he desires.

Mr. WHITE. I am much obliged to the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside without losing its place. The Senator from California will proceed.

Mr. WHITE. The Committee on Rules is and has been composed of some of the ablest Senators; men of great experience, who have given much consideration to parliamentary problems as well as to general legislation; yet that committee, as heretofore organized, and I do not confine myself to any one committee or to any particular membership, suggests an admirable illustration of the evil against which many are now protesting. That committee creates not, neither does it destroy. It lulls into somnolence all tendered changes. The most energetic rule, the most stirring proposition, is afflicted with incurable lassitude when it comes within the anæsthetic atmosphere of this remarkable organization. Occasionally a member of the Committee on Rules notes the propriety of reporting back a proposed resolution. The vitalized committee member is informed that he can not even enjoy the privilege of filing a minority report, because a minority report presupposes the existence of a declaration from the majority, and the majority reports not, neither does it cease to be. So the progressive member may fuss, he may protest, he may storm, but the Committee on Rules, smiling upon him, benignly prescribes calmness. There are many centuries to come. Why should the minority of the Committee on Rules become agitated while the majority are so completely satisfied? You believe in majorities, they sarcastically say; hence demur not. This condition is the more remarkable when we reflect that the Senators who are and have been on that committee are and have been men of integrity, determination, ready judgment, and admitted fearlessness. But I am not addressing myself to any particular committee or to any special person. I spend not a moment from a mere disposition to censure an individual. To do so would be unjust. My aim is directed against a system which drags down not only the Committee on Rules, but the Senate. The Senate is responsible for the committee and its customs and usages. It has been unjustly said that the Committee on Rules is the graveyard of Senatorial advancement. There is nothing left of a rule when it reaches that committee. There is nothing to inter. The suggestion not only sleeps, not only dies, but it is forgotten. No coffin conceals its wasting form, no urn contains its ashes, no parting words are uttered, no eulogy pronounced. The Committee on Rules is not obtrusive. Its power of annihilation is effectively manifested in silence, serenity, and solemnity. The numerous amendments which have been submitted to this committee at different times have not affected any controlling opinion within its circle. That body has had nothing to say as to the impropriety of the many propositions which the irate and nervous, the dignified and sedate have pressed for consideration.

The committee has not even officially informed us whether its members think that the rules can be improved. We have not been told whether it is desirable to enact a rule to establish that we are present when we are not absent, or whether it is not possibly well that we should repeal a canon of practice which records us absent when we are demonstratively, though it seems unparliamentarily, here. We have not been informed whether it is right to place upon the Journal the presence of a Senator who declares in stentorian tones that he can not be counted because he is paired; who announces that because some one is really abroad he is constructively away. If a Senator should engage another Senator in desperate physical encounter—a supposition purely illustrative—and should in the midst of the mêlée declare himself paired or refuse to answer, he would not be counted, would be considered absent, although he might be expelled because of misconduct in the presence of the Senate while in session. Senators who do not know this body have, when in workful mood and as the result of rosy anticipations of duty performed, transmitted to the Committee on Rules declarations of principles of action which have been recognized as effective and necessary throughout civilization, vainly trusting that the hour for improvement had been reached. Visionary, indeed, are such aspirations; unfruitful such efforts; abortive such exertions. Time disciplines these enthusiastic tyros in Senatorial ways. They finally lapse into a semiacquiescent state. When these rules are changed—and they will be changed—Senators, now young, who tendered these amendments, will stay their tottering steps as they proceed down the pleasant walks of their later lives, and will say, in the uncertainty of the utterances of old age, "Yes, yes; those amendments were proposed long ago, forty or fifty years ago. I made a few remarks concerning them; am glad to see that my sentiments have at last obtained. Singular that it should have taken half a century to induce the Senate to agree with unanimous expression. It has been a little slow—yes, quite slow; quite slow."

IT IS UNNECESSARY TO SEEK PRECEDENTS ABROAD CONCERNING THE DESIRABILITY OF A MORE PRACTICAL SET OF RULES.

We have a home example; a case not only in point, but a teaching, inspiring, chiding, and dominating case—that furnished by the House of Representatives. At the outset of the debate which there led to the final rules of the Fifty-third Congress, precedents were cited to show that there was no necessity for more restrictive forms. Attention was called there, as it is called here, to the truth that our country has managed to get along for a century under old conditions. Undoubtedly the founders of this Government did not consider the obstructionist of to-day. It is unnecessary to ask for the reason. It is sufficient to say that without the change business could not be transacted at all; and hence the good sense of our Representatives brought about the alteration. Although the majority of the party to which I belong denounced Mr. REED for his work with reference to parliamentary matters, it is safe to say that neither party will ever go back to the rules and regulations which have been abandoned. Our Republican friends deserve the credit of the first effective action in the House, though in inaugurating the work they but followed the precedent made by the Senator from New York while he was the presiding officer of the senate of the Empire State. But that party, after loudly proclaiming in justification of its course that it is traitorous to oppose the popularly selected majority, had no sooner been condemned to second place than it immediately adopted dilatory tactics, and with pleasing abandon maintained that until the Democratic majority forced the Republican minority to do its duty the latter was authorized to pursue its natural bent. The best advertised honesty in the Republican Congressional delegation advocated and directed this course. The Republican press applauded it. Republican bosses said: "Go on; your course is bold, but your immorality will demonstrate the need of coercive measures. We will sustain our virtue by insisting upon vice." This programme, faithfully carried out, resulted in the rules which finally prevailed at the other end of the Capitol during the last part of the Fifty-third Congress, and which gave the majority that control which the Constitution contemplates and the public rightfully demands.

It must be understood that I do not favor the House rules. The numerical parliamentary features existing there are not so marked here, and for that reason greater latitude can be allowed. My insistence is that some method shall be devised which will enable the majority, after a rational period, after liberal debate, allowing time which can not without unanimous consent be reduced, to put the previous question, and also to compel the record to speak the truth as to the presence of Senators. I know that no one will insist upon a vote even under these conditions at such an hour or day as will prevent a Senator from fully and fairly expressing himself, and I trust that I am not hoping against hope when I assume that the Senate will some time exercise the power to determine that the reading of Paradise Lost, Webster's Dictionary, Mr. Gladstone's translation of Horace, etc., are not always in order, regardless of the subject under discussion. If such authority exists to-day, either in the Senate or its Presiding Officer, it is not exercised, and yet clearly irrelevant matter has been often projected upon us. The Senator who fathers an address so long that he can not afford to listen to it himself, which, perhaps, he may not have even read or heard read, should not be permitted to procure an enthusiastic colleague to publish it for him while he retires to be refreshed, that he may be able to come again upon the stage and challenge the physical endurance of those whose judgment he does not either hope or seek to affect.

Technical debate is not actual debate in this Chamber. Some one delivers a formal address to-day and it is answered by an equally formal preparation two months hence. The enormous accumulations contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD would, I believe, be greatly reduced, to the benefit of all, if we proceeded upon business principles. Senators have stated here frequently that the number of bills passed by this body shows that the rules are good enough. It must not be forgotten that most of these measures have excited no great interest or active discussion. In such cases no trouble is experienced in obtaining speedy action; but when the great issues—the material matters pertaining to legislation—are before us, the obstructionist becomes omnipotent, and days and days and weeks are wasted. Senators may say that such discussion is not wasted. But no one listens to it. Occasionally some episode induces the public to fill the galleries and Senators to seek the floor; but for the most part the deliberative eloquence mentioned is spoken ineffectively, except in so far as it stops needed legislation.

The House of Representatives more than once has passed a resolution favoring the submission to the several States of a constitutional amendment authorizing the election of Senators by direct vote. For months at a time that resolution has been here. It has been tied up, buried, ignored, sat upon by our preponderating ponderousness. Great interest is taken all over the country in this proposition. Representatives direct from the people have asked that the States be permitted to act upon the matter; but the Senate not only fails to permit such action, but declines to expressly say whether it will or will not submit it. For myself, I am emphatically in favor of the adoption of that constitutional amendment. The issue was submitted to the voters of California in 1892, and the vote stood: For the amendment, 187,958; against, 13,342. It must be understood that I am not blaming anyone in particular. The pernicious results to which I refer are the legitimate offspring of a system that is operative only for harm and that should have been remodeled long, long ago.

I think that we owe something to the public. This body, while not chosen by the popular vote, is, nevertheless, elected by agencies of popular creation. While we are not bound by an initiative or referendum, still we should pay some attention to the desires of those who sent us here. As our Government is based upon the popular idea, we must not deny the long-continued demands of those from whom we have obtained our authority. I do not refer to the expressions of self-constituted newspaper critics, whose views of public conditions are sometimes most selfish and unreliable, but I speak of the actual beliefs of our constituents. I have been in many States of the Union—in large cities and small towns, and in rural districts—during the last two years. I have not discovered one man, woman, or child who favors our prevailing doctrine of legislative paralysis, and the subject has been and is one of constant consideration. In every instance the Senate has been censured and referred to as antique and as constituting more a relic than a life—a thing that has been, rather than a present existence. This situation is not pleasant; it is unfortunate; it is exaggerated and grossly unjust; but the provoking cause is plainly discernible.

The ill which we permit, and against which my words are leveled, is the parent of many of the unfounded attacks from which we suffer. It must not be thought that I believe that any Senator should sacrifice his views of the Constitution, his convictions of duty, to a mere external demand, whether from meetings hastily gathered together, or from more regularly convened bodies, or from newspapers, or from the press generally. These expressions should be duly weighed and should not be thoughtlessly ignored; nevertheless, I will not abandon or advise another to abandon conscience or independence. I am certain that the States here represented want firm as well as true counselors, men of integrity who will not be swerved by threats or flattery or by "the conscious simper and the jealous leer." I do not forget, either, that it often happens that those who criticise possess "a brain of feathers and a heart of lead." Still, while thus holding firmly to our rights and guarding according to our judgment public interests, we must not, as I have stated, fail to respect or consider opinions of those whose servants we are. I think that every cautious person will appreciate that the Constitution contemplates care in the passage of bills, and that that instrument made it practically impossible to enact a law without considerable deliberation. The passage through the House of Representatives of any bill is attended with much discussion.

The Senate was organized upon the long-term idea that it might enjoy greater independence and be subjected less to exciting influences and political flurry. It was thought that when the more popular branch and the Senate united the country would not often have inflicted upon it an unwise law, and that when that occurred an Executive veto would arrest the threatened wrong, and that more than one-third of either body would, when occasion warranted, hasten to the support of the President. These and other safeguards, such as that requiring a roll call when demanded by one-fifth of the members present, were thought ample, and are, in my judgment, entirely adequate. There may be possible exceptions, but rules well conceived are not predicated upon exceptions. No one concerned in the making of the Constitution apprehended that a second veto power, or, rather, the authority to extinguish by protracted torture, resided in the minority of the Senate. No such bill destroyer was called to the attention of the fathers. They no more anticipated that a Senator would filibuster against a vote than we look for a filibuster by a minority of the Supreme Court against a judgment of that court when attempted to be announced through the majority. But opinions of official responsibility have changed since then. In this epoch the Senatorial parliamentarian invokes as many quibbles as the most erudite professor of any class.

We should not forget the usually correct proposition expressed by Gibbon:

All that is human must retrograde if it do not advance.

I understand the solicitude of those of my associates who fear that a change of rules just now will emphasize Republican influence in this body; but my remarks have been of no avail if I have not shown that the objections to the procedure of the Senate which I have urged are not conceived in partisanship, but arise from a deliberately formed judgment that the public welfare is involved and that it is imperative that attention should be paid to the well-grounded and universal demand for the adoption of an improved plan. The party advocate may and should be patriotic, but he does not rise above the level of selfishness if he insists upon saddling a parliamentary incubus upon an already heavily burdened body solely because he thinks that the majority, whose power is born of the people, may under prevailing conditions be unable to exercise the authority thus solemnly intrusted to their keeping without the intervention of technical obstruction.

Our rules should be reasonable, in harmony with the period for which we legislate and the civilization of which we partake. Let us have ample argument, but not argument lasting long after all have ceased to listen. Let us protect the minority, but permit the majority to assert their manifest privilege. Let no Senator openly avow his presence and place the same upon the record and then aver that he may not be counted as part of a quorum. Give to all wide latitude in debate, but do not refuse to call a Senator to order who willfully deserts his subject and consumes the time allotted thereto in the consideration of matter wholly foreign and palpably irrelevant. The star of progress glows with increased brightness. He who stands with sleepy visage, uncertain of his duty, is mischosen to place. Reverence for the great and gone should ever be cherished, but the examples of these have been given without profit if we do not move with rapid as with thoughtful step in the performance of the duties of an evolutionary age.

SILVER COINAGE AND COIN REDEMPTION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2904) to maintain and protect the coin redemption fund and to authorize the issue of certificates of indebtedness to meet temporary deficiencies of revenue, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That from and after the passage of this act the mints of the United States shall be open to the coinage of silver, and there shall be coined dollars of the weight of 412½ grains troy, of standard silver, nine-tenths fine, as provided by the act of January 18, 1837, and upon the same terms and subject to the limitations and provisions of law regulating the coinage and legal-tender quality of gold; and whenever the said coins herein provided for shall be received into the Treasury, certificates may be issued therefor in the manner now provided by law.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall coin into standard silver dollars, as soon as practicable, according to the provisions of section 1 of this act, from the silver bullion purchased under authority of the act of July 14, 1890, entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes," that portion of said silver bullion which represents the seigniorage or profit to the Government, to wit, the difference between the cost of the silver purchased under said act and its coinage value, and said silver dollars so coined shall be used in the payment of the current expenses of the Government; and for the purpose of making the said seigniorage immediately available for use as money, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue silver certificates against it, as if it was already coined and in the Treasury.

SEC. 3. That no national-bank note shall be hereafter issued of a denomination less than $10, and all notes of such banks now outstanding of denominations less than that sum shall be, as rapidly as practicable, taken up, redeemed, and canceled, and notes of $10 and larger denominations shall be issued in their stead under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency,

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem the United States notes, commonly called "greenbacks," and also the Treasury notes issued under the provisions of the act of July 14, 1890, when presented for redemption, in standard silver dollars or in gold coin, using for redemption of said notes either gold or silver coins, or both, not at the option of the holder, but exclusively at the option of the Treasury Department, and said notes, commonly called "greenbacks," when so redeemed, shall be reissued as provided by the act of May 31, 1878.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, the bill under consideration, as it came from the House of Representatives, provided for the issue of bonds for the redemption of the United States notes commonly called greenbacks, and for the issue of certificates of indebtedness of the United States to provide for any deficiency now existing or that may hereafter exist in the Treasury.

It is claimed, I believe, that this bill was framed and passed through the House in response to the wishes of the President of the United States. It is also said that the bill is entirely unsatisfactory to the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, from the fact that the bonds provided for are not specifically payable in gold. It seems that the President considers the Treasury in an unsatisfactory, if not in a critical, condition. The majority of the Finance Committee of this body believe that the financial condition of the people generally is anything but what it should be, and we regard it as the first duty binding on the consciences of members of Congress to undertake to provide a remedy for the widespread distress now existing through the country, especially if it is in any sense the result of Congressional action. If a condition of reasonable prosperity can be restored among the masses of the people there will be no difficulty whatever about the condition of the Treasury. The present deficiency results, in our opinion, from the much greater evil of the unsatisfactory condition of the people. The bill amended as proposed by us will, we firmly believe, bring this relief, and for that reason we urgently urge its passage by the Senate.

The amendment proposed to the bill is in the following words:

To strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That from and after the passage of this act the mints of the United States shall be open to the coinage of silver, and there shall be coined dollars of the weight of 412½ grains troy, of standard silver, nine-tenths fine, as provided by the act of January 18, 1837, and upon the same terms and subject to the limitations and provisions of law regulating the coinage and legal-tender quality of gold; and whenever the said coins herein provided for shall be received into the Treasury, certificates may be issued therefor in the manner now provided by law.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall coin into standard silver dollars, as soon as practicable, according to the provisions of section 1 of this act, from the silver bullion purchased under authority of the act of July 14, 1890, entitled 'An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes,' that portion of said silver bullion which represents the seigniorage or profit to the Government, to wit, the difference between the cost of the silver purchased under said act and its coinage value, and said silver dollars so coined shall be used in the payment of the current expenses of the Government; and for the purpose of making the said seigniorage immediately available for use as money, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue silver certificates against it, as if it was already coined and in the Treasury.

"SEC. 3. That no national-bank note shall be hereafter issued of a denomination less than $10, and all notes of such banks now outstanding of denominations less than that sum shall be, as rapidly as practicable, taken up, redeemed, and canceled, and notes of $10 and larger denominations shall be issued in their stead under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency.

"SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem the United States notes, commonly called 'greenbacks,' and also the Treasury notes issued under the provisions of the act of July 14, 1890, when presented for redemption, in standard silver dollars or in gold coin, using for redemption of said notes either gold or silver coins, or both, not at the option of the holder, but exclusively at the option of the Treasury Department, and said notes, commonly called 'greenbacks,' when so redeemed, shall be reissued as provided by the act of May 31, 1878."

It would seem that the advocates of a single gold standard regard the issue of bonds as a panacea for every ill, that with them it is a remedy ready in every emergency. No matter what financial difficulty is to be met, an issue of bonds is at once and promptly proposed. Those who think as I do, on the contrary, look upon them as an unmitigated evil, especially as they have been and are now about to be issued. An issue of bonds is doubtless a boon to that small class of persons who have large incomes, which they have not the knowledge, industry, or courage to use profitably, who long for investments upon which they may draw interest without any greater labor than clipping coupons; but to no other class is an issue of bonds desirable.

It is true that the Government is not collecting as much revenue just at this time as is needed, and some steps should be taken to provide for the deficiency. The Secretary of the Treasury, however, in his official report, shows that this deficiency will be temporary and not continue beyond a few months.

The amendment proposed by the committee, if enacted into law, will amply provide for this, for the issue of about fifty millions of silver certificates against the seigniorage now held in bars in the Treasury is one of its features, while the deficiency estimated by Mr. Carlisle is far below that sum. A sale of bonds, as proposed by the House, could accomplish no good result, and, in my opinion, would be productive of much evil.

The issue of bonds can not alter existing conditions, and the causes which have brought about the present situation will speedily bring about like results and another sale of bonds will soon be just as necessary as this, and this "endless chain" of bond sales might continue until a thousand millions had been sold, and yet we would be no nearer a solution of the difficulties which encompass us than we are now. In fact, the President in his last annual message to Congress says, after issuing a hundred and sixty millions of bonds, that, at that time (the beginning of this session), to use his language, "we are nearly where we started;" and we will continue indefinitely to be "nearly where we started" under the system proposed by the House of Representatives or the President.

There was a time when, with a much smaller population and much less wealth than we now have, we had no difficulties in the Treasury—no deficiency of revenue, and what was of much more consequence, no distress among the people. If the causes which produce the present difficulties with the people can be removed we certainly will return to the old condition of prosperity and happiness. It would seem that there should be no difficulty in finding out what changes have occurred and in ascertaining beyond question the cause of our present troubles. There must be something radically wrong somewhere if the richest and freest nation on the globe is in such a condition of absolute helplessness and dependence as the President of the United States seems to consider us now.

In this country the people are the source not only of all power, but also of all wealth and prosperity. When they are prosperous, business will flourish, all branches of commerce will be active, and no financial difficulties will come to the Treasury except as the result of insufficient revenue laws; but no revenue system, no matter how wisely or judiciously framed, can provide revenue unless there is commerce and active business. A time of industrial depression and commercial stagnation must be and ought to be a time of embarrassment for the Government.

The laws we now have on the statute books will, with the revival of business, provide ample revenue. The change needed is not in the revenue laws, but in the financial condition of the people at large. Whatever embarrassments the Government may now have to encounter are the result of the depressed condition of all branches of business and the unsatisfactory condition of the people generally. If we can devise a means of relieving these, there will be no difficulty about the condition of the Government or of the revenues. The conditions of distress not only in this country, but in England, Germany, and France, the great nations of the world, will not be denied by anyone. There were more business failures in numbers and amount during the year 1895 in the United States than there were in the panic year of 1893; there were a million acres less of corn planted in Great Britain in 1895 than in 1894, thus throwing out of employment, it is said, 30,000 laborers.

The following is from the Daily Telegraph of a recent date:

On Tuesday, November 26 last, an estate known as Scotland farm, situate about 11 miles from Salisbury, and containing 501 acres of light but healthy sheep and corn land, with good farmhouse and substantial buildings, was sold at auction by Messrs. Waters & Rawlings, of Salisbury, for the sum of £1,640. In 1879 the same estate was bought for £7,000, and at that time it was considered very cheap. Since then a considerable sum has been expended on improvements.

How does it happen that in a time of profound peace all over the world, with abundant harvests, with no pestilence or other such calamity, such a condition of things can exist? No local cause can account for it, for it embraces all the greatest nations in the world. There must be some cause operating in all these countries to cause such widespread distress, uniform in character. That cause seems clearly to be the falling prices which has cursed and blasted this country for twenty years. The evil effects of such a condition need no proof. It is clear to the mind of any man that such a condition is burdensome to any business, and has been so recognized by writers on political economy from the beginning.

David Hume long since wrote that—

If prices rise, everything takes a new face; labor and industry gain life; the merchant becomes more enterprising, the manufacturer more diligent and skillful, and even the farmer follows his plow with greater alacrity and attention. If prices fall, the poverty, beggary, and sloth that must ensue are easily foreseen.

It is a principle well recognized that falling prices operate as a redistribution of wealth in favor of the rich and that rising prices operate as a redistribution of wealth in favor of the poor.

J. R. MacCulloch said that "while cases of individual hardship may arise, a progressive depreciation of money is like a fall of rain after a long drought, beneficial to incomparably the larger part of society, and it is of great public and national advantage," and I believe that the advantage which has come to the masses of men from a steadily and gradually increasing volume of money, decreasing its value and enhancing prices, has done more to advance civilization, to build up mankind, to implant a love of liberty and independence in them, than any other one existing human agency; that it has been of more material and substantial benefit to mankind than all the wars and revolutions which have occurred in the name of liberty.

Of course every fall of prices is not an evil. A fall which results from improved methods of production, or from improved and cheapened transportation, is a blessing and brings prosperity to producers, while it showers its blessings upon consumers. Improvements in the methods of producing cotton and woolen goods have clothed the world in comfort and elegance. While the manufacturers have grown in wealth, power, and influence, the industry has attained a magnitude which would have been impossible under the old clumsy and costly methods.

E. Benjamin Andrews, president of Brown University, speaking of this distinction, uses this language:

Falling costs imply prosperity, high interest and dividends, good wages and profits, few strikes and lockouts, rapidly multiplying industrial undertakings, and rapidly increasing wealth, none of which features characterize the world's economic life since 1873.

And again he says:

It is my belief that if general costs had fallen since 1873 as gold prices have fallen, these twenty years, which have been so lean, would not only have matched the fat decades preceding, but would have formed industrially, economically, and in respect to every interest of civilization the most splendid era in human history.

The world is at last learning that the highest and best means of production, whether of men or machines, is the cheapest and most economical. Prices cheapened by these improved methods is an advance in civilization, adds to and stimulates business, brings men to a higher level, awakens new ideas, and stimulates new ambitions. But such agencies radically affect only the particular branch of manufacture directly interested, and a few others which are incidentally related to it; they can not have an effect on general prices; improved methods of cotton manufacture will not affect the prices of locomotives; cheap shoes will not make cheap books.

There is, however, one commodity which, when affected in its value, necessarily affects all other things in the world, in all countries, and among all civilized people, to wit, money. Suppose money to be doubled in value suddenly, it would take then just one-half as much of it to buy any given article as it would have taken before the rise in its value; what would before have cost $1 would then cost 50 cents, because the 50 cents is worth as much as the dollar was before. This rise in the value of money then would find its expression, its visible manifestation, in a fall of general prices to 50 per cent of their former scale, while money would remain nominally just as it was before; and the superficial observer might think, and a modern gold bug would be sure to think, that this change in prices had resulted from overproduction and improvements in methods of production and transportation, and not in the change in the value of money.

It is often the case that there are two causes operating at the same time and in opposite directions, and that these counteract each other to some extent. For instance, suppose the value of money doubled as already suggested; this would tend to divide the price of cotton, for instance; but suppose at the same time, as was the fact last year, that there should be produced one-half of an ordinary crop of cotton. Under normal conditions this falling off in the crop would tend to double the price, while the increased value of money would tend to reduce it 50 per cent. These two causes operating in different directions against each other would have a tendency to keep cotton at its old value. It would not fall by reason of the scarcity of money; it would not advance by reason of the shortness of crop, but remain at the old price. But the two causes operating in directly opposite directions with exactly equal force would paralyze each other, leaving the price of cotton where it had been before. The two evils of an increase in the value of money and a short crop would both be borne by the community, though the effects of both might be hidden. This was practically the condition during the fall of 1895.

It seems to me to be as clear as a demonstration that the legislation of 1873 has had the effect to double the value of money, and that it has steadily grown in value since the passage of that act and will continue to do so until it is repealed. Supply and demand regulate values, and this rule applies just as certainly to money as it does to any other commodity.

I take the following apt illustration of this from page 24 of The Distribution of Wealth by Money, by John W. Miller, of England:

Wheat and rye are both used on the Continent of Europe as food, and though we ourselves use only one of these, viz, wheat, it can not be said that the value of wheat is totally independent of the use of rye. Suppose, for example, that a law was passed compelling the people of Europe to dispense with rye and compelling them to use wheat. Would not that affect the value of wheat? Would it not change the condition of wheat relative to demand? The position of the money metals, silver and gold, was precisely similar. We used gold as our money, and the people of Europe used both silver and gold, which were exchangeable in France through the medium of the French mint at the fixed coinage ratio of 15½ to 1. The closing of the French mint in 1873 dispensed with the use of silver and compelled the use of gold throughout. As in the case of the example, if the supply of rye was short the demand would fall upon wheat, or a full supply of rye would lessen the demand for wheat; so if there was a full supply of silver gold would be released and participate in the less demand, while if there was a short supply of silver gold would likewise be affected, and vice versa.

It is a matter of universal observation that when money is plenty business is active and prices are high, and when money is scarce business is stagnant and prices are low. Of course, high prices is the same thing as cheap money and low prices is only another form of expression for saying that money is high.

John Locke said long ago:

For the value of money in general is the quantity of all the money in the world in proportion to all the trade.

And John Stuart Mill much more recently said:

That an increase in the quantity of money raises prices and a diminution lowers them is the most elementary proposition in the theory of coinage, and without it we should have no key to any of the others.

This is but the scientific recognition of a truth which is self-evident.

That the adoption of either gold or silver alone as the standard of value, when the entire sum of both gold and silver had always theretofore been such standard, would by its lessened volume have the effect to increase its value and inevitably to produce a disastrous fall in prices was known and fully understood long before the action of 1873.

Hon. R. M. T. Hunter, of Virginia, at that time chairman of the Committee on Finance, in a report made to the Senate on March 8, 1852, used the following language:

But the mischief would be great indeed if all the world were to adopt but one of the precious metals as the standard of value. To adopt gold alone would diminish the specie currency more than one-half, and the reduction the other way, should silver be taken as the only standard, would be large enough to prove highly disastrous to the human race. Indeed, a reference to the history of the precious metals and the general course of human production can scarcely fail to convince us that there has been a constant tendency to appréciate their value, as compared with the residue of the property of the world, and that every extraordinary increase of the supply of the precious metals of which we have any account has exercised a highly beneficial effect upon human affairs. When contracts are made by a standard which is constantly contracting, the advantages are on the side of capital as against labor, and productive energy is cramped by receiving less than a fair share of the profits of the enterprise. Before the invention of substitutes for payment in coin, and before the increased supply of specie from the discovery of America, human history is full of the strifes between debtor and creditor, and human legislation is rife with experiments to limit the encroaching and engrossing power of capital. The most ancient legislation of which we have authentic account extinguished all debts every seventh year. Interest was often prohibited and generally regarded with abhorrence, for although the reason was not perceived, yet the fact was felt that capital received profit enough for its use in the appreciation of the value of the standard.

On page 9 of the same report he uses this language:

We require, then, for this reason the double standard of gold and silver, but above all do we require both to counteract the tendency of the specie standard to contract under the vast increase of the value of property of the world. And what harm can arise from any probable increase in the precious metals if both are allowed to swell the volume of currency? On the contrary, a more beneficial event for the trade, the industry, the moral and political condition of the world could scarcely be imagined. Of all the great effects produced upon human society by the discovery of America there were probably none so marked as those brought about by the great influx of the precious metals from the New World to the Old. European industry had been declining under the decreasing stock of precious metals and an appreciating standard of value. Human ingenuity grew dull under the paralyzing influences of declining profits, and capital absorbed nearly all that should have been divided between it and labor. But an increase of the precious metal in such quantities as to check this tendency operated as a new motive power to the machinery of commerce.

Production was stimulated by finding the advantages of a change in the standard upon its side. Instead of being repressed by having to pay more than it had stipulated for the the use of capital, it was stimulated by paying less. Capital, too, was benefited, for new demands were created for it by the new uses which a general movement in industrial pursuits had developed; so that if it lost a little by a change in the standard it gained much more in the greater demand for its use which added to its capacity for reproduction and to its real value. Property which had been acquired by the strong arm and accumulated in violation of the great laws of equity and trade, by an almost insensible transition, was distributed more equally in society. Nature, under the operation of this its great bankrupt law as if by an invisible hand loosened the bonds of the debtor, which heretofore time had continually tightened, and distributed to labor for purposes of reproduction and upon equitable terms capital which distrust and apathy had either locked up or administered with a too sparing hand. New influences arose in society and a new impulse was given to its movements.

In the present stage of the world we may, perhaps, no more expect any event to produce such rapid transformations in society. But we might reasonably look for something like the same consequences from a similar event. Any system, either of violence or law, which distributes property improperly and unjustly and which gives a false direction to the great stream of productive industry will in the end produce throes and convulsions in the bosom of society. Unless human skill such as is rarely if ever known intervenes to give the true direction to affairs, or unless nature interferes through the silent operation of her laws to remove inequalities and repair injustice, violence is almost sure to be used to make a change if it can not apply a remedy. The recent discovery of vast auriferous deposits on the globe would seem to mark the approach of one of those great eras in human affairs when the hand of nature is more obvious than that of man in producing changes.

Thus we see that it was clearly stated by the Finance Committee of this body twenty years before the act of 1873 that to adopt either one of the metals as the standard of value to the exclusion of the other would, by reducing the volume of money, enormously decrease prices, bring great hardship and distress on the world, and prevent the beneficial effects which ought to follow from a natural increase in the production of the precious metals.

A fall in the bullion price of silver absolutely necessitates one of two things, either silver prices must advance in silver countries or gold prices are bound to decline in gold countries. This can not be avoided. It is as absolute as the law of the Medes and Persians, and it is no more absolute to-day than it was in 1873 and has been each year from then until now, and will continue to be for all time to come. To illustrate, suppose 412½ grains of silver to be worth a dollar all over the world, as it was in 1873 and had been practically always, and that wheat in Minnesota and India is worth a dollar a bushel. Suppose, then, a sudden decline in the value of silver of 50 per cent. This would of course necessitate either a doubling in the value of wheat in India and making a bushel cost 825 grains of silver, or else wheat in Minnesota would be reduced to 50 cents a bushel. Fifty cents in gold would buy 412½ grains of silver, which would be the amount with which a bushel of wheat could be bought in India. If there was no advance in the price there, this fact would fix absolutely the price of Minnesota wheat.

Of course the price in Minnesota must come down to the level of the gold value of the silver necessary to buy in India. It is a principle recognized in political economy everywhere that it is easier to bring prices down than it is to carry them up. This being the case, it was perfectly natural that when the legislation of 1873 was adopted which necessitated a reduction in the value of silver bullion, that this entailed beyond question the fall of prices which has occurred between then and now; and yet we find advocates of the gold standard blindly shutting their eyes to the fact that the reduction in the price of silver bullion is the cause of the decline of gold prices, and many of them still deny it. This can not remain so. The inseparable connection between the two is too strong and too manifest to remain long out of the sight of any thinking man.

Taking two tables which were published in the proceedings of the Royal Statistical Society of London during the last summer, one by Mr. Barr Robinson and the other by Mr. Probyn, it may be roughly stated that of the fifteen hundred million people in the world, 375,000,000 are gold-using people and eleven hundred and twenty-five millions silver-using people. These figures will show how utterly impossible it is for any decline in silver bullion to occur anywhere which does not effect either an advance of prices among all the eleven hundred and twenty-five million people who use silver, or a decline of prices in the less than 400,000,000 who use gold, and when we consider the sharp competition and the tendency to "bear" prices, it is not surprising that the reduction of gold prices and not the advance of silver prices has been the result. It is a fact notorious that there has been no advance in silver prices in silver-using countries, and as there must be the one or the other, the decline in gold prices was absolutely inevitable and unavoidable. Everyone admits that it is extremely desirable to maintain a practically uniform level of general prices.

To maintain such a level of prices it would be absolutely necessary that as the volume of commerce increased as the demand for and uses of money increased the volume of money should increase in exactly the same proportion. Now, everyone knows how marvelously rapid has been the development of all commerce during the last century, and it is perfectly clear that there never was a time when there was a demand for so large an increase in the volume of money as during the last twenty years. It seems that it would be physically impossible to have an increase in the volume of metallic money to at all correspond with the wonderful development of commerce which has occurred under the use of steam and the general appliances of modern civilization.

The ingenuity of men has compensated in some degree for this inability of nature to keep up with the increase of commerce in the production of metallic money by providing means of facilitating the use of money by bank checks, bills of exchange, etc., which, of course, supplement the volume, tending to maintain a just parity between the volume of money and the demand for it. When the volume of business and the use and demand for money increase more rapidly in proportion than the volume of money—the supply of money—the value of money must necessarily increase relatively. A smaller amount of it than before will perform the same office, although there may be at the same time an actual increase in the volume of money. The marvelous development of commerce and business all over the world since the close of the Napoleonic wars has been wonderful, and this taking place so much more rapidly than the increase in the volume of money necessarily increased the value of both gold and silver. This increase was estimated by Jevons to be 145 per cent between 1809 and 1846. Thousands of men are now living who remember the distressing times existing just before the discovery of gold in California.

Sir James Graham, of Netherby, writing of that time, said:

The bitter fruit of the system was tasted by all classes. I am in error when I say all, for amid the ruin of the farmer, the manufacturer, the distress of landlords in the insurrection of a populace without bread and without employment, one class flourished and was triumphant—the annuitant, the tax eater, rejoiced in the increased value of money and in the sacrifice of productive industry to unproductive wealth, in the victory of the drones over the bees.

That condition, like this, was not confined to any one country. Great Britain's statesmen stood appalled in the presence of that overwhelming trouble, and no solution seemed to present itself to their minds except emigration. The decreased volume of money in proportion to the volume of business was so great and so sharp as to bring about exactly the condition of things that exists now, and the similarity between the two periods is recognized again and again, and has often been commented upon by a leading advocate of the gold standard. How any man can shut his eyes to the fact that exactly the same cause, to wit, a reduction in the volume of money in proportion to trade, has brought about these results is beyond my comprehension. As soon as gold was discovered in California and Australia and it began to find its way into the channels of trade and commerce the distress passed away, and the most marvelous prosperity succeeded it. Business sprung up and developed as it had never done before in the history of the world, and amid the universal shouts of a happy and prosperous people were drowned the complaints of the only class who suffered by this great change.

Those who had reaped the benefits of the steady increase in the value of money from 1809 to 1846 from its failure to increase as rapidly in volume as commerce had increased fully saw and understood the advantages which had come to them from this lessening supply of money in proportion to trade, and the fact was never lost sight of by them. They fully understood that the beneficence of Almighty God and the industry of man had given to the world a sufficient supply of gold and silver to defeat the usurers in their game of consuming the wealth and labor of the world by the unearned increase in the value of their money. It was clear that there was no way to reduce the supply of metal which Providence had placed in the mountains, and there was no way to prevent the strong arms of the miners from bringing it up. The only chance left to them then was to create an artificial scarcity of money if they were ever to bring back the old conditions of robbery by law—the old conditions of hard times and distress which was their harvest. When nature and industry had provided abundance, scarcity could only be produced by legislation to strike down one metal and limit the money function as far as possible to the other.

This crime was consummated in 1873. From the day that that law unfortunately became operative it has carried into execution the purposes which these conspirators had in view. The volume of money, lessening not absolutely, but in proportion to the volume of trade, has of necessity continually increased the value of money, and by this hidden, unseen, and covert means confiscation of the property of the masses for the benefit of these individuals has been and is being accomplished, and this condition of things must and will continue so long as the laws remain as they are now. The causes which have operated to produce the present results will continue their operation in the same line. Prices which have been in the last twenty years reduced, say, 50 per cent will in the next twenty years be reduced 50 per cent more.

Before 1873 the coin and bullion value of both gold and silver were practically the same. Since that time the bullion value as well as the coinage value of gold has enormously increased, while silver practically remained steady, at least up to 1893, although excluded from the mints and denied its money function. Up to 1893, when the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act was forced through Congress and when England arbitrarily closed the mints of India to the coinage of silver, there was no decline in the real value of that metal; it was worth as much, would buy as much, of any one of the thousands of articles of commerce all over the world, even in the United States and in Great Britain, as it would in 1873 and before. It was only since these two blows, delivered by the two great Anglo-Saxon peoples of the world, that silver has actually declined in value. I insert here a table, taken from the Bimetallist, an English publication, which illustrates this point:

Webster defines a standard to be "that which is established by a sovereign power as a rule or measure by which others are to be adjusted." Accuracy and inflexibility in a standard is demanded by common honesty. It has been demanded from the earliest times by all human laws. Holy Writ is full of injunctions that measures shall be just. The great importance attached to exactness in measures is illustrated by the history of the yard measure in Great Britain. In 1760 a standard yard was constructed under the direction of a committee of the House of Commons, consisting of a solid brass bar about an inch square. At about 1½ inches from each end a gold pin or stud was inserted, in which pins at the distance of 36 inches are two points intended to designate the length of the yard. The language of the law adopting this standard is as follows:

The straight line or distance between the centers of the two points in the gold studs in the brass rods now in the custody of the clerk of the House of Commons, whereon the words and figures "standard yard, 1760," are engraved, shall be, and the same is hereby, declared to be the original and genuine standard of that measure of length or lineal extension called a yard; and that the same straight line or distance between the centers of the said two points in the said gold stud in the said brass rod, the brass being at a temperature of 62° Fahrenheit thermometer, shall be, and is hereby, denominated the imperial standard yard, and shall be, and is hereby, declared to be the unit or only standard measure of extension.

This standard came up for examination and consideration later, and it was reported that the mean diameter of each of the holes was nearly one-hundredth of an inch, and they by no means presented anything like a circular shape; that in fact not only did different persons differ in their estimates of the centers, but the same persons also differed at different times according to the degree and direction of the light that impinged on the sides of the holes, and the report of Mr. Bailey adds:

How the legislature of the present day, when the art of making mathematical instruments has arrived at such a state of perfection, could have sanctioned the adoption of such an imperfect and undefinable measure as this for a standard must always be a matter of astonishment.

This variation in the length of a yard, we notice, in the opinion of Mr. Bailey, might possibly have resulted in so great a variation as the one-hundredth part of 1 inch. Thus we see that in Mr. Bailey's opinion it is possible there might have been a variation in the length of a yard measure amounting to one thirty-six hundredth part of its length, and he expresses profound astonishment that such an "imperfect and undefinable" and uncertain measure should have been adopted.

We have a measure of value which is certainly open to Mr. Bailey's criticism of being "uncertain and undefinable." While he was astonished at a possible variation of a one thirty-six hundredth of a unit of length, we maintain a measure of value which has doubled in twenty years, and instead of this being a matter of "astonishment" to our wise men, it is freely intimated that a man who thinks that this is not right is a lunatic, if not a thief. An uncertain measure of length, all will admit, is wrong, with even so small a variation as this, but a measure of value which fluctuates thirty-six hundred times as much is considered "sound." Why this should be so I can not imagine, unless it be because it only robs the "bees" to benefit the "drones." For such a "sound" measure I have only contempt.

Our fluctuation in this most important of standards is already thirty-six hundred times as great as the largest possible fluctuation which could have occurred in the measure of length, and which produced such "astonishment" in the mind and conscience of Mr. Bailey, and yet we have intelligent men insisting that our honor as a nation is pledged to maintain this marvelous and constantly increasing discrepancy in our most important of all standards, the standard of value.

Brande says:

No precise notion can be formed of the magnitude of a line in any other way than by comparing it with another line of a known length.

When we undertake to measure a standard of value we find great difficulty, owing to the fact that there is no one thing by which we can measure it, as in the case of measure of length or weight. In an effort to devise a steady measure of values many suggestions have been made and many theories advanced. The same high authority, Brande, speaking of this subject, says:

The value of money or its power of exchange for buying other things should be as invariable as possible or should change only by slow degree * * * and the money of any country may be said to be good or bad according to the degree in which it possesses or wants these qualities.

Mr. Gladstone himself says that—

The standard of value, which is the great unit of exchange, is itself a commodity, and, being such, is itself subject to fluctuation. Such fluctuation is economically an evil, and any wisely governed state should seek to have for its standard of value the commodity which is least subject to fluctuation. That commodity, as I conceive it, is gold.

Without having stability of value itself, money as a measure of value is a cheat and a fraud. Exactness, inflexibility in standards of weight, quantity, and length are insisted on to a nicety, and, of course, the reasons are much stronger why a standard of value should be even more so.

Tried by these scientific tests, which must commend themselves to the judgment and consciences of honest men everywhere, was there ever a money, a standard of value so bad as gold, and does it approach silver in point of goodness, in point of honesty, in point of integrity, and steadiness? It certainly does not. How far, then, does this single standard fall below the double standard of both gold and silver? Even so pronounced and eminent a monometallist as Mr. Leslie C. Probyn, only a few months ago, in a prize essay in favor of monometallism, which was passed upon and approved by Lord Farrar, had the frankness to say explicitly:

It must be admitted that so far silver has proved a more stable measure of value than gold, but too much importance should not be attached to this point.

How could too much importance be attached to the point of stability of value in a "measure of value" in the mind of any just and honest man? In this same prize essay, speaking of what might have been the effect if England had become a member of the Latin Union, Mr. Probyn uses the following remarkable language, to which I beg leave to call the special attention of the Senate:

Greater stability of value between the British standard and commodities generally might have been secured, the fall in British prices might to a great extent have been prevented, uniformity between the monetary standards of England and her dependencies and the principal countries of the world might have been secured. But it is believed that these results would have been obtained by the sacrifice of a tried standard of value, which, though it does not happen to have been so stable, is for many reasons better than the silver standard, and by a breach of faith being sanctioned which would have benefited debtors at the expense of their creditors; that there would have been no sufficient security for the permanence of the new arrangement; that the fall in prices which has occurred is not really injurious to the nation; and that uniformity between the monetary standards of England and her dependencies (though it has not) might have been, and might now be, secured without a departure from the gold standard.

Steadiness of value in the measure of value seems to be but a secondary consideration with this champion of monometallism. What quality it is which would, in his opinion, be more desirable than steadiness of value is not stated, but I think it will appear later on.

Twenty years of actual test has demonstrated the correctness of the position occupied by Hunter and demonstrates that the unavoidable effect of the suspension of the coinage of silver was and must continue to be a persistent fall in general prices. The question presented for our consideration is, will we continue a system which has resulted so disastrously to every interest of ours, or will we correct the mistake of 1873, reenact the coinage law of 1837, under which the country was prosperous, restore justice and equity among the people, and make the country once more prosperous? The monometallists themselves will not have the hardihood to assert that there is anything so sacred about 25.8 grains of standard gold as to make it always the measure of value without regard to its own value. Its inherent weakness as a measure of value is so palpable that even the strongest advocates of monometallism can not defend it.

Mr. Horr, who was selected, I believe, by the bankers and the capitalists of New York to be sent to Chicago to engage in debate with Mr. Harvey during last summer, said, on page 222 of the authorized report of that debate:

The real measure of value is human toil.

Mr. Loughlin, who is authority with monometallists, is quoted as saying in a recent work on political economy that—

A long contract, like a government or railroad bond, ought not to be settled by paying back the amount of gold or silver borrowed, but by giving the lender that sum which would, at the time of payment, purchase the amount of commodities for which the money loaned could have been exchanged at the time it passed from the lender to the borrower.

In other words, "human toil."

Is this true? If so, gold can not be a just measure. Accept this as true, and there can be no stronger condemnation of the existing condition of things than inevitably results from the application of this suggested standard of value. Let us examine this one moment. It required the same labor to produce a bale of cotton in 1895 that it required to produce it in 1865; the same amount of "human toil" is represented by a bale of cotton now that it represented then.

On page 8 of An Honest Dollar, by E. Benjamin Andrews, president of Brown University, I find the statement made that the national debt on September 1, 1865, amounted to about two and three-quarters billions of dollars, and that at that time it would have taken 18,000,000 bales of cotton (the human toil represented in 18,000,000 bales of cotton) to have paid the whole debt, and that after this debt had been reduced to a billion and a quarter—in other words, after there had been a payment of 55 per cent of the entire debt and all the interest due—it would have required 30,000,000 bales of cotton (the human toil represented in 30,000,000 bales of cotton) to have paid the balance, or 45 per cent of the original debt. If Messrs. Horr and Loughlin, both monometallists, are correct, if "human toil" is the measure of value, how can any honest man insist that there is any semblance of justice in compelling the payment of twice as much of "human toil" in the shape of cotton on a bond now as it would have taken to pay it when it was issued.

In an address made by President Andrews before the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, which was published on the motion of Senator COCKRELL as a document by this body, this statement is made: Between 1870 and 1884 the public debt decreased not far from three-quarters of a billion of dollars, say seven hundred and fifty millions. Yet if we take wheat, corn, beef, oats, coal, cotton, and bar iron together as a standard—and they make not a bad standard—the debt did not decrease, but increased not less than 50 per cent. Mr. Horr's standard, then, of human toil "shows distinctly that the burdens of the people have been enormously increased by the silent and unseen operation of unjust laws which do not deserve longer to disgrace the statute books of this great Republic." The era of a lessening volume of money from the coming of Christ to Columbus was one of growing ignorance, tyranny, degradation; it was a period of retrogression, notwithstanding the power of the Christian religion which had just been revealed to man. When an increasing money supply created commerce, aroused mankind, stimulated ambition, created civilization, which in time widened into a system of education and enlightenment, it showed itself to be the most powerful aid to the great cause of Christianity, and more good, more advancement, was accomplished in the four centuries succeeding the discovery of the gold and silver mines in America by the Spaniards than was accomplished in all of the fifteen centuries preceding it. The constantly decreasing value of money proved a great blessing to mankind, perhaps more than compensating for the injuries which had been entailed by the opposite condition of a constantly decreasing volume of money during the first fifteen centuries of the Christian era.

The evils which have been the direct result of taking away the money function from silver in 1873 it seems but natural to suppose would be immediately removed by a restoration of those functions and that this would bring about the condition of prosperity that existed prior to that time. A natural and simple remedy for whatever bad results have come from the legislation of 1873 would seem to be the repeal of that legislation. It was an experiment. Nothing like it had ever been tried before. Its results have been disastrous in the extreme. They have been beneficial in no single respect, and it seems that by common consent we should as promptly as possible undo the entire work.

We are so conservative as a people that it is impossible to get prompt action on any strongly contested political question. The long struggle over the tariff is an illustration of this. Ever since I have been in public life we have been persistently making efforts to repeal the act of 1873, and although we have more than once passed free-silver bills here they have been defeated elsewhere; but I hope and believe that success is not to be much longer delayed.

Both of the great political parties have again and again declared themselves in favor of bimetallism. No national convention of any party has ever declared itself in favor of a single standard, either of gold or silver, and no convention, in my opinion, ever will. The great body of those who declare themselves sound-money men say that they are in favor of international bimetallism. Almost everybody in this country admits that if the United States, England, Germany, and France should agree to open their mints to the unlimited coinage of silver at 15½ to 1 or 16 to 1 that silver would at once resume its old value, and that the conditions of general prosperity existing prior to 1873 would be at once and permanently restored. Nobody would suffer wrong—even the bondholders would get their own, with interest. True, they would fail to get double what they are entitled to by the terms of the contract, as they now think, perhaps, that they are sure to do, and as they will do without some change in the present laws, but surely this fact is not an objection. The world would once more be prosperous, and civilization and the arts of peace would develop as they never have developed before; mankind would enter upon a period of advancement and progress the like of which has never been seen.

This, I believe, is the almost universal conviction. But we are assured that Great Britain will not consent to this, and for the selfish reasons of a small class of bankers who disregard other interest, even in England. The position of Mr. Gladstone, and his reason for it, is well known. Mr. Giffen long since declared that—

A creditor nation is able to draw more from its tributaries who have to pay it in the appreciating money than it would otherwise be able to draw. To pay the same debt they must send to their creditors 30, 50, perhaps 100 per cent more of produce than they would otherwise have to send. There is no doubt that in this sense the weight of the gold debt of a debtor country like India or the United States has enormously increased of late years.

The utter selfishness and absolute heartlessness of the dominant class in Great Britain, and their total disregard of the agricultural class of their own people, were strongly illustrated when Mr. Bertram Currie, of London, a banker and, I believe, the president of the Gold Defense Association, stated before a Government commission some years ago, as follows:

Q. But I think you said that a demand for gold increased its value. If there were a fresh demand by America gold must pro tanto have increased in value?

A. But what evil is done thereby if it had?

Q. Do you think that a fall of prices due to an appreciation of the standard is no evil?

A. I think a fall of prices is no evil.

Q. A fall of prices due to cheaper production of commodities would be a gain?

A. I ask no questions as a consumer. A fall in prices benefits me.

Q. Is it not a fact that, owing to the low prices, large tracts of country that were formerly profitably cultivated in England have gone out of cultivation and are now producing nothing?

A. If this is so it is because they are unsuited for the production of these commodities.

Q. But I am speaking of land which produced these commodities at great profit not long ago.

A. That is the general state of mankind. Somebody else has found that he can produce them cheaper and better. I know the feeling of the class to which I belong, and I know that any change is diametrically opposed to our feeling, and that whatever change is made, to whatever extent we can we will be clear of it. If we lend a man a thousand pounds we will say to him: "Understand, we are not to be paid back in this new stuff; we must have gold."

Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, member of Parliament, on the 16th of July last, at Stratford-on-Avon, said in the course of a speech that when it was shown in the House of Commons that agricultural depression was caused by low prices of all the things which agriculture produced, Sir William Harcourt declared that he did not want to find the remedy, and did not want to raise prices, because he believed that low prices were a great advantage to the great mass of the people.

And the London Times says:

It seems impossible to get bimetallists to understand that there is quite a large number of us for whom a general rise of prices has no charms whatever. We like them low, and the lower the better. If they all went down to half their present figures we should rejoice, because we have nothing to sell and a great many things to buy. For those who have things to sell we do not feel any great concern.

Let me call attention also to a speech by Sir William H. Houldsworth, member of Parliament, delivered before the Bradford Chamber of Commerce on November 19, 1894, in which he quotes and comments upon certain declarations made by Mr. Shaw-Le Fevre, a member of the House of Commons, and who had previously delivered an address before the same body. I quote from Mr. Houldsworth:

Here I come upon a most extraordinary argument used by Mr. Shaw-Le Fevre in his address. It is to be found in that division of the report of his speech which appears in the Bradford Observer, headed, "England, the creditor of the whole world." The argument is this: "England, as a whole, is a creditor of all the world to the extent probably of over fifteen hundred millions sterling, payable in gold." If gold prices fall "the interest on the debt (and he might have added the principal) will have to be paid in a greater quantity of produce of all kinds."

Then follows a remarkable statement: "But, while we gain, other countries, as a whole, do not necessarily lose." There is a conjuring trick for you, and, as in the case of other conjuring tricks, no doubt you would like to know "how it is done." I will show you. He assumes, as usual, that the fall of prices is due to increased production in other countries or to diminished cost. I will take his argument on his own ground presently, but first I want to show you that though he asserts he does not believe in the appreciation of gold, he does believe in it after all, and more than this, thinks it a very good thing.

He says: "If gold prices fall the debtors in other countries will have to pay their creditors here 'a greater quantity of produce of all kinds' in order to pay the interest accruing on their debt and, of course, also to pay the principal when that becomes due. By this England 'gains.'" Now, if England "gains" because the debts due to her are gold debts does not this prove that her gold debt has become more valuable? What is this but an appreciation of gold in its clearest possible form?

But it is useless to multiply evidences of the selfishness which animates the governing class of the English nation in the course it pursues in this question. The motive which moves her in refusing to join the other nations of the world in this great movement is perfectly clear.

We are brought sharply face to face with the question whether we will follow England humbly in a course which has compelled our people to sell their produce, to use Mr. Giffen's own language, for the last twenty years, "30, 50, or perhaps 100 per cent cheaper than we would have had to," or have we manhood enough to say that we will no more submit to England's injustice in this than we will her aggressions in Venezuela? There is not a shadow of doubt in my mind as to what the people of this country will do. In this connection I beg to call the attention of the Senate to an editorial which appeared in the London Times of September 2 last.

Speaking of Mr. Balfour's statement that personally he was strongly in favor of an international agreement, but that he had no right to pledge his colleagues on the subject, and that he had no reason to think that an international bimetallic agreement would at that moment be the result of an international conference—in speaking of the United States and Germany, that paper uses this language:

Their natural hope was that, in view of the prominent place which Mr. Balfour holds in the present Government, some steps would be taken to bring about the meeting they wished for. It has been a cruel disappointment to them to learn that nothing of the kind is to be done and that they have no choice but to acquiesce in the indefinite postponement of their favorite project. Germany, it appears, is the more submissive of the two countries. Its bimetallists recognize that without help from England no effective international agreement can be arrived at, and they feel compelled accordingly to fold their hands and to wait for more propitious times. In the United States bimetallists are made of sterner stuff. With or without England they will keep on agitating and will not be frightened from their course if they are forced to act alone; but it is less probable than ever that they will be able to carry their countrymen with them.

This editorial is remarkable in several ways. The insolence of its tone is the most offensive feature of it. There is nothing remarkable in its not understanding that the bimetallists in this country are the people, for the reason that it gets its information from the Eastern American press, and the intensity of the feeling of the people at large upon this question is as utterly unknown in New York as it is in London or Cape Town.

There is, however, one grain of truth in all this chaff. The bimetallists of this country are made of "sterner stuff" than to sit down and wait "submissively" until England graciously grants them permission to act.

When it is clear that England will not consent to an international agreement, and that France and Germany will not move except in company with England, then the question comes home to us, what will the people of the United States do? When they see that our people are suffering these great wrongs and that they will certainly become more and more aggravated as the years go by, what will we do? With no chance in sight for international bimetallism, can the United States, acting alone, undertake this great work with a reasonable hope of success? A tremendous responsibility in this emergency, in my opinion, rests upon us as a nation. We are the only people holding the good of the masses generally to be above all other considerations. We are the only nation who believe that the object of organizing governments is to advance the interests and welfare of the masses. That the complete reestablishment of bimetallism would greatly benefit and advance the masses, would tend to check and to strangle the startling aggregations of wealth into a few hands which are now taking place, there can be no doubt. If other nations will not join us in this great movement in the interest of humanity, it is our duty to undertake it alone. Where the right is clear, obstacles should not be allowed to deter us from doing our duty. We have encountered and overcome greater difficulties in the past, and I believe that the high destiny that was marked out for us by Providence requires us to act now with decision, and to assume fully the great responsibility of leadership among the nations of the earth. It is impossible for me to undertake at this time a full discussion of the question of our ability to accomplish this alone, but a few of the points which seem to me to be conclusive that we can do so may be briefly stated.

From 1803 to 1873 France, practically alone, maintained bimetallism. How she, in maintaining bimetallism for herself maintained it for the whole world, in spite of England's adverse action, is strongly stated by Hon. Daniel Manning, in his report for 1886, as follows:

What Great Britain did by the act of 1816 was to close, then and thereafter, her mints to the free coinage of silver into full legal-tender money, leaving them open for the free coinage of gold alone into full legal-tender money.

In fact, Great Britain's monetary standard, then as before and thereafter, which measured and scored all commodity prices for herself and the trading nations of both hemispheres, consisted of all the gold and silver of the world. Its prevalence was in this wise: one nation or more gave free coinage to silver alone into full legal-tender money, another nation or more gave free coinage to gold alone into full legal-tender money, another coined both metals into full legal-tender money, and fixing the different weights of the two metals which should have the same debt-paying and purchasing power, kept in use so large coined stocks of both as to make her ratio prevalent.

Gold, therefore, had in its proportion as much paying power wherever silver alone had free coinage as where both were coined. Silver, therefore, had in its proportion as much purchasing power where gold alone had free coinage as where both were coined. The two metals were thus joined practically in a universal money, and the general range of prices which it measured was identical, other things being equal, in Great Britain and elsewhere. In other words, the silver coinage which England shirked in 1816 was elsewhere done; the free coinage at a fixed ratio into full legal-tender money, which she had previously proffered, both to all the gold and all the silver anywhere mined or melted, was elsewhere actively maintained for sixty years. She neither had a different standard nor a single gold standard; she was merely a factor in the general equilibrium of monometallic coinage, which France, by a bimetallic coinage, had power to keep stable. The dependence of Great Britain was absolute at the time her independence was most vaunted.

On another page of the same report Manning gives what he calls the essential monetary conditions which existed at that time:

The essential conditions of that old monetary order in their last analysis seem to be these:

"1. Mints open to the public for the free coinage of gold.
"2. Mints open to the public for the free coinage of silver.
"3. Coined gold a full legal tender.
"4. Coined silver a full legal tender.
"5. Mints open to the public for the free coinage of silver and of gold.
"6 Rated equivalence of both metals in such coinage, fixed by States powerful enough to make and keep it prevalent."

Every one of these six conditions will be complete upon the passage of this bill except the one question as to whether we are powerful enough to make the "rated equivalence" we might adopt "prevalent." France did this before. Can we do it now?

In the June number of the North American Review the great English statistician, Mulhall, said:

If we take a survey of mankind in ancient or modern times as regards the physical, mechanical, and intellectual force of nations, we find nothing to compare with the United States in this present year of 1895. At the same time we see that the wealth of the American people surpasses that of any other nation, past or present.

He states the energy or our working power to compare with that of France as 129,306 to 34,580, our producing capacity as 475 to 115, and he says that the "merchandise transported by rail in the United States is shown by official returns to be double the amount of the land carriage (at least by rail) of all the other nations of the earth collectively." We are known to be the largest consumers of the necessaries as well as the luxuries of life on the earth, and of course our internal commerce as well as our external commerce must be enormously large. We have 41,000,000 of instructed citizens, and spend a hundred and fifty-six millions on schools, against thirty-one millions in France. As France successfully maintained a "rated equivalence" at 15½ to 1 for seventy years, may we not reasonably anticipate that if we should declare in favor of bimetallism that we could easily accomplish our purpose; that we are powerful enough to keep the ratio of 16 to 1 prevalent—a lower rate than that of France?

The advantages to be derived by us from bimetallism are well stated by Wharton Barker, of Philadelphia, in the American of November 9 last, as follows:

By restoring bimetallism, expanding the basis of our currency instead of contracting the superstructure of credit money to the narrow gold basis, we can keep gold and silver in circulation side by side. The gold monometallist believes, or at least feigns to believe, this to be impossible. He says we must turn the balance of trade much in our favor; that only thus can we keep our gold. We answer, certainly. He says it is only possible to turn the balance of trade sufficiently in our favor by contracting our currency, and thus causing such a fall in prices as to induce foreign buying. We answer, this is not only ruinous but needless. The English trader does not seek our products, because he can buy cheaper in India, Argentina, or Mexico. Raise the price to the Englishman of wheat or cotton bought in India and Mexico, and he will buy from us at prices much higher than those now ruling.

That it is preferable to make a market for our surplus products at higher prices, rather than beg for a market at lower, any gold monometallist, whose feelings are not deadened to the sufferings of our people, must admit. But is this possible? Assuredly it is. The Englishman now buys in India, in Mexico, and other silver-using nations, paying with silver or silver exchange—silver that has remained of stable purchasing power in those countries even since the Western world struck it down. We have simply to raise the price of silver by opening our mints, and the Englishman, no longer finding it possible to buy silver with which to pay for purchases made in silver-using countries at 67 cents an ounce, but forced to pay our mint price, to wit, $1.29, would at once find the cost of buying in silver-using countries doubled, and he would eagerly turn to our markets to buy cotton and wheat, so long as the price was not doubled here.

The advocates of the single gold standard, however, scout every suggestion of this kind, and every proposition to do anything except sell bonds brings from them dire predictions of evil, and we are always assured that if we undertake the coinage of silver that we will inevitably go on a silver basis.

Let us, for the sake of the argument, consider what this amounts to. What does this terrible calamity of a silver basis mean? Let us suppose that it is realized; that the country has actually gone on a silver basis. What then will be the condition, and what may we anticipate in the future? To go on a silver basis seems to mean simply that gold will go to a premium; that thereafter it will be bought and sold as a commodity; that it will not be used as a medium of exchange or as the single standard of value. It means that silver, on the contrary, will be our money, the basis of our currency, and that thereafter only when gold and silver become equal in value shall we have them both as currency. If this should be realized there can be no question that we would then have a money steadier in value than we have now, a money which would be nearer a just standard, a money which would come nearer fulfilling all the conditions of a scientific and an honest standard than the one we now have.

These statements can hardly be denied in view of arguments which have already been presented. Suppose we should open the mints to the unlimited coinage of silver to-day. There certainly would be no premium on gold until it should become more valuable abroad than it is in this country. There would be no premium on gold, and no tendency to ship gold abroad, until it became more valuable abroad than here. That would not be the case until there had been either a fall in prices abroad or an advance in prices here.

If falling prices have caused the present condition it would seem that an advance in prices here would at least have a tendency to relieve the people and the country of a part of the burden which has been entailed upon them by the decline in prices. That a rise in prices would benefit the people there can be no denying, and if gold goes abroad simply because of the improved condition of the people, the sooner it goes the better, and I imagine that nobody would object to its going upon that condition. The owners of gold have not brought it to this country from motives of benevolence, nor will they send it away as a matter of disgust or spite. It goes now, and it will go then, wherever it will pay the holder the largest profit. I would be glad to see our own people protected from the iniquitous exactions which it has levied on mankind for the last twenty years, and if we can free them from it, I hope to see it done. If it can find more profitable investments abroad, where it can unjustly and without right absorb the wealth of other people, let it do so. Our people will at least be freed from its extortionate greed.

The difficulty of exchange between gold-using and silver-using countries is so great that commerce between England and such countries has been denounced as gambling, and not commerce. This has caused the most intense feeling among certain classes in England, and commissions have been appointed to investigate it. The effect upon commerce in a silver-using country trading with a gold-using country may be illustrated by the following extract from the North American Review, by Mr. Romero, the Mexican minister at this capital, as follows:

The advantages to Mexico of the silver basis are the following:

"The silver standard and currency encourages very materially, while other leading commercial nations have the single gold standard, the increase of exports of domestic products, because the expenses of producing them, wages, rents, taxes, etc., are paid for in silver and therefore their cost as compared with their market value is considerably less than that of similar articles produced or raised in single gold standard countries. When sold in gold markets, therefore, they bring very lucrative prices, as they are converted into silver at a high rate of exchange. These conditions have caused a great development in the exportation of some of our agricultural products, because they yield a very large profit. For instance, coffee, which costs to produce, all expenses included, on an average of not over 10 cents a pound, is sold at about 20 cents in gold in foreign markets.

"The exportation of other agricultural products which did not pay when gold and silver were at par—that is, at the ratio of 1 to 16—is now remunerative, because there is a return to us in exchange more than we lose in the gold price of the article. Such is the case, for instance, with beans, which at 8 cents would not pay when silver and gold were at par, but now 8 cents in gold makes nearly 16 cents in silver, and that is a lucrative price. Our exports for several years up to 1869 were about $20,000,000 a year. In the year 1872–73 they amounted to $31,594,005.14; in 1888–89 they were swelled to $60,158,423.02; in 1891–92 to $75,467,114.95; and in 1892–93 to $87,509,207. The silver standard is a great stimulus in developing home manufactures, because foreign commodities have to be paid in gold, and, owing to the high rate of exchange, their price becomes so high that it pays well to manufacture some of them at home, our low wages also helping to bring about these results."

Ate no to the same paper, on page 707, is as follows:

The following remarks, contained in a paper read at a recent session of the Royal Colonial Institute at London by the Hon. T. H. Whitehead, of Hongkong, China, which deals with the effects of the depreciation in the value of silver on the trade of Great Britain with the Orient, confirms my statement about the great stimulus that the low price of silver is to manufacturing in silver-using countries:

"In oriental countries we are witnessing remarkable industrial progress and unequaled prosperity among their people, when simultaneously serious losses are attending similar industries in England; while under the present system it is highly probable that there will be a further fall in the present very low level of gold prices, which will still more prejudice the position of the British manufactures. What is also of unquestionable great concern in the Empire is that it may lead to the transference of a large part of our principal industries to silver-using countries. So long as the gold value of silver continues to be, as it is now, liable to violent fluctuations, the more perilous must become the conditions of the principal British industries and the more possible must it be to prevent disaster from overtaking them. British labor and gold capital can no longer compete on equal terms with Asiatic labor and silver capital, and the position of British industries is growing more critical every day."

Summing up, on page 710 Mr. Romero says:

In consequence of all these causes we have fewer business failures than other countries; our internal traffic has greatly increased, with much benefit to our railroads, which, with only one exception, have not gone into the hands of receivers.

We do not suffer in Mexico from one of the principal causes of the present financial distress in other countries, the low price of agricultural products. In fact, in some cases the price of domestic commodities has gone up considerably, when it is fixed by the value of the commodity in gold markets. This is the case with coffee, for instance. As the largest portion of our crop is exported and commands cash, its price is fixed by its value in gold markets, and in consequence of this its price in Mexico has been almost doubled, with great advantage to the producers.

We have more stability of prices, wages, rents, etc. Although our wages are low, there has been in recent years a marked tendency to their increase. Our factories are not only in operation but they are being greatly extended, and new plants and industries are being established. Instead of dismissing our laborers we find occupation for them all, and we need to import them for the work to be done in some localities, and as our laborers find occupation and increased wages we have no strikes. Our silver mines have not stopped work, and we find them yet quite profitable. We have more ready money with which to transact our increased business. We offer greater inducements to foreign investors than formerly, and the country is undoubtedly more prosperous than it has ever been, although the silver standard is not the only cause of our prosperity. One of its principal causes is, undoubtedly, the building of railroads, but they could not have been so remunerative without the production and coinage of silver.

The great development in India of cotton manufacturing while silver had unlimited coinage, and the severe check it received when her mints were closed by Great Britain, is well understood. The tremendous impetus given to all industrial development in Japan as a result in a great measure of the closing of the Indian mints is familiar to us all, and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] only a few days ago called attention to the apprehension felt by our manufacturers lest a competition ruinous to them should be set up by Japan.

England's great wealth is the result of her commerce, and perhaps her most profitable customers are the silver-using countries. How her trade with these nations is handicapped we see forcibly set out by Mr. Romero in what has just been quoted. These drawbacks greatly embarrass British merchants in their dealings, and they would gladly rid themselves of them; but other interests in great Britain, the bankers, for instance, in London, intent upon their own gains, by reason of the increase in the value of gold, are unwilling to heed the complaints of the merchants about the difficulties they are compelled to endure. It would seem to be clear, then, that the hope of both bankers and merchants is that all of their formidable rivals may be so blind to their own financial interests as to follow the lead of England in her policy of ruin to the bees to benefit the drones. As long as we continue to do this the London bankers can continue to harvest their unearned profits, gained from the increased value of gold, and the merchants can be quieted with the assurance that we have nc advantage of them in dealing with other nations, but are embarrassed by the same difficulties in our dealings with those people which embarrass them. The producers of the United States, especially our manufacturers, must begin to widen their foreign markets. It is natural that our neighbors should trade with us, but commerce can not be diverted from old channels easily. An inducement must always be offered to accomplish such a result.

The manufactories of Great Britain have been long established, are thoroughly equipped with expert labor long trained to its avocation. To compete successfully with these for a trade already their own is not an easy matter. If we were free of the embarrassments of exchange, it seems clear that we would have a great advantage of any country hampered by them, and that this would easily give us the trade of such nations.

In a pamphlet by Mr. C. J. Hillyer, The Silver Basis, I find the following quotation, taken from the London Financial News, which would seem to indicate that some of the English appreciate the situation to some extent:

There can be no doubt about it, that if the United States were to adopt a silver basis to-morrow British trade would be ruined before the year was out. Every American industry would be protected, not only at home, but in every other market. Of course the States would suffer to a certain extent through having to pay their obligations abroad in gold, but the loss on exchange under this head would be a mere drop in the bucket compared with the profits to be reaped from the markets of South America and Asia, to say nothing of Europe. The marvel is that the United States has not long ago seized the opportunity, and but for the belief that the way of England is necessarily the way to commercial success and prosperity, undoubtedly it would have been done long ago.

It has been a little more than twelve months since the President, having already issued a hundred millions of bonds, declared in his message that he would continue to issue bonds "whenever and as often as it became necessary to maintain a sufficient gold reserve." I had at the time no sort of doubt that the President would continue to issue bonds, and this has proved correct. Those bonds bore 5 per cent interest. Some time after the message, knowing that there was no other hope of getting free coinage of silver during this Administration, while I was opposed to the issue of bonds, and so stated at the time, I offered a bill which proposed not to enlarge the power which the President already asserted and was exercising of issuing bonds, but to authorize the issue of bonds at a lower rate of interest, from 5 to 3 per cent, and at the same time to provide for the unlimited coinage of silver; for a substitution of silver certificates, payable expressly in silver alone, for greenbacks which the Government has for twenty years persisted in paying in gold alone, guarding at the same time carefully against any reduction in the volume of currency while the substitution was taking place, and also providing for the retirement of national-bank notes under $10, thus giving the whole field of paper money under $10 to silver certificates.

I believed then, as I believe now, that the unlimited coinage of silver would by reviving commerce, increase our revenues, and do away absolutely with any pretense of a necessity to issue bonds, and that under that bill such a revival in business would take place that no issue of bonds could be claimed to be necessary. And any man who believes that under that bill, if it had been enacted into law, any considerable amount of bonds could have been issued has much less faith in the efficacy of unlimited coinage than I have. I stated when I offered the bill to the Senate that I was opposed to the issue of bonds. The President had insisted that the issue of bonds was our only hope. I believed that the unlimited coinage of silver was the only hope. The President was at that time exercising, and has continued to do so, the right to issue bonds anyway, and the bill introduced by me would have put the test whether absolute relief would not come from the coinage of silver. I have no doubt now that if that bill had passed there would have been no more bonds, and we certainly would have had the unlimited coinage of silver. This was a fair offer to test our different theories, and the advocates of gold dared not accept it. This seems conclusive to my mind that they agreed with me that that bill would, by demonstrating the soundness of our position, have absolutely destroyed theirs. They rejected the bill, and what is the result? Bond sales continue, and we are no nearer a solution of the question and no nearer silver coinage now than before.

This leaves nothing for us to do but to present the system we believe in, without reference to theirs, to discuss it, and appeal at last to that great tribunal which must decide it. I am ready for the question.

The overwhelming majority of the people are animated by sentiments of lofty and unselfish patriotism. I have an abiding confidence that the great question which this proposed amendment presents for solution will be wisely and justly determined by the great tribunal by which it must be finally determined.

It is to my mind an evidence almost conclusive of the weakness of any cause for its friends to be unwilling to have it passed on by the people. To say that they are incapable of deciding any question they are interested in, as is sometimes done as to this question, is to declare them incapable of self-government. A man who believes this has no place in this country and ought to find more congenial associations in the realms of those who believe in absolutism. The friends of bimetallism are ready and anxious to have the people settle this question. They hope and believe it will be speedily done, and well done.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to inquire of the Senator who has the pending bill in charge as to what degree of speed he proposes to make, and about what time will be afforded for the discussion of the question? I know several Senators who desire to speak upon the bill, who are perhaps not ready to do so now, who would like to be informed on the points I have suggested.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. So far as I am personally concerned, I propose to defer to the wishes of the friends of the bill in a great measure. While I shall be glad to have the bill pressed as rapidly as possible and passed at the earliest day that will suit the convenience of the Senate, at the same time I have no desire to cut off any Senator on either side of the Chamber who wishes to discuss the bill. I suppose I may say, in view of the fact that I have been assured by a number of Senators that they wish to speak upon the bill and are not ready now to do so, that I shall not for several days yet, at least, ask for a vote upon the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. If there is no Senator who expects to speak on Monday upon the opposite side of this question, I will take the floor now on this bill, with the expectation, of course, that the Senate is ready to adjourn at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 13, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 10, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. H. M. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PRINTING AND BINDING FOR COMMITTEE ON INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be authorized to have printed and bound such papers and documents for the use of said committee as it may deem necessary in connection with the subjects considered or to be considered by said committee during the Fifty-fourth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. DOCKERY. I simply wish to inquire whether this is the usual resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is in the usual form.

Mr. PICKLER. It is an entirely usual resolution.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution; and it was adopted.

ORDER FOR EVENING SESSION VACATED.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask unanimous consent that the order for this evening's session be vacated.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

PRINTING AND BINDING FOR THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and hereby is, authorized to have printed and bound such documents and papers for the use of said committee as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered or to be considered by said committee during the Fifty-fourth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to inquire whether this privilege has been extended in former Congresses to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. HENDERSON. I believe it has uniformly been done; and I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] that the bankruptcy bills and other important matters coming before the committee make it necessary to have this printing and binding done.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If it has been done heretofore, I have no objection.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and adopted.

ADMINISTRATION OF MEDICAL DIVISION, PENSION BUREAU.

Mr. TAWNEY asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution of inquiry, which was read, directing the Secretary of the Interior to furnish information in reference to the allegation that the medical division of the Bureau of Pensions fails to properly regard the reports and findings made by the boards of pension examining surgeons.

Mr. CRISP and Mr. MCCLELLAN objected.

RESOLUTION RELATING TO FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent to have read, printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs the resolution which I send to the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent for the reading and printing in the RECORD of a resolution, which he also desires to have referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Is there objection?

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that when these requests are made to print in the RECORD the resolution should first be read, in order that an intelligent judgment may be reached as to the propriety of printing.

Mr. WILLIS. This resolution is very short.

The SPEAKER. The question is on printing the resolution in the RECORD and referring it to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, instead of referring it under the rules of the House. The request requires unanimous consent.

Mr. CRISP. I object.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask to have the resolution read and referred.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

BONDS AS NATIONAL-BANK RESERVE.

Mr. ODELL. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ODELL] desires to present a resolution. The Chair will state that all such resolutions can be referred under the rules. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that it be read out of order. Is there objection to the reading?

Mr. CRISP. We do not know what the resolution is.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I believe that under the ruling heretofore made by the Chair, the reading of a resolution for information does not entitle it to be placed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. CRISP. Then I do not object.

The resolution of Mr. ODELL, directing the Committee on Banking and Currency to report legislation empowering national banking associations to invest not exceeding 50 per cent of their lawful reserve in bonds of the United States to be hereafter issued under the acts of June 14, 1875, and May 31, 1878, was read.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On December 21, 1895:

An act (H. R. 2173) making an appropriation for the expenses of a commission to investigate and report on the true divisional line between the Republic of Venezuela and British Guiana.

On December 27, 1895:

An act (H. R. 803) to amend section 2601 of the Revised Statutes, relative to ports of entry; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 27) ratifying the use of the appropriation for materials and miscellaneous expenses for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for the fiscal year 1896 for the purchase of articles provided for in the appropriation for the miscellaneous expenses of the Treasury Department, and authorizing the continued use of the same for the remaining portion of the fiscal year 1896.

On January 4, 1896:

An act (H. R. 2264) fixing the times for holding the circuit and district courts of the northern district of Iowa and of the southern district of Iowa; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 56) to transfer certain offices of the United States in the Territory of Utah to the officers of the State of Utah.

On January 6, 1896:

An act (H. R. 2720) to make Palm Beach, Fla., a subport of entry.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 732) to regulate the issue and recording of the commissions of officers in several of the Departments;

A bill (S. 697) for the reconstruction of the United States custom-house and post-office building at St. Albans, Vt., destroyed by fire May 19, 1895; and Joint resolution (S. R. 23) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to use a portion of the appropriation for new iron roof for foundry at navy-yard, Washington, D. C., in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," for repairs to the walls of said foundry.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed of the annual report of the Commissioner of Railroads for the year 1895, 1,500 extra copies, in paper covers, with appendixes, for the use of the Commissioner of Railroads.

THE RULES.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the desk.

In this connection I would like to say, for the information of the House, that the committee wishes, if agreeable to the House, to take up and dispose of the amendments recommended by the Committee on Rules first, and we ask for unanimous consent that the understanding be had that the Speaker shall call all of the rules in their order afterwards so that any member may have an opportunity to offer amendments and have them considered. That, I think, will be agreeable to both sides.

Mr. CRISP. The proposition is, as I understand, to dispose of the amendments of the committee first?

Mr. HENDERSON. That is the request.

Mr. CRISP. And after that the rules are to be considered as read through, and amendments may be offered to any of them?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that it would be better, perhaps, for the Speaker to call for amendments to each section of the rules, and if any gentleman desires to offer an amendment, that particular section will be read; if not, the Chair will proceed to call the next section, and so on.

Mr. CRISP. That will answer my purpose; and I have no objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would ask the gentleman from Iowa whether, under the arrangement he proposes, we would be required to complete the sections that are amended in the report of the Committee on Rules before proceeding to the body of the rules, or whether we would have authority to recur to these sections afterwards, for the purpose of offering amendments, under the plan suggested by himself?

Mr. HENDERSON. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that my proposition was first that the amendments should be considered on the report of the Committee on Rules, and disposed of, as well as the rules touched by them, after which the Speaker, under the agreement, would ask if there was any amendment to be offered to the other rules, as they are reached in their order. That will give full opportunity to the House to touch every one of the rules, and determine what amendments may be necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposed arrangement?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first amendment proposed by the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Rules of the House of Representatives be amended as follows:

Add to section 3 of Rule III the following:

"He shall pay to the officers and employees of the House of Representatives, the last day of each month, the amount of their salaries that shall be due them; and when the last day of the month falls on Sunday, he shall pay them on the day next preceding."

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to say a word in explanation. Under the rules of the Fifty-second Congress, as well as in the Fifty-third Congress, express direction was given to the Clerk of the House to pay the salaries of the officers and employees of the House, and we have only in this report adopted the same rule. Under the rules of the Fifty-first Congress there was no provision directing the Clerk of the House to pay the officers and employees their salaries, although, as I say, it was embodied in the rules of the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee. I propose to insert in the third line of the amendment, after the words "due them," the words "excepting the month of December, when they shall be paid on the 20th day of the month." It will be remembered that during each Congress the time of the House is occupied with a lengthy discussion as to the propriety of paying the employees of the House their salaries on the 20th day of the month, before the usual Christmas holidays.

Mr. MILES. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. Suppose the day you propose in your amendment falls on Sunday, what provision do you make then for the execution of the order?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I think the law already provides for that, but I propose, in the event of the adoption of this amendment, to offer another one, that is, in the fourth line to strike out and insert, so it will read "and when the pay day falls on Sunday, he shall pay them on the day next preceding." In order to save the time of the House, I offer that amendment now.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow one suggestion in opposition to the amendment before he proceeds?

Mr. HENDERSON. I would ask to have the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts read from the desk.

The SPEAKER. The first amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the words "due them" the words "excepting the month of December, when they shall be paid on the 20th day of that month."

Mr. CRISP. Before my friend from Massachusetts proceeds, will he allow me to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question, and that is, where the Clerk of the House gets authority, or how the rules of the House can give him authority, to pay any salaries whatever?

Mr. HENDERSON. There is no power that I know of, excepting that in the appropriation bills.

Mr. CRISP. But this is a rule of the House. It says that he shall pay the officers and employees of the House of Representatives on the last day of each month the amount of salaries that shall be due them. Now, how can the House, by a rule, determine what the law fixes? I ask the gentleman if he is satisfied that we have the authority to adopt such a provision at all?

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the money is appropriated for this purpose in the legislative bill. A part of the duty of the Clerk of the House is to see that these salaries are paid. By time-honored usage the Clerk has always paid them, and the rules of the Fifty-second Congress, as well as the Fifty-third, reported by the gentleman from Georgia himself, from the Committee on Rules, when he was Speaker of the House, contained the exact language the committee has adopted in this rule.

Mr. CRISP. Does this refer to the clerks of members? I only ask the gentleman for information, because I do not know.

Mr. HENDERSON. It refers to the officers and employees of the House, directing him to pay to the officers and employees of the House their salaries, as he has done time out of mind, and as was required by the rules of the last two Congresses.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman is satisfied, I have no objection to it. I only desired to ask for the authority for it. That is all.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is merely to carry out the provisions of the law in detail.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I will include in the amendment——

Mr. HENDERSON. Now, I shall be glad to hear the reasons which the gentleman from Massachusetts gives for his amendment, if he will state them again.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. The reason for my amendment is that in each Congress, just before the holidays, the House is detained quite a little time in order to have an explanation of the reasons for and to pass a resolution providing for payment of the employees before the holidays. If this amendment is put in, the Clerk will pay them on the 20th of each December, and just before the holidays. My amendment would include striking out, in the third line, the word "last," and putting in the word "pay," and also striking out the words "of the month," in the fourth line. Then it will read:

And when the pay day falls on Sunday he shall pay them on the day next preceding.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] that the amendment he offers is in harmony with the custom which has prevailed; but whenever there is a change in the political complexion of this body, a change of control, the amendment operates to some extent to duplicate compensation. The resolution agreed to by the House providing for the payment of employees on the 20th of December last operated to compensate two sets of employees for the same service. The outgoing employees were all paid for the entire month on the 20th of December. A great many of the annual clerks were sworn into office immediately after that date. Under the law, or at least in equity, they may be entitled to compensation for the remaining days of December. It will probably be found also that a number of employees were dismissed immediately after the 20th, and their successors will be entitled to compensation for the additional days in that month. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] will concede that when the organization of the House changes his amendment will operate as it did in December last—to give double compensation for the same service.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the only answer to that is that my motion is in harmony with the action of this House for years, and will not change the custom one iota, excepting that it will save the time of this House two or three hours every December.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman is entirely accurate in his statement; but I desire to say that I am already advised that a deficiency appropriation will be asked to compensate the annual clerks and other employees who were sworn into office immediately after the 20th of December last. What amount will be carried by that deficiency I do not know; but the incoming clerks seemingly have an equitable claim upon Congress for compensation for services rendered prior to the 1st of January.

Mr. LOUD. Is it not a fact that we have more time than anything else at the beginning of the session?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Let me say that it is undoubtedly true that the rule is to get all you can, and keep all you get; but the reason for my amendment is not affected one iota by what the gentleman has said.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me it is safer to leave the rule as we have quoted it. We may sometimes want to continue in session throughout the entire month of December. In addition to the suggestions of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] this adopts a uniform rule, while, if any special occasion comes up, the House can probably meet it by a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

The amendment of Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment proposed by the committee was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there any other amendment to be proposed to this rule?

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, are we proceeding in that way, that as soon as the amendment of the committee is disposed of, to a particular rule, the Speaker will then make the inquiry which he has just made?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will make inquiry with regard to the rules which are amended by the committee. The Chair understood the arrangement to be that those rules were to be finally disposed of.

Mr. CRISP. That is entirely satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. If there is no other amendment to be proposed to this rule, the Chair will cause the next amendment of the committee to be read.

The next amendment reported from the committee was as follows:

In Rule IV, strike out section 3:

"3. He shall give bond to the United States, with sureties to be approved by the Speaker, in the sum of $50,000, for the faithful disbursement of all moneys intrusted to him by virtue of his office and the proper discharge of the duties thereof, and no member of Congress shall be approved as such surety."

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the effect of this amendment is to strike that provision out, because we have a law which requires the Sergeant-at-Arms to give bond to the United States. It is otherwise provided for, in the provision made by reason of the Silcott defalcation; and, therefore, it is not needed; and in this we follow the last two Congresses.

Mr. MILES. May I ask the gentleman whether that bond to the United States protects members of this House?

Mr. HENDERSON. Absolutely. It was the purpose of the law. That is why he was made an officer of the United States instead of the agent of the House.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there any other amendment to that rule?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the following:

"It shall be the further duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to deduct from the salary of Members of the House and Delegates for absence from the House during its sessions, except when caused by illness, as required by the provisions of section 40 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to detain the House upon this proposition, but merely submit it to the judgment of the House. As those who were members of the last House, when we, now a minority, were the majority, know, we compelled the making of such deductions from the salaries of members on account of absence not occasioned by the sickness of the member or sickness in his family. This was thought to be and is in accordance with the provisions of existing statute law. The result was twofold. In one respect the tendency——

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear a single word.

The SPEAKER. The House must be in order. It is impossible to hear. Conversation must cease, and gentlemen must take their seats.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the result from this provision of the law, in its application in the last House, was twofold, and it would be so here again. First, better and more prompt attendance of members would be secured, tending to lessen the length of the session. Next, in deducting for absence not occasioned by the sickness of the member himself or of some member of his family, there would be a considerable saving to the Treasury, in that a member would not be paid as if he did attend to his duties here, when, in fact, he was attending to his private business elsewhere, or amusing himself somewhere outside of the precincts of this House. I do not care, as I said before, to detain the House. I propose simply to submit the matter in order that this House may determine whether it will, in this particular, do what the last House did, thereby insuring to the House a better attendance of its members, and saving to the Treasury thousands of dollars, by refusing to pay members for what they choose not to do—for neglect of duty as well as for performance of duty.

I have nothing further to say, beyond asking that the law upon the subject be read.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he means to state that the enforcement of this rule in the last Congress did result in securing better attendance, and does he think it was enforced?

Mr. DE ARMOND. That is my judgment and was my observation.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I wish to ask the gentleman if he has consulted the RECORD to see the number of people who were absent, sick, necessarily absent, during the enforcement of that rule? [Laughter.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. I have not done that.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I think if the gentleman will do so, he would reach the conclusion that all that the enforcement of that rule ever did was simply to add to the sick list of this House. [Laughter.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. I understand, then, Mr. Speaker, that the only objection suggested by my friend from Pennsylvania is that the health of the members of this House would perhaps be better when they are paid for being healthy than when they are not. I simply submit the proposition to the House.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The gentleman certainly does not claim that the enforcement of this rule in the last Congress has resulted in securing a larger attendance in this Congress on his side of the House. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, one moment. I desire, as before stated, to have read the section of the law, section 40, which I ask to have incorporated in the rule and enforced in this Republican House as we enforced it in the last Democratic House.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 40. The Secretary of the Senate and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, respectively, shall deduct from the monthly payment of each Member or Delegate the amount of his salary for each day that he has been absent from the Senate or House, respectively, unless said Member or Delegate assigns as a reason for such absence the sickness of himself or some member of his family

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say that the law already covers this matter in full.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to have a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Thirty-nine gentlemen have risen in support of the demand and 182 in the negative—not a sufficient number.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to have tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is too late, after the demand for the yeas and nays, to demand tellers.

Mr. BAILEY. I would suggest——

The SPEAKER. It is in order. The Chair understands the gentleman to demand the yeas and nays on ordering tellers. [After counting.] Thirty-five gentlemen have risen—not a sufficient number; tellers are refused; the yeas and nays are refused, and the amendment is rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 57, Rule XI, the following:

"It shall always be in order to call up for consideration a report from the Committee on Rules, and, pending the consideration thereof, the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House adjourn; but after the result is announced he shall not entertain any other dilatory motion until the said report shall have been fully disposed of."

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the effect of this amendment and of the one in the next paragraph will be, first, to enable the Committee on Rules to sit during the sessions of the House and to report at any time; and second, to cut off dilatory motions with the exception of one, and bring the House to a vote after one dilatory motion. For the further information of the House, I will state that this is in accordance with the rules of the last two Congresses.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest an amendment to this amendment, which is to insert, after the word "other," in the fifth line of the proposed amendment, the words "motion to adjourn or any"; so that the clause will read: "But after the result is announced he shall not entertain any other motion to adjourn or any dilatory motion until the said report shall have been fully disposed of." What I object to in the amendment as proposed is that it characterizes every motion to adjourn as a dilatory motion. Now, a motion to adjourn is not necessarily a dilatory motion. It may be, or it may not be. If made for the purpose of delaying proceedings, it is a dilatory motion, but if made in good faith and for proper purposes it is not a dilatory motion according to the dictionary definition of the word. The amendment which I propose does not change the meaning or purport of the rule as reported from the committee, but simply gets rid of the idea that every motion to adjourn is necessarily a dilatory motion.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am not authorized to accept amendments, but I see no objection to the one proposed by the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY], which will be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 5 of proposed amendment to section 57 of Rule XI, after the word "other," insert the following: "Motion to adjourn or any"; so that the clause will read: "But after the result is announced he shall not entertain any other motion to adjourn or any dilatory motion until the said report shall have been fully disposed of."

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, as I understood the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], and as I see from a comparison of the amendment proposed by the committee with a copy of the Rules of the Fifty-third Congress, this provision is taken from the Rules of the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses.

Now, if I recollect aright, gentlemen on that side of the House exercised themselves very violently when this rule was proposed. It was said to be the method by which the Democratic majority proposed to "gag the minority," and gentlemen on that side were very urgent and earnest in their opposition to this Democratic method of "gagging the minority." I am in favor of this rule. I was then, and I am now; and I want to congratulate the Speaker and that side of the House on the fact that they have at last risen to the position where they can accept the Democratic rules as the proper rules for the government of this House. [Laughter.] I want to extend my congratulations to them all. You have wandered about a long time, gentlemen, in your endeavor to get sensible rules that would facilitate the proper conduct of business in the House, and at last you have wisely decided to adopt this Democratic rule which worked well for two Congresses, and which, if administered in a spirit of justice and fairness, will still work well, and, I repeat, I want to extend to you my congratulations. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The congratulatory feeling would naturally be mutual. [Laughter.] The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] to the fact that the language which the gentleman from New York is now proposing to correct has been in the rules for a great many years. This particular language is not new at all; it was not new when adopted in the Fifty-second Congress. If he will look at the rules of the Fifty-first Congress, under "Motion to suspend the rules," he will find the same language.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia will find it in the eighth section of Rule XVI.

Mr. CRISP. Yes, I have found it. Now, I wish to call attention to the fact that this language was adopted in the Forty-seventh Congress as a part of the rule which reads:

Pending a motion to suspend the rules the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House adjourn, but after the result thereof is announced he shall not entertain any other dilatory motion until the vote is taken on the suspension.

This particular expression was copied from that old rule into the rules of the Fifty-first, Fifty-second, and Fifty-third Congresses, because it was deemed prudent to retain language which had been in the rules prior to that time and had been repeatedly construed by the presiding officers.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. RAY, it was rejected.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I see that Rule XI, as proposed in this report, names ten committees to which it proposes to give the right to report at any time. I observe that for some reason the Committee on Banking and Currency has been taken out of the list of committees thus entitled, although it was embraced in the list in the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses. As the Committee on Rules has reported in favor of giving the right to report at any time to the Committee on Public Lands, the Committee on Territories, the Committee on Invalid Pensions, etc.—ten committees in all—I should like to know whether the committee has any decided objection to treating the Committee on Banking and Currency with the same liberality which has been extended to it heretofore, and whether the Committee on Rules would not be pleased to include our committee in the number of those that may report at any time. I should like to ask the reason for excluding the Committee on Banking and Currency when it was included in this privilege in the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses. I suppose it was omitted by mistake.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, is any amendment offered?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting after the words "Rivers and Harbors," the words "the Committee on Banking and Currency, bills relating to banking and currency." These are the same words which were embraced in the rules of the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, this is no change by our committee. The rule as we report it is just as it was in this particular in the Fifty-first Congress. It seems to me that in the rule as we report it we have given to enough committees this power of reporting at any time, unless we are going to open the door and let in many other committees. When it is borne in mind that the Committee on Rules will in this Congress, as in the last two Congresses, have the right to shape the order of business so that if there is before any committee any important measure which the House may want to consider, a special rule for its consideration can undoubtedly be obtained, it seems to me that we should open the door far wider than we ought if we should allow any additional committees to report at any time, because the House must remember that the right to report at any time carries with it the right to have the measure considered at any time.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I am inclined to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] whether what he has said is not equally true of more than half of the ten committees named in this report. The Committee on Banking and Currency having been included in this privilege for several Congresses, there must be some special reason why it is proposed to exclude that committee from it in this Congress. In asking that the Committee on Banking and Currency be included, I am not making any new proposition. I am simply asking that the rule of past Congresses be continued. The Committee on Rules, in proposing to take our committee out of this list, must have some reason for it; and I hope the gentleman from Iowa will either withdraw his opposition to my amendment or state to the House frankly that reason.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] by adding the words, "the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, bills relating to coinage." The effect of this amendment is to give the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures a right to report at any time. I desire to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] that I concur in what has been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts as to the importance of these two committees. I take it that the gentleman from Iowa himself will not deny the statement that there are not two committees of this House more important than the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures; and their importance is especially emphasized at this time in view of the necessity of some legislation on these subjects. If there be a committee of the House that ought to be privileged to report at any time, the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures should have that right.

I desire the new members of the House to understand that without an amendment of this kind it will be utterly impossible for this House to consider either a banking measure or a measure affecting our coinage system without the special favor of the Committee on Rules. Inasmuch as both these committees enjoyed this privilege in the Fifty-third Congress, it seems to me nothing but right that it should be accorded to them in this Congress.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] to the origin of this rule. If those gentlemen will investigate they will find that in the beginning there were only two classes of committees that were privileged to report at any time. One class was constituted of committees that had to deal with the business of the Government—the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations. The other class was constituted of those committees that had to deal with the business of the House, and whose right to report at any time was an absolute necessity to the orderly methods of business in the House—the Committee on Accounts and the Committee on Enrolled Bills. Still another committee privileged necessarily on account of its constitutional character was the Committee on Elections.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that instead of going in advance of the stage already reached we ought to go in the other direction. There is absolutely no necessity for extending the list of privileged committees, in view of the fact that the business of this House as administered under existing methods admits of any important legislation being brought before the House at any time by a report of the Committee on Rules. If the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures are to be added to this list, there is no reason why the Committee on the Judiciary should not be added; there is no reason why the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce should not be added; and so we might go on and open the door, adding to the number of privileged committees, until the time of the House might be exhausted in the consideration of business not of absolutely essential importance. I trust the House will see the propriety of abiding by the ancient landmarks as they have been established.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, "going back to ancient landmarks" is good as coming from the Committee on Rules, with a report favoring ten committees and giving them this important right and throwing out two. They have simply taken this Committee on Banking and Currency to the door and kicked it out. That is all. [Laughter.]

Now, I wish the gentleman from Iowa would oblige this House by giving his reasons why this committee should be excepted from the privilege accorded to the other committees. They have put into the rules "the Committee on Territories," and I would like to ask him why that committee should have an advantage over the Committee on Banking and Currency. Why should the Committee on the Public Lands have this privilege rather than the Banking and Currency Committee? Why should the Committee on Invalid Pensions have the privilege? Do you gentlemen assume that these committees are of more importance, that the business they have intrusted to them is of more consequence to the people of this country than the right settlement of great questions which are necessarily under the rules considered in the Committee on Banking and Currency? And before the gentleman from Iowa answers my question I want to ask him if there is a single committee in the House to which the country is looking for wise action with more interest than to the Committee on Banking and Currency; and, further, I hope the gentleman will tell us if, in his judgment, there is a committee in this House from which matters can possibly come under existing circumstances or which can report to this House measures of more importance to the people of the United States than the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Further, I hope the gentleman from Iowa will tell us if there is any possible relief for the present financial situation in this country except from legislation that may be matured by that committee—legislation that will relieve the Treasury of the United States from the constant drain by redemption in gold of every dollar of paper money in this country, and at the same time let him tell us if, in his judgment, such relief can possibly come from before any other committee than that on Banking and Currency. I ask the gentleman again why the Committee on Rules has seen proper to take this important committee from the list, while at the same time it includes in its amendment committees having matters of relatively little importance to the people of this country. That is all I desire to say at present.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to indorse what my friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has said, and also what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] has stated in reference to the importance of the business intrusted to the Committee on Banking and Currency and on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. The fact is that both of these important committees, which have jurisdiction of the currency and the coinage questions, should have the right to report at any time and to have the reports considered when made, if the majority intend to legislate upon these questions.

It will be utterly impossible without this amendment to obtain the consideration of any such bills, no matter how important, reported by these committees without a special order from the Committee on Rules. To illustrate: A bill to repeal the banking law, increase the currency, or to provide additional coinage of gold or silver, or both, is introduced and referred to one or the other of these two committees, is considered by the committee, and a favorable report made to the House.

Under the rule proposed here by the Committee on Rules that bill, when the report is made, will be referred to the Calendar of the House, and unless it could be reached in the regular manner, which is not at all probable, it can never be considered unless the Committee on Rules see fit to take it from the Calendar by special order and give it precedence over other matters. So, it is evident, if left to the majority of the Committee on Rules, it can, if it so desires, suppress and prevent the House from considering any of these questions upon which we ought to legislate. In view of the condition of the country, in view of the urgent necessity for a change of our banking system and coinage laws, it is, I think, of the utmost importance to give these committees the privilege asked for. The people of the country have demanded repeatedly a change in the present laws, and we should now embody in our rules a provision by which it can be done.

Let no gentleman deceive himself, Mr. Speaker, who votes on this question. If he is for silver, or desires any legislation upon these questions, or wants even consideration, as my friend from Tennessee suggests, he had better vote to amend the rules and secure that right here and now. If by the rejection of this amendment he ties his hands he can not go back to his constituents and tell them that he did not consent to be so tied. If you want the right to vote upon these questions, vote for the amendments. If you want no legislation, then vote against it and for the committee report.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have something to say on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

The proposition presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts brings up a subject in which our country is almost universally interested at the present time, and that is the subject of some reform in our monetary system. I take it that the reason why the other committees mentioned in the rules are given the right of way is because of the importance of the legislation passing through their hands, and that in view of that importance they are given the right to report at any time. That right is extended to the Committee on Ways and Means, under the rules, because it is the great committee through whose hands must pass all measures for the support of the Government. The same is true of the Committee on Appropriations, and without going on to enumerate other committees, the same reason—the importance of the subject—obtains in reference to all. Then, if, as I take it to be, that is the reason why this right of way is given—if it is the importance of the subject-matters intrusted to the committees—I ask any gentleman here in all candor and fairness and earnestness and sincerity why is it that that great committee which is in charge of the most important matter now agitating the minds of the people of this country is left out and excluded from the privilege of calling up its bills the same as other committees that have the right of way? Why not omit some of the others of less importance?

Why, Mr. Speaker, the Administration and the Treasury are engaged in selling bonds to get money to keep up the gold reserve, and thereby maintain the credit of our Government. The question of the revision of our financial system must come before the Committee on Banking and Currency. The Committee on Banking and Currency has to deal with this subject, to a certain extent, and bring in measures regulating our banking system. If the vexed questions now before the country relating to our currency matters are settled by the present Congress, the bill must come through this committee. So that, in view of the importance of the question, this great committee, instead of being "kicked out of the House," as the gentleman from Massachusetts has said, ought to be permitted to retain the place that it has occupied heretofore in reference to business before this body. Mr. Speaker, the money question should be met in an open and manly way, and not dodged in the manner indicated by the amendment proposed by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. PAYNE. If this amendment is adopted, it simply makes all the business of the House special business, to come in at any time. The House goes far enough when it provides that appropriation bills and bills from the Ways and Means Committee to raise revenue and questions of the right of members to their seats shall have special right of way. The rule as it is reported by the committee goes further than it ought to go. It gives too much business a special right of way. Now, if we add these two committees, there is no reason why we should not add half a dozen others, and so we take away all the special privileges.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I asked the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] the question, and I now will ask the gentleman from New York, and will see if he has the courage to answer me: Why should the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the Committee on Public Lands, the Committee on Territories, and the Committee on Pensions have this right, while the Committee on Banking and Currency is shut out?

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] will yield to me for a moment, I will answer my friend from Massachusetts as to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PAYNE. Very well.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the gentleman will read the rules of the Fifty-first Congress he will find that we have not disturbed this rule in this particular at all. We had it in the Fifty-first Congress. He will see that the powers of the Committee on Public Lands are limited. That committee can not report generally on anything it pleases at different times, but the Public Lands Committee can report on what?

Bills for the forfeiture of land grants to railroads and other corporations—

Is not the gentleman willing to give them that right, in the interest of the people?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Certainly I am.

Mr. HENDERSON (reading)—

bills preventing speculation in the public lands, and bills for the preservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers.

It was seriously considered by the committee to take away this privilege from the Committee on Public Lands, because we have been going so far; but when we analyzed this and found that the committee had limited powers, for a great and sacred purpose of the people, the power being in this House to bring about the forfeiture of public lands and to protect bona fide settlers on the public lands, we left this power undisturbed. I have answered the question of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], and I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE.]

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I only want to say another word. I agree with the gentleman who has just spoken, that it would have been fully as well if the Committee on Rules had taken away this privilege from the Committee on Public Lands. As I understand it, all of the railroad land grants have been forfeited that anybody desires to forfeit at this time; but if you extend these privileges to cover so much more business of the House, and ultimately to cover all the business of the House, then you simply go into the question of consideration on every report and every bill that comes before the House, and we fritter away hours and days in going through roll calls to determine whether some measure from the gentleman's Committee on Banking and Currency, or some measure from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, or some measure from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or a dozen or fifteen other committees, shall have precedence in the House. It is a great deal better to leave these things just as they are, and let these few committees have the precedence. There is fighting and squabbling enough, then, to take precedence, by raising the question of consideration, and time enough frittered away, without extending this privilege.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, just a moment, in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], and in reply to the other suggestions that we are endeavoring to unduly extend this privilege. If the gentleman will examine the rule of the Fifty-third Congress he will find that the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], and the amendment which I submit to his amendment, if agreed to, would make the rule precisely what it was in the Fifty-third Congress. So far from trying to extend the privilege, we are simply protesting against that privilege being narrowed, and we ask the Fifty-fourth Congress to accord no further or other privileges than were accorded by the Fifty-third Congress. The gentleman confuses the issue when he asks the House to believe that we are trying to enlarge the list so as to include all of the important business. We simply ask to make it as large in this Congress as it was in the Fifty-third Congress.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] has several times repeated the question, what is the reason for taking away from the Committee on Banking and Currency the privilege enjoyed by it in previous Congresses of making its reports and having its proposed legislation considered at any time?

That question is fair and simple. It deserves a frank and fair answer. Surely the gentlemen of the committee by whose votes the change was made can, if they will, give to the House the reasons which influenced them to make the change.

We have all been looking anxiously but vainly to those gentlemen who ought to be in a position to answer—to explain their departure in displacing this committee and the related Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. We have not received a satisfactory answer, and I think it may fairly be said that the answer made by gentlemen representing that committee have not evidenced the frankness that we ought to expect from them and from their dignified and responsible committee. Indeed, I think their answers may be fairly said to be evasive. One gentleman answers, "We are trying to preserve ancient landmarks." That clearly was not the reason influencing the Committee on Rules to make this change, because, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] has shown, they are cutting away an ancient landmark instead of preserving one. Another gentleman makes a special plea by selecting the case of the Committee on Public Lands and showing that, although given privilege, that committee in its right to make privileged reports is limited to special and highly important purposes; but he failed to show that the legislation which should come to the House from the Committee on Banking and Currency is less important or is less deserving of special attention. He has failed to show why the privilege was taken away from the Committee on Banking and Currency and left generally and without limitation to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions as to general bills, to the Committee on Territories, and to other committees included in the list. Surely, if the reasons given by gentlemen of the committee for its action in this behalf be the true reasons which influenced them, those reasons would have appealed to them with greater force to take away the privilege of these less important committees.

Now, sir, I think it may as well be stated openly by the Committee on Rules that, looking to what they believe to be the best interests of the Republican party in the next campaign, and for the moment closing their eyes to the best interests of the country, they desire to prevent the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Coinage from forcing any kind of financial legislation upon the attention of this House during the present session of Congress. They are trying to save the Republican party from the dangerous duty of even considering the financial legislation which the country now requires. They are trying to save their party from the danger of making a record on that question until after the next election. That is the purpose of the Committee on Rules, and it might as well be frankly stated.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], and also the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER]. Certainly of all the subjects to be considered by this House those in charge of those two committees are of vital importance to this country. Those committees were dignified in the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses by being made privileged committees; and it seems to me that the Fifty-fourth Congress can not afford to take a step backward in that line. The statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] that the time would be necessary for the Ways and Means Committee, and those others, is not a well-stated proposition, because we are already informed that the Ways and Means Committee have already dumped their grist in the hopper and it has been ground out in the shape of the horizontal tariff bill passed a few days ago. Now, it seems to me that, having done that, and followed it by their bond bill, they have completed their work, and therefore there ought not to be any conflict between the Ways and Means Committee and these two committees. Certainly the question of coinage and the question of the currency of this country ought to be of some importance, and sufficient importance to make them privileged. I hope both amendments will prevail.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent a few minutes ago and do not know exactly what has been said about the proposed amendment.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. We can not hear a word of what is being said.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will try to make the gentleman hear. I am not in harmony with the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I think I have a good reason for objecting to it. The rules provide how business shall be transacted in the House. We have calendars. As the membership of the House increases it is extremely difficult to go to the Calendar and take up and consider the business of the fifty-odd committees of this House. It is desirable that this should be done; that all the time of the House that is not necessarily given to the business that must be done or the Government stop should be, in an orderly way, devoted to the transaction of business under the general rules. Now, then, it is perfectly proper that certain committees should have the right to report at any time, which right carries with it the right of consideration.

The Ways and Means Committee is one, because it is necessary that the revenues should be raised to carry on the Government. The Appropriations Committee is another. These include the Appropriations Committee proper and the various committees that make up appropriation bills when reports are made as to those bills. The Committee on Printing is another, because that goes to the daily transaction of the business of the House. The Committee on Accounts is another. Now, when you have mentioned these committees, I do not now think of any other committee that ought to have the right of way over and above all the other committees, because gentlemen will notice that as you give this special privilege to committees it decreases the power of all the other committees to have their business considered under the general rules of the House.

In addition to the general rules of the House, we conduct much business from time to time under special orders reported from the Committee on Rules. I think it is unfortunate to be compelled to do so, and the only excuse for it is that in a House of the size of this from time to time, surrounded by the exigencies that may at that time exist, the majority of the House sees proper to adopt a special order; and this power is ever present in the House. Now, with this privilege of specified committees to report at any time, with the power to adopt a special order at any time, it seems to me that we ought to allow the general rules to operate. I believe under the rules that we now have, as it is proposed to amend them, if we are industrious, having gotten rid of mere waste of time by dilatory opposition, having at last the power universally conceded (and I am glad that it is universally conceded) to utilize the majority of this House that is present for a quorum either by vote or not—I say that with such amendments to the rules I hope and believe it will be possible to get to the Calendar and give the other fifty committees some chance for a hearing. And, further, I will say again that every privilege you give to special committees decreases the standing and influence of the other committees.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, those members of the House who have become familiar by experience with the method of transacting business here recognize that this is a very important question. In the first place, the House should understand that where a committee is given the right to report at any time that committee has the right to call its measures up for consideration at any time. Now, probably more than 10,000 bills will be introduced into this House; our calendars will be crowded, as they are in every Congress, and the great question to be determined here will be, as it always is, what business shall be considered? If it were possible to consider every bill upon the Calendar, then this would be a wholly unimportant question. If it were possible to consider even the great mass of the bills upon the Calendar, this would not be a question of much moment. But, for the reason that there must necessarily be a very large amount of business undisposed of at the end of each session of Congress, there has grown up the practice of incorporating in the rules a right to certain committees to have business reported by them considered beyond or outside of the general rule regulating the order of business. The Committee on Ways and Means, for example, is allowed to report at any time, which, as I have already said, means that that committee can report a bill and call it up for consideration at any time.

Measures reported from the Committee on Ways and Means are not required to take their turn upon the Calendar. That committee is not required to invoke a special rule from the Committee on Rules, but can itself report such business as it deems proper, and have it considered by the House. Why is that right given to the Ways and Means Committee? It is given to that committee because, in the judgment of the House, revenue bills are matters of very grave importance, and it is proper that the committee having charge of that business should have the right, of its own motion, without conference or consultation with the Committee on Rules, to call up such business whenever, in the judgment of the committee, it is ripe for consideration. The Committee on Appropriations has the same right. Why? Because the business with which it deals is recognized as of great importance, and the House has regarded it as proper that that committee should be taken out of the operation of the general rule and be given a right to present business for the consideration of the House whenever it thinks proper.

Now, the same right has been given to the Committee on Public Lands, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to the Committee on Accounts, and to the Committee on Printing. All those committees have been given this right to report measures and call them up for consideration at any time. During the last Congress so important were questions of banking and currency and coinage considered that leave was given to the respective committees having charge of those great subjects to report at any time, which, I repeat, carried with it the right to call up their business for consideration at any time. That action of the House simply meant that in the opinion of the majority of the members of the last Congress the questions of which those committees had jurisdiction were so important that it was not wise to require the committees to appeal to the Committee on Rules for a special rule whenever they had business to report, but that they should be given the right to report and call up such business whenever, in their judgment, it was ripe for consideration.

The proposition reported now from the Committee on Rules is to degrade these two committees from the high position they occupied in the last Congress—to take from them the right to have considered by the House measures reported by them relating to currency and coinage. Do not deceive yourselves, gentlemen. As you proceed further in the business of this Congress you will ascertain that there is no better graveyard for a proposition reported from a committee not having the right to report at any time than the Calendar of this House. [Laughter.] Your committees may be in constant session and activity. The committee presided over by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] may sit day and night and prepare a bill or bills, and may report those bills to the House and have them put upon the Calendar, but right there progress will stop. Right there those measures will linger and die unless the Committee on Rules can be induced to assign a special time for the consideration of them.

Now, if you adopt the amendment presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], the House itself will have the right to decide whether or no it will proceed with the consideration of business reported from that committee. Gentlemen should understand that no matter how anxious the House may be to consider a subject, no matter though three-fourths of the members may be anxious to consider it, the first step to authorize such consideration is a report from the Committee on Rules. It is not in the power of the House to change the rules or fix the order of business unless the Committee on Rules take the preliminary step to that end. Now, if you adopt this rule reported from the committee, without the amendments presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], you leave it in the power of the Committee on Rules to determine for you whether or no you shall consider the great questions of coinage and currency. On the other hand, if you adopt the amendments proposed, you retain in your own hands the right to determine whether or no you will consider those questions.

If you want to avoid a vote, if you want to dodge these questions, possibly you had better vote to retain the rule as reported from the Committee on Rules; but if you want to have a fair and full discussion of these great questions in the House, if you want them brought before the House so that each member can express his views and cast his vote upon them, then you ought to vote for the pending amendments. Those amendments deprive you of no right, but simply retain in your hands rights which you ought to have, and which you should not surrender to the Committee on Rules. Many gentlemen who have not had experience in the House do not fully realize the effect of the rule as reported, but I am now giving warning, and I say to them, if you fail to put these amendments in the rule and Congress adjourns without action on currency and coinage and you go home to your constituents and are asked, "What did you do with the currency and coinage questions?" and you reply, "We had no chance to vote upon either," say at the same time that by your own vote on this occasion, in making rules for the government of the House, you, with full knowledge, surrendered all power to the Committee on Rules, and thus deprived yourselves of the right to take any action upon either of those great questions. [Applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield now to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a question of proper procedure in the transaction of the business of the House, and I regret to see that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], who has just sat down, has descended from the high judicial position which he occupied in the chair in the last Congress, and in descending has appealed to this House as though he were speaking from the stump.

What is the method of procedure in all parliamentary bodies? What are the committees that are entitled in all such bodies to report at any time and thus to have their reports considered immediately by the House to which the report is made? In every parliamentary body in the United States of America, the only committees entitled to report at any time and to have their reports considered immediately when called up are those whose measures relate to raising revenue for the support of the government and appropriations therefor, those having jurisdiction of the rules, those dealing with the right of a member to his seat, and those having jurisdiction of the ordinary and necessary machinery for the transaction of daily business.

There is no State legislature in this country that gives to any committees the right to report at any time except committees that have to do with business that it is vital should be transacted in order that the government may be carried on. We have extended this principle in past years, improperly, as it seems to me, in the House of Representatives. We have extended it to the Committee on Public Lands in certain cases. We have extended it to the Committee on Pensions, purely from sentimental ideas; and we have extended it to one or two other committees. In the last Congress, under precisely such appeals as the gentleman from Georgia has made to us this morning, the House decided to set aside all the ordinary principles of procedure in parliamentary bodies and to extend to the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures the right to report at any time, and to have their business considered.

Now, I appeal to gentlemen of this House, especially to gentlemen on this side of the House, not to be misled by the kind of appeals which have been made here to-day, evidently not regardful of the proprieties of parliamentary procedure, but looking to certain partisan ends. Let us not be misled by such appeals. [Applause on the Republican side.] And let this side of the House understand just what the meaning of these appeals is.

Now, I desire to pass from all those considerations and simply to say to all members of this House that the principles of parliamentary procedure demand that we should not enlarge the list of committees authorized to report at any time beyond the number so authorized in the Fifty-first Congress; and it would be well, if we could, to cut out three committees that were so authorized in the Fifty-first Congress—committees whose business is not necessary to the carrying on of the Government. But the rule, as reported by the Committee on Rules, does not propose to go back and do that. We take this rule just as the Fifty-first Congress left it. And I again appeal to gentlemen, especially on this side of the House, not to be misled by any such appeals as we have had this morning into violating those principles of parliamentary procedure which are necessary for the successful transaction of business in the House of Representatives. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MCMILLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. LOUD rose.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], who, I understand, wants to put a question to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. LOUD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Maine one question. As I understand, the right, as covered by the rule, to have a bill considered can never bring a bill to a conclusion on the floor of this House unless the Committee on Rules should bring in a rule forcing the measure to a vote.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do you mean to say there may be filibustering to prevent the passage of a bill?

Mr. LOUD. Is it not the fact that a bill may be debated forever, unless the Committee on Rules bring in a rule to force the House to vote?

Mr. DINGLEY. The moving of the previous question cuts off debate, at least until it is voted down.

Mr. LOUD. But is it not a fact that during the last Congress a bill for the free coinage of silver was considered in the House, but never brought to a vote because the Committee on Rules did not bring in a rule to require a vote? The idea I desire to present is this: A measure can not be brought to a vote in this House simply because of a rule giving the committee having it in charge the privilege of reporting it and having it considered.

Mr. DINGLEY. Of course there may be filibustering to prevent a vote on any bill, even if it comes from a privileged committee.

Mr. LOUD. But can you bring a bill to a vote without a special rule?

Mr. DINGLEY. Generally we have no difficulty. Occasionally there is some difficulty when the measure is very strongly opposed.

Mr. LOUD. But can you bring a measure to a vote without a special rule? Without such a rule may it not be debated forever?

Mr. DINGLEY. All ordinary business can be brought to a vote. There may be an occasional instance where it can not be done.

Mr. LOUD. I think the gentleman is evading the question.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has just admitted that among the committees embraced in the list that it is here proposed to make privileged are some which ought not to be made so. He says that one of those committees was given the privilege on the ground of "pure sentiment." Now, if he can afford, on "pure sentiment," to give one committee this privilege of reporting its measures and having them considered at any time, it seems to me that he might at least have warmed himself up to the point of giving the right to report and consider to the committees whose measures are of the utmost importance to the business of this country.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. MCMILLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. CRAIN. Is it not a fact that the question of the coinage ratio was voted upon in the last Congress before any committee was appointed?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Yes, sir; I believe so. There was a vote on one of the silver bills before the committee had organized, I believe. And the votes embraced propositions to coin silver at the present ratio of 16 to 1, and to coin at the ratio of 17 to 1 and 18 to 1. All this was done before the committees were appointed.

Mr. Speaker, there are three classes of business which may be justly said to be of the utmost importance to the American people. First, the question how and how much the people shall be taxed is important. Such questions go to the Ways and Means Committee, and that committee has the right to report at any time. Secondly, what shall be done with the money that is raised by taxation is important. That is referred to the several Committees on Appropriations, and they have leave to report at any time.

Now, if they are important, how transcendently important is that question, Mr. Speaker, which involves the subject of how much money shall exist in this country to pay both taxes and appropriations, and what kind it shall be? I will touch on the merits of the questions to be considered, as the gentleman from Maine has spoken on the question of the importance of the subject. I do not believe that there is a member in this House who is satisfied, in toto, with the currency system of the people of the United States as it exists at this time. If there is any one thing that our recent disturbances have proven beyond all question, it is the fact that our banking system is not sufficient to adjust itself to a sudden panicky emergency which may arise at any time. Shall we have more or less bank circulation? Shall we repeal the 10 per cent tax on State banks?

These great questions are necessarily, under the rules, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and questions affecting our coinage, the weights of our coins, whether we shall coin silver, and kindred questions, are referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. I beg gentlemen to remember a fact which none will deny, that this question of currency and our banking laws has assumed an importance during the last third of a century that it never attained in Congress before in the entire history of this Government, and because of the fact that we have changed, in toto, our banking system. Originally the States dealt with the questions—the States through their legislatures—determined the nature, within certain limits, of the currency which circulated among their people. They chartered banks. These banks issued circulating notes. But this Congress, exercising its authority, not for raising revenue, not for collecting taxes, but as a war measure, to make a place for greenbacks and national-bank notes, imposed a 10 per cent tax on State-bank circulation, and has virtually crushed out all of the rights of the State legislatures to deal with the subject or provide currency for their people.

Every power that the Constitution originally attached to a State and the State legislature on this subject has been thus taken from them and transferred here. It was wrong, but it has been done. I know of no question more vital to our people than that which determines what their banking system shall be, what their currency shall consist of, and what character of coin shall circulate among them. This is very vital, Mr. Speaker, when we consider that half a billion in Federal taxes is annually gathered from all parts of this land.

It is well to remember also that we have in actual circulation, outside of our reserves, only between $1,500,000,000 and $1,600,000,000. One-third of that amount is handled by the Federal taxgatherers every year; a half a billion of it goes through the hands of the State, county, and municipal taxgatherers, leaving but about half a billion dollars untouched by our taxgatherers to meet the wants, the commerce, and the activity of our people. And will gentlemen here now deliberately say that a question so great as that, a question so vital and far-reaching in all its ramifications and results, a question that rises in importance second only to that of taxation itself, shall not be considered at the same time and with equal privileges that it permits to the consideration of an appropriation bill of $20,000,000 of money for the improvement of rivers or harbors or $140,000,000 for pensions?

I do not propose to discuss this question from a partisan standpoint. It is a question of such importance to the American people that it should not be dealt with in any such spirit, and so I appeal to you, representatives of the people from all parts of this land, to give some chance to these committees that deal with the currency of the country to enable them to get a hearing on this floor. Give a chance to have the 10 per cent tax on State banks repealed. Give an opportunity to have our silver coined. Enable us to give some relief to a suffering people. For I say to you now that if this permission is not embodied in the rules, if this privilege is not granted to these committees at this time, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures had just as well attempt to swim up the rapids of Niagara as to get their bills considered on this floor after they are reported from the committee. And the same thing is true with reference to measures reported from some other committees. So, gentlemen, you who represent regions of country which are interested in coinage, take note of that fact. You who want to relieve present stringency had better support these amendments.

Sir, it does not follow by any means that the granting of this privilege to these committees will deprive other committees of their privileges. Not at all. That is not a suggestion to be considered now. But you propose to give these other committees a fighting chance on their measures, and yet at the same time you deprive this great Committee on Banking and Currency, and the one on Coinage, of a like privilege. The question then is, will this House give to these committees a reasonable opportunity to deal with the important questions presented to them? For myself, I am now, as I have ever been, for the greatest liberty in dealing with these important public matters, having perfect confidence in the good sense of the American people and their representatives. If freedom of speech, freedom of amendments, freedom of action, and calm deliberation shall be given on this floor, their patriotism may be relied upon to take care of the American Union and of its vast and vital interests.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of Rule XI, reported from the Committee on Rules, the words "Committee on Rivers and Harbors, bills relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, my substitute is in line with some arguments presented on this floor in regard to the privileged committees. It has been claimed here that only those committees should be privileged under our rules whose bills have reference to the general business interests of the people or to the business of this House. We find among the privileged committees, however, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, whose bills, although privileged, may have reference to some small or unimportant improvement in the remote parts of the country and not of interest at all to the people at large. I believe that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures and the Committee on Banking and Currency should have this privilege over other committees, such as I have named, in view of the fact that they are dealing with the business interests of the country; they are charged with matters which relate to every individual citizen of these United States; and if they are not entitled to the privilege of reporting at any time, a committee that is in charge of measures that may be entirely unimportant ought not to be accorded that privilege.

Mr. BOATNER. If the gentleman will allow me, I merely want to suggest to him that this amendment about rivers and harbors is entirely unnecessary. That bill generally goes through of its own weight.

Mr. MONDELL. I did not understand the remark of the gentleman.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the substitute proposed by the gentleman who has just spoken, and will support the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER]. In addition to what I have already said, I desire to send to the Clerk's desk some remarks that were delivered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] when this same proposition was made to amend the rules of the last House. If gentlemen of the majority will hear the reasons given by him at that time they will get an answer to what he has said to-day, and I submit that his words should now be applied to his side of the House as he sought to apply them to this side then. I ask the Clerk to read the paragraph which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in sympathy with the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. Springer]. I am in sympathy with it for the reason that now our friends on the other side of the House are not only in power here and in the Senate, but they also have the Presidency, and the responsibility for legislation rests upon them. The time has come when they can no longer fold their hands and say, "No, no." And this is especially true in this matter of the currency.

If justice is to be done to the business interests of the country, to the industrial interests, in fact, to all the interests of the country, the time has come when you gentlemen must either take the financial system that you find and adopt it without amendment, or must take it and amend and improve it; or, if that is not agreeable to your policy, must wipe it out and put some better or worse system upon the statute book. The country demands a policy in this matter of the currency. Therefore, I repeat, I am in harmony with my colleague's amendment. The committee of which he has the honor to be chairman should be given the power to report at any time, that power carrying with it the right to insist upon consideration of the measures reported. I shall vote for the amendment.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McRAE. In the mutations of politics the majority has become the minority, and the advice that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] gave to us two years ago I now commend to him. I will say, however, in justice to my friend, that notwithstanding he made the speech which has been accredited to him he is recorded as having voted against the amendment, and if he will vote against his own reasoning now as he did then I will not complain. The suggestion that he made as to the importance of the subjects then was so well received as to influence, or at least to aid in influencing, a very large majority of that Congress to adopt the amendment. The country does want the currency and coinage laws of this country reformed. The people have demanded it. They demanded it of the Democrats. We failed and we have received our rebuke. If you fail you will receive yours. Those of you who want coinage and currency legislation should remember that now is your time to protect your right to consideration.

Suppose an amendment to the bond bill passes the Senate and comes back to this House providing for free coinage, and that amendment is smothered in the committee, as the gentleman from Georgia has told you it can be, then do not say that you did not have fair warning. The proposition is a plain and fair one. Let us then come up boldly and squarely and meet this issue courageously. If the House wants to consider these questions, give the committee the right to report what they may mature for consideration.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I submit that what is called the substitute is not in order. It is an entirely independent proposition, relating to a different part of the rule. It does not substitute or dispose of the proposition in the amendment, or the amendment to the amendment. We have two amendments pending, and this is a proposition which, although it is called a substitute, really seeks to strike out an entirely different committee, having no connection with the same subject. I submit that it is out of order.

Mr. BAILEY. The point of order comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida is right, but no point of order was made.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that if the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] would more frequently take up some of my old speeches and read them, possibly they might shed more light than his speech made at the present time. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILES. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. No, not just now. I am speaking about the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE]. I have examined the extract from the RECORD which the gentleman from Arkansas had read. It seems that during the last Congress, when the President of the United States was Democratic, when this House was Democratic, and the Senate was Democratic, when for twenty years, almost, they had been agonizing before the country for power, promising all things to all men touching the currency and touching the revenues, at last, when they came into full power, my then colleague [Mr. Springer], who always shone in this House like a beacon in the storm, was at the head of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and desired to have his committee, under those conditions, given leave to report at any time. They were differently situated from what the Republicans are now, and therefore were anxious to try to keep their promises, and appealed for this special power. Out of good feeling to Brother Springer and wanting to see you Democrats in the last Congress run and glorify, I suppose I must have made those remarks. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. But the gentleman did not assign the reason he has just given.

Mr. DINGLEY. And the gentleman voted right.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says I voted right. I shall always be glad if I vote right. I have noticed in my experience at the bar and in legislative bodies that the action is many times better than the talking. I am now of the opinion, with only partial power in Congress, that a Republican House will get better results and do more good legislation by readopting the rule of the Fifty-first Congress touching the orderly consideration of business.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BAILEY. Division. I demand the yeas and nays; it will save the time in taking a division.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 114, nays 181, not voting 61; as follows:

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that this House has the right to be dealt with with entire frankness by the Committee on Rules, and by the chairmen of the various committees who are included in this right to "report at any time." I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, as I have no right to doubt, their entire frankness of purpose in the remarks they made to this House; but I think, furthermore, that I have the right to say that they have failed to make the impression on this House that they should have made in the remarks they have addressed to it. We are told that this is a matter of procedure. Certainly it is a matter of procedure; but it is a matter of a very peculiar procedure. We are told that only business of vital importance ought to have the right of presentation to this House at any time through the committees charged with such business. Furthermore, we are told that some of the committees included in the list were so included because of sentiment.

Now, I would like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, and through you ask this House, what there is in the matter of legislation of great and vital importance that needs sudden consideration with reference to matters with which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors are charged, and what sentiment induced the committee to include with the other committees the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in granting it this privilege to report at any time? Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], with his peculiar frankness, tell us what feeling of sentiment and what matter of hurry and of vital importance induced him to justify the report of the committee including Rivers and Harbors in this rule and excluding the Committee on Banking and Currency? However constituted, whoever may be members of it, what they have done themselves, and in what they have done heretofore in this House to commend them to this House, it is a striking commentary upon the Speaker of the House in constituting that committee that the Committee on Rules excluded it from its former place.

Again, why do they exclude the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, just constituted by the Speaker, having, it is said, 10 members upon it who agree with the views of the Speaker. Again, as we have given the Committee on Rules absolute power to take any question out of this House before it has had any discussion at all, or at any point in its discussion, what harm can there be in including a committee—or two committees, I may say—that the country is now looking to for most important action and legislation on the subjects now before it. Then, again, I would like to ask of this committee what there is about the business of the Committee on Public Lands that is of such sudden and vital importance that it should have this right, to the exclusion of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and what sentimental consideration induced the Committee on Rules to include the Committee on Public Lands in this rule to the exclusion of the two committees they have taken out of it?

Again, take the Committee on Territories. What, I ask, is the sudden exigency of the business referred to the Committee on Territories, or what sentimental considerations are there which should induce the Committee on Rules to include that committee in its report? Next comes the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Yes; the Committee on Invalid Pensions ought to have precedence, and I am willing that it shall have preference if it is necessary; but, as everyone knows, this House never has hesitated to grant to the Committee on Invalid Pensions a hearing, in season or out of season, and if there is any committee in this House that really does not need the protection of a rule such as this, it is the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, this question: Upon the idea that the committee is not to have the privilege of reporting its measures at any time, what does your committee amount to? [Laughter.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that I think this House will decide that question, and I am now trying to convince the members of the House that they should decide it properly, and in favor of the motion to include the Banking and Currency Committee to report at any time.

Mr. COX. One word more, Mr. Speaker. I will say to the gentleman that he will never convince this House the way he is going on, and, further, I tell him that his Committee on Banking and Currency is a cipher in this House. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, let me say, in reply to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], that the rules provide what the procedure of this House shall be. Certainly they do, and either all these committees, with the exception of three or four, should be taken out of this rule, or else the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Coinage should be included in it. After the vote is taken upon this amendment I shall therefore move that all these other committees be taken out of this rule except the Committee on Rules, the Committee on Elections, the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Enrolled Bills, and the Committee on Printing. If the Committee on Banking and Currency is not to have the same privileges in this House as other committees included in this rule, many of them far inferior to it in importance, then I claim that those committees ought not to be included, for certainly there is no gentleman here who will say that the business with which they have to deal is of more importance than that which is dealt with by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take more than a moment of the time of the House. As a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I wish to say that if this rule which is reported from the Committee on Rules should be adopted there can be no question as to one result. That result will be that whatever time the members of the committee may devote to the consideration of measures of legislation will be wasted and their labor will amount to nothing. If this amendment which is offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], our chairman, is adopted we may probably work out some good results, but if the committee is to be set back as indicated by the report of the Committee on Rules, I do not think it is worth the cost or trouble of printing its name in the RECORD. [Laughter.]

The substitute was read, as follows:

Strike out of Rule XI the following words: "The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors."

The substitute was rejected.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts, it was again read, as follows:

Insert, after the words "rivers and harbors," the words "Committee on Banking and Currency, bills relating to banking and currency."

The question being taken on the amendment, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 115, nays 159, not voting 82; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PAYNE and Mr. TARSNEY were announced as paired on this vote.

Mr. BARHAM. Mr. Speaker, I was not present during the roll call, but I desire to vote "no."

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House the gentleman can not vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. If there is no other amendment to be offered to Rule XI, the Clerk will read the next amendment reported from the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 58 of Rule XI (old section 52) by inserting, after the word "committee," the words "except the Committee on Rules"; so that the section will read as follows:

"58. No committee, except the Committee on Rules, shall sit during the sitting of the House without special leave."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Rule XII, after "Mines and Mining," insert "and two on Territories"; so that the rule shall read:

"RULE XII.

"DELEGATES.

"The Speaker shall appoint from among the Delegates one additional member on each of the following committees, viz: Coinage, Weights, and Measures; Agriculture; Military Affairs; Post-Office and Post-Roads; Public Lands; Indian Affairs; Private Land Claims, and Mines and Mining; and two on Territories; and they shall possess in their respective committees the same powers and privileges as in the House, and may make any motion except to reconsider."

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the effect of that is solely to put two Delegates on the Committee on Territories where under the present rule there is but one.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of Rule XIV the following: "Neither shall any person be allowed to smoke upon the floor of the House at any time."

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Iowa will explain the full extent to which he intends that amendment to go. I believe I understand it myself, but I think it would be well that he should explain it so that the officers of the House and members may understand just what is contemplated by this amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not hear the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. CATCHINGS. This is an amendment of very great importance and one which I very heartily indorse; but I suggest to my friend from Iowa that he explain to the House the full significance of the amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suppose from the manifestation of applause on the part of the House that this provision is thoroughly appreciated. I will state, however, in compliance with my friend's request, the effect of the provision. Under the present rule smoking is prohibited only during the sessions of the House and on the floor of the House—within this Hall. Under the amendment reported from the committee smoking is never to be allowed before or after the sessions in this Hall. It is absolutely prohibited here.

Many MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. HENDERSON. The cloakroom is not a part of the House, as I understand.

The theory of the committee in making this recommendation was briefly this: It is well known that many ladies are compelled to leave the galleries of this House because of the impure air resulting from the practice of smoking. This evil is not averted by discontinuing smoking during the sessions of the House if it goes on upon this floor one, two, or three hours before the gavel falls for the commencement of business. The committee believe that at all times the air of this Legislative Hall should be exempt from the polluting influence of tobacco in this form, so that the American citizen desiring to look down upon Congress from our galleries may do so without suffering the contaminating effects of tobacco smoke. [Applause.]

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, I believe that since I have had a seat in this body members have been killed not alone because of the polluting effects of tobacco, but generally because of the impure air in this Hall. I think this provision will be a great step toward the preservation of the health of members of this body. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken, the amendment proposed by the committee was agreed to. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Was it the agreement that after the amendments of the committee had been disposed of the other sections of the same rule should be subject to amendment? I have an amendment I desire to offer to clause 1, Rule XIV.

Mr. HENDERSON. As I understand the order of proceeding, we are first to dispose of the committee amendments, after which any amendments may be offered by any member to the pending rule or any section of it.

Mr. HEPBURN. As I understand, there was one amendment of the committee to Rule XIV (in clause 3) which has been agreed to. Now, I desire to offer an amendment to clause 1 of the same rule.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is right.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I will state my amendment. It is to insert after the word "Speaker" the words "and shall be recognized," striking out the words "on being"; so that the clause will read:

When any member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House he shall rise and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker," and shall be recognized, and may address the House from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk, and shall confine himself to the question under debate, avoiding personalities.

Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, Rule XIV, clause 1, is the most important upon which this House will act. I believe the rule as it stands to be wrong; to be grossly violative of the Constitution of the United States; to be a perversion of the power that is vested in the membership of this House by the surrender of it to the Speaker of the House. If there is any one proposition of the Constitution that is well established it is the absolute equality of constituencies and of the representatives of constituencies on this floor. Here each member is the equal of every other member in the contemplation of the Constitution. Here every member has the right of every other member; here every constituency has the same right to be heard at all times and upon all questions through its selected representative. This rule of ours surrenders that right and puts into the hands of the Speaker the power arbitrarily to silence a constituency during the existence of an entire Congress. In other words, my constituents can be heard only when it meets the pleasure of the Speaker that they should be.

In the remarks I now make I am not saying aught to impugn the fairness, or the kindliness, or the sense of justice of the honored gentleman who presides over this House. As the rule is now we throw upon him the great burden and responsibility of recognition. We compel him to choose what members shall speak and what constituencies shall not be heard. I propose by the change I have suggested to relieve him of that responsibility, and to make it his duty to recognize a member who, in respectful attitude, addresses him. Mr. Speaker, the authority does not belong to us as members to surrender this right. Our constituents are clothed by the Constitution with power—the power to be heard, the power to deliver or have delivered their messages to this House, and we as their representatives have no right, in my humble judgment, to deprive them of this power by its surrender.

It has been suggested to me by gentlemen with whom I have discussed this matter that the Speaker can not do the business of the House unless he is intrusted with this power. Why, Mr. Speaker, we are a reasonable people, and, I take it, we will ask no more of the Speaker than we make it possible for him to perform. Besides, allow me to suggest that that expression embodies an idea entirely at war with the true one. This is a deliberative body. Business here is to be done by the people's representatives, and not by the Speaker. I heard it suggested once as coming from the Speaker that there would be no debate upon a certain question, because this was "not a debating school." Ah, Mr. Speaker, there is getting abroad too much of the idea of the schoolmaster in the Speaker's chair. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I believe it is time to call a halt on that, and to relieve the Speaker of this grave responsibility—to make this House again a deliberative body.

Gentlemen suggest that if this change is made in the rules there will be great confusion, as well as great delay. I doubt it. If the right to be heard should be abused, with the ample power already vested in the Committee on Rules how easy it would be to check the abuse. We need not fear that.

I remember trying to call the attention of this House to the matter some time ago—two years ago. Then the suggestion did not meet a response from many men who later on said to me, after they had witnessed the practical workings of the rule—after they had seen a kind and amiable and courteous Speaker, when men were clamoring for recognition, coolly ask, "for what purpose does the gentleman rise," on other occasions refusing to recognize a member until a message could be sent by a page to some derelict member and a suggestion made to such a one that if he sought the floor he would be recognized to the exclusion of those already on the floor and with equal rights to him demanding to be heard; after gentlemen had witnessed spectacles of this kind, after they had seen how little worth were the rights of membership, they said to me that they would have been glad to have an opportunity to adopt such a rule as would relieve the Speaker of this difficulty and put upon him an obligation to recognize that person upon whom his eye first rested.

Mr. Speaker, this is not an innovation. The innovation is on the other side. Up to the Forty-sixth Congress the Speaker of the House of Representatives was required to recognize the member upon whom his eye first rested. Then the rule was changed and the language of the present rule adopted. The words "and on being recognized," have been construed as giving the Speaker the power to refuse recognition on this floor and to thwart the purposes of the Constitution, to defeat the equality of members, and the rights of constituencies, and whatever abuses have sprung from that condition of affairs have grown out of this construction of this rule.

I hold in my hand an admirable authority on parliamentary procedure.

Several MEMBERS. Who is the author?

Mr. HEPBURN. It is by the Hon. THOMAS B. REED. [Applause.] It bears date 1894, a date intermediate between the ending of the Fifty-first Congress and the beginning of the Fifty-fourth, when there was nothing but a record of the scenes in this branch of the lawmaking power to influence in any way the opinions of its writer. He says, on page 157:

In the United States House of Representatives the recognition by the Speaker is never questioned. This is right, for any other course would inevitably lead to confusion. But if a member rises he will, of course, be recognized.

I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, that the last sentence is a part of the parliamentary law universal everywhere save in this Chamber—everywhere. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, certain gentlemen have suggested opposition to the proposed amendment because of the confusion that would arise if the determination of the Speaker were not final with reference to the question of recognition. But gentlemen must bear in mind that the rule I have suggested does not affect this question at all. I am content that the determination of the Speaker shall be final in that regard. I am not asking that an appeal should be had, although it is true that in that deliberative body from which we have borrowed largely our form of procedure an appeal is permitted from the decision of the speaker with reference to recognitions. I do not ask for that. I think the Speaker should have the power finally to determine, but I think it wise for us to say how he should determine it, or what our prerogatives are on this floor. As the matter now stands, we throw the responsibility solely on him, which in effect enables him to settle this matter as he chooses; that A, B, C, or D shall have a right to the floor; that others shall not have.

Now, the rule, as I would have it, simply requires that when a member of this House, invested with the same rights as every other member, sent here to aid in deliberation, from a constituency that has the same rights as any other constituency, who in a respectful manner rises and addresses himself, "Mr. Speaker," when no one else seeks the floor, and when he is the first to thus address the Speaker, my rule requires that under such circumstances the Speaker shall recognize him. I believe it is right that it ought to be done. [Applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, this is an astounding proposition, and merits the careful consideration of this body. I concede that the power lodged with the presiding officer of this legislative body is a very great power, but I fail to see wherein my colleague points out a remedy. His amendment certainly does not.

Now, let us see what is the underlying principle of this whole question. Carried to its ultimate conclusion, the amendment of my colleague will give the right to each one of the 356 members of this House to be recognized and to be heard on any question.

In the very nature of things every member of this House could not be heard upon every question. Does any member of this House, including my colleague, deny that proposition? If it is not possible for the 356 members to be heard on every question, then on his reasoning we defy the constitutional right of each member. If that curtails our rights and privileges as Representatives, then every rule that takes the right from the individual Representative to be recognized, have a bill read, have it considered, debated, and acted upon at the time, is a violation of his constitutional rights. The creation of committees which meet around these halls and corridors, where bills must first be matured, considered, and reported, is an interference with the member's constitutional rights.

Now, let us look at it from another standpoint. The Speaker, in the exercise of his sound judgment, by an unwritten law of this House, recognizes the members of the committees reporting bills before other members are recognized for debate. A committee brings in a bill of great importance that they have considered in committee for a month, upon which they have heard the arguments of experts, where heads of Departments and bureaus have been before them to give them light and information, and yet agility and a tremendous voice may defeat a single member of that committee from ever being heard upon the bill which they have reported. Does my colleague seriously commend that to the House of Representatives?

Under the unwritten law, pursued by every Speaker, the members of the committee first come here to be heard. They come charged with knowledge that the rest of us have not. It would be a pretty state of parliamentary proceeding if the first fellow who could get his voice and figure before the Speaker could take an hour, and then another take an hour, and this House never have the benefit of the instruction and information which the members of the committee have possessed themselves of by diligence and by days and months of study.

Now, we are told that this was an innovation in the Forty-sixth Congress. This matter is sprung upon me. I have not had the time to give it the investigation which my colleague has given it; but I notice, turning to our rules, on page 501, first session Fifty-third Congress, a report made by Mr. Garfield in the Forty-sixth Congress, in which it is said:

> With the exception of the last clause of Rule CXIII, which was adopted in 1805, these rules have remained unchanged for twenty years.

This is where they brought in the rule on this very subject:

> When any member is about to speak in debate, or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise from his seat and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker."

Mr. Garfield goes on in his report——

Mr. HEPBURN. Have you read all of that rule?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am reading it now. Mr. Garfield goes on in his report:

> In the nature of the case discretion must be lodged with the presiding officer.

Mr. HEPBURN. If my colleage will permit me, did he read the rule?

Mr. HENDERSON. I have read that part of the rule which calls forth the report, and which is given here on this page.

Mr. HEPBURN. And that rule Mr. Garfield approves of, and in that rule we do not find the language which I condemn.

Mr. HENDERSON. He does not quote the whole of it, but he is introducing that subject, as the report will show. This discussion which he gives here will show exactly what his interpretation was of the question. He says:

> In the nature of the case discretion must be lodged with the presiding officer, and no fixed and arbitrary order of recognition can be wisely provided for in advance; and the committee are of the opinion that these rules should not be changed.
> The practice of making the list of those who desire to speak on measures before the House or Committee of the Whole is a proper one, to enable the presiding officer to know and remember the wishes of members. As to the order of recognition, he should not be bound to follow the list, but should be free to exercise a wise and just discretion in the interest of full and fair debate.

Where else can you lodge it than in our creature and our head who presides over us?

Then here is what is stated in the rules as the result of the examination:

> In general terms it may be said that, except in cases where the rules expressly fix the rank and order of motions, thus requiring the Chair to entertain a superior in preference to an inferior motion, the uniform practice of the House has been to lodge with the Speaker exclusively the question of recognition, from which there is no appeal.

Now, my colleague says that this was not known until the Forty-sixth Congress. At the second session of the Thirty-second Congress, page 405 of the proceedings of that session, on March 3, 1853—

> Mr. Schermerhorn having been recognized by the Chair, Mr. Henn made the point of order that he was not entitled to the floor, not having risen from his seat at the time he addressed the Chair.

He was not even up.

> The Speaker (Mr. Stuart in the chair) overruled the point of order, on the ground that the rules confer authority upon the Speaker to name the member who is entitled to the floor.

Now, let me suggest some of the difficulties that occur to my mind. A bill is up for consideration, something that interests the entire legislative body. Every man is instantly upon his feet, for, under the amendment of my colleague, it is vigor, supple joints, and loud voice that will have the advantage. We are now invited to adopt a system of confusion and not an orderly system. We are all upon our feet saying "Mr. Speaker." Suppose, as a matter of fact, and it is quite a supposable fact, that a hundred men spring to their feet and say that at once. How is the Speaker to determine? Suppose he does determine in favor of Mr. A, and Mr. B, Mr. C, and Mr. D, and so on down through the alphabet, four times repeated, each contends that he was the first to address the Chair. Are we going to stop in this body and hold a trial as to the matter of precedence and determine who is entitled to recognition? Gentlemen, if you want pandemonium let loose, adopt the amendment. If you want to drive order from this floor, adopt the amendment. I know that sometimes it seems hard that gentlemen can not be recognized. I have suffered from it many a time when I was loaded with information that I thought this House ought to have. [Laughter.] And yet by long experience I have learned that the system of recognizing those specially equipped by committee work was the proper thing. There is not a member here but is a member of some committee. He may at his opening session, as I had at mine, have the misfortune to be on a committee to investigate some Department or other before which nothing ever comes.

I was on the Committee on Banking and Currency. We had nothing special to do at the time. I do not believe I ever got the floor except when through kindness some brother thought he would like to see me try my stepping qualities at the beginning, but as time has rolled by and experience has come, I have seen the wisdom of having those recognized who ought to be heard. But, Mr. Speaker, I will not extend my remarks further on this question, it seems so clear. The experience of every legislative body in the world recognizes this right of the Speaker. The contention is made that the Senate of the United States is an exception. God save this House from that exception! For the right of recognition would tie up the business of this Republic, and it could not be done. But, as I understand it, in nearly every legislative body in the civilized world that power is lodged in the presiding officer.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. It is not done in town meetings. In town meetings, where there are but few and little gatherings, for public purposes, where they are voluntarily thrown together, the other rule ought to be adhered to.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. I will hear my friend from Georgia directly. I never turned him down.

In great conventions of all political parties a wise discretion is exercised by the presiding officer as to who will be recognized.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to ask the gentleman whether he believes it to be proper treatment of a Representative on this floor, who has a constituency of his own, when he rises to address the Chair, when there is no confusion by reason of numbers who rise, that he should be asked, "For what purpose does the gentleman rise"?

Mr. HENDERSON. I certainly do. I think it is the best thing to do; because the party may rise for a purpose that will block and delay the business of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. One more question. Does not his responsibility first rest with his constituency, and should not he be governed by his responsibility to them rather than it should be left to the arbitrary power of the Speaker?

Mr. HENDERSON. But my friend from Georgia must remember that each Representative here has a proud constituency behind him, and what I am contending is that the man with the nimble legs must not be able to get away with the right of the member who is best equipped in the matter under discussion. I am looking out for the chaps who are not fully furnished with legs. But I will not extend my remarks any further.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has brought up this subject. In my opinion is the first thing during this session that indicates a reformation of matters. I belong to a party that casts 1,600,000 votes, and there are seven of us in this Hall. There are three or four more who are entitled to places in this Hall, knocking at the doors of the Election Committees. We have stood here during the last four weeks and pleaded with the Speaker and with the members leading this House for the majority, and not one member of the Populist party has been permitted by them during this session the privilege of addressing the House in his own time. The few moments I obtained heretofore were from Judge CRISP and taken out of his time. As I have before said, we represent a constituency that casts 1,600,000 votes. We had a joint conference with the Populist members of the Senate a few days ago, and it was unanimously agreed that a resolution should be presented to this House and to the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures shall inquire what effect, if any, the divergence between gold and silver has upon commerce in this country.

We came to this House, and I was designated by the joint conference of the Populists in the Senate and House of Representatives to ask the Speaker to request the unanimous consent of the House to allow us to consider this question while we were in absolute idleness.

We had not done a day's work, although we had been drawing our pay for four weeks. We had been meeting and adjourning at the twinkling of the eye of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. [Laughter.] I went to the Speaker and said that I would like recognition to ask this House if it would give consent to discuss the important question: What effect, if any, does the divergence between gold and silver have upon commerce? He looked at my resolution and kindly but firmly said: "I should not like to recognize you for this resolution." Now, I want to say for the State of Colorado, represented here by Mr. SHAFROTH as a Republican and by myself as a Populist, that the other day when you brought in your bond bill there were no two Representatives in this House who were more interested in that question, or who represented constituencies more interested in it than our constituencies are, yet I could not get an opportunity to even breathe aloud upon that subject. [Laughter.] It is true that my colleague, by joining a rebellion, did get in for three minutes just before the hammer fell for adjournment; but when he was recognized he was in the attitude of going out of the back door, not expecting it or asking it at that time. [Laughter.]

So far as the committees are concerned, the Populist members of this body have not a single important position on a committee in this House. Their committee assignments signify nothing. We thought that the predecessor of the present Speaker was a little hard on Populists; we thought that, from the fact that the invincible Thomas Watson lived in his State, he did not appreciate Populists; but when we came to compare our committee assignments in the Fifty-third Congress with the treatment that we have had at this session, we are forced to the conclusion that they do not care much about Populists even down in the old State of Maine where they have none but Republicans. [Laughter.]

These rules give control of the House to less than a half dozen men—the five forming a Committee on Rules—the dictates of whom a majority will obediently obey. The rules of this House give the power of the American Congress to a half dozen States. Take the State of Maine, with 600,000 inhabitants, and it has the greatest power of any State in the Union here. I know one county in Colorado that contains more innate wealth than can be found in all of the State of Maine, and this whole State is without recognition in any committee concerning her chief resources under these sacred rules. Maine, with four Representatives, occupies four of the best positions in this House and directs and controls more legislation than all the members of the Western States from Colorado to California, inclusive, and we are told this is in accordance with these sacred rules. Take the State of Iowa—God bless her—she is out West somewhat, but I think she is off the track—take the State of Iowa, with her eleven Representatives, she has, I believe, seven good chairmanships of committees said to be under these just rules, and I suppose just because she is off the track. I do not wonder, therefore, that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] says, "Leave it to the Speaker and to these old-time rules." He is chairman of one of the best committees, he is second on the Committee on Rules, and he can have the floor in season and out of season, while constituencies that have not been recognized upon committees and can not get the Speaker's eye have no recognition in this House.

Now, I repeat what I have already said, that it is time this House was taking another course. I was surprised at the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] resenting comparison with the Senate of the United States. It acknowledges the equality of the States as well as individual rights of members. The day has been when the House of Representatives was the great deliberative body of the American people. The day has been when this was a great deliberative body, but it has degenerated until it has become the body of bosses, the body of tyranny, the body where individualism is swallowed up by a few old war horses who come down here every year to run the American Congress. [Laughter and applause.]

I want to say further, that Colorado did not send me and I do not think sent my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH]—though I do not pretend to speak for him—here to have her interests represented by Massachusetts, Maine, or by Iowa, although, if all the Representatives from those States had the same qualities as evidenced by the gentleman [Mr. HEPBURN] who addressed the House a short while ago, I would almost be willing to be ruled in that way, because I know he would always love justice and do it wherever it could be done. [Laughter.] The things desired by these leaders are the very things that we do not want. And now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say to this House that it has not done, in my opinion, up to this day one creditable thing for the good of the people. [Laughter.] It started in with a sensation sprung by the gentleman from the grand old State of Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT], who, as his own party papers say, brought a question before this House indirectly which he knew would not be permitted under the rules he helped to fasten on us. He said in substance: "We will do indirectly in this body a thing that the rules will not permit us to do directly."

That gentleman presented an impeachment resolution, which was admitted by his own newspapers and friends to be an odious violation of the spirit of the rules. It was known that it was not an impeachable, though a reprehensible, offense. Then came the war cry that was precipitated upon us by the President's message. Immediately the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], after the war message of the President had been read, attempted to introduce a bill to carry out the suggestions of a Democratic President. He rose and cried out, "Mr. Speaker," but in that case the Speaker was both blind and deaf. [Laughter.] Next morning, however, to our great surprise, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] came in with a bill which he said complied with the request of the President, and then he looked over at this side of the House (referring to Democrats) and said, "Now, gentlemen, I beg of you to let us pass this bill and help the President out"; the fact being that they had adjourned on the day before simply for the purpose of giving Mr. HITT, a Republican, an opportunity of introducing the bill, so as to keep the Democratic side from having the supposed credit of it. [Laughter.] That was all there was in it. It was merely an attempt to go to the country upon that as a piece of petty politics; and while a great majority of the Republican party and a portion of the Democratic party in this House were masquerading under the guise of patriotism, every thinking member knows it was a piece of the cheapest kind of party politics. [Laughter.]

Then another question came up quickly, and in that case I admit that you gentlemen did what the President wanted you to do [referring to Republicans]. After you had joined the President in the war scare, and he had sent in his message for you to further destroy the industries of this country by building up the bonded debt and a gold standard for the money centers of the East and of other countries, you certainly did just what he wanted and asked you to do. You varied it a little in form, but you did in substance just what he asked you to do. You gave him bonds which you said were payable in "coin," but the construction of the Republican party has been the construction of the Speaker of this House and of its other leaders in the last Congress—that "coin" means gold.

Those who supported that measure understood what its effect would be. They intended to retire every greenback and every Treasury note. Although they did not say so, that was the manifest object. There was in the Treasury, as they knew at that time, money enough to pay the expenses of the Government; that from former sales of bonds the Treasury had $170,000,000 in available cash. You well knew that if you got into the Treasury two or three hundred million dollars more the Treasury notes would be laid aside, because not needed, and would be taken out of circulation as they were received and would not be reissued or paid out. If this House wants to maintain its old record—if this House wants again to become a deliberative body, it must go back to first principles, to statesmanship and patriotism.

We, as Populists, as also the new Republican members, have appealed time and again in this House for recognition. The few Populists who are here have permitted you to come in on the Republican and on the Democratic side and pass your bills by unanimous consent. But under your present rules, here are seven members, representing a constituency of over a million and a quarter of voters and over 6,000,000 people, who have had no recognition in this House, who are not even regarded as a part of the minority. To the representatives of this vast constituency are given little positions upon committees that do not deserve to be dignified by the name of committees. They are not given a single position on a good committee anywhere. I speak of this in answer to the argument of the gentleman from Iowa who last spoke. He suggested that we have the right of debate on measures coming from our committees. I want to say to him that the members of the Populist party are on no committees, and the same may be said of new members of the Republican party from the West. Therefore I gladly second the generous effort of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] who first spoke in favor of amending these autocratic and despotic rules.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to withdraw the amendment. [Loud laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the next amendment proposed by the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to Rule XVII the following new section:

"4. Whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question, and a quorum is not present, and objection is made for that cause, there shall be a call of the House, and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall forthwith proceed to bring in absent members, and the yeas and nays on the pending question shall at the same time be considered as ordered. The Clerk shall call the roll, and each member as he answers to his name may vote on the pending question, and, after the roll call is completed, each member arrested shall be brought by the Sergeant-at-Arms before the House, whereupon he shall be noted as present, discharged from arrest, and given an opportunity to vote, and his vote shall be recorded. If those voting on the question and those who are present and decline to vote shall together make a majority of the House, the Speaker shall declare that a quorum is constituted, and the pending question shall be decided as the majority of those voting shall appear. And thereupon further proceedings under the call shall be considered as dispensed with."

Mr. HENDERSON and Mr. WHEELER addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized. The gentleman from Alabama will be heard at the proper time.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. In the third line from the last, where this section reads "and the pending question shall be decided as the majority of those voting shall appear," did the committee intend to use the word "voting" or the word "present"?

Mr. HENDERSON. "Voting" was the word intended.

Mr. BAILEY. I very much doubt whether the House has the power to adopt the rule in that form. I think the Supreme Court has decided that to determine a question the vote of a majority of those present is required.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the gentleman will take the whole sentence together, he will find it all right.

Mr. BAILEY. We can decide that in a moment. I will refer to the case.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, this section is what is known as "the Tucker rule." The object is to secure a quorum. Many times when a vote is being taken in the House members will get up and leave, so that they neither vote nor can they be noted by any officer of the House as present. This section provides that a member may be brought in by the Sergeant-at-Arms, noted as present, discharged from arrest, and have the privilege of voting, if he should wish to vote, and if not shall be counted as present to constitute a quorum. This provision is in the line of the reform which has been progressing for the conduct of business in this body. When first proposed in the Forty-sixth Congress by Mr. Tucker, of Virginia, the father of the present honored member of that name, this provision was voted down. The present occupant of the Speaker's chair tendered it again, by motion, in the Fifty-third Congress.

With our large majority on this side we do not need a provision of this kind; but that makes it all the more desirable to take it up and incorporate it in the rules of the House at a time when the contention can not be sustained that we do it for any partisan purpose.

Mr. PICKLER. I wish to ask the gentleman a question as to the practical working of this provision. It is here provided that—

The Clerk shall call the roll, and each member as he answers to his name may vote on the pending question, and, after the roll call is completed, each member arrested shall be brought by the Sergeant-at-Arms before the House, whereupon he shall be noted as present, discharged from arrest, and given an opportunity to vote, and his vote shall be recorded. If those voting on the question and those who are present and decline to vote shall together make a majority of the House, the Speaker shall declare that a quorum is constituted, and the pending question shall be decided as the majority of those voting shall appear.

Now, suppose on some occasion when the roll is called there is no quorum present, and the Sergeant-at-Arms, being sent out to arrest members, does not find enough to make a quorum. If we adopt this rule, will it not be impossible under such circumstances for the House to adjourn or to dispense with further proceedings under the call until a quorum has been found?

Mr. HENDERSON. The House could adjourn, or dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. PICKLER. No; it can not, because you are engaged in calling the roll. Now, you know that under the rules you can not interrupt the roll call for any purpose, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HENDERSON. Under the rule the roll, as the gentleman is aware, is called twice on any proposition. The second roll call is completed, and when it is then developed that there is no quorum present these proceedings are in order; but nothing in this rule prevents an adjournment.

Mr. PICKLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I do not care to differ with him, of course, but I think he is entirely wrong. This clause provides the time when further proceedings under the call may be dispensed with, that is, after the Sergeant-at-Arms shall have produced a majority of the members upon the floor. The House is kept here until the Sergeant-at-Arms succeeds in getting a majority of the members present, which may take any length of time, from one day to five days. Then, at that time, after he has secured the quorum, the last clause becomes operative, "and thereupon further proceedings under the call shall be considered as dispensed with." Until you reach that point you can not suspend proceedings under the call and can not move to adjourn because you are in the process of a roll call, and as I understand the rule a roll call can not be interrupted to move an adjournment.

It seems to me that the practical effect of this amendment might be to put ourselves at times into a very serious difficulty. We will find ourselves here sometimes, when the matter pending is of no general importance and members will be out, thus running up against a snag when no quorum is present, and the Sergeant-at-Arms will be compelled to go around and try to bring in sufficient members to make a quorum to enable the House to adjourn. Under such circumstances we would be kept here an indefinite time.

Mr. HENDERSON. My friend must not get this provision confused with the other provision for getting a quorum by a call of the House. That is still preserved in the rules. This is only to provide a method of getting a quorum when we come to a vote on a question, and is a convenient way of accomplishing that result. After we have called the roll twice, and we fail to get a quorum, we send the Sergeant-at-Arms or his officers to bring in the absent members. But nothing in the rule prevents an adjournment if it be deemed just; and the only object of this rule is to get a quorum when a vote is being taken on any particular proposition, whatever it may be.

Mr. PICKLER. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken; but let me go further. Of course, if you could get back to paragraph 2 of this rule, under the circumstances the gentleman suggests, then you could move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. But there is no such provision under this new clause 4 which we propose to adopt. Of course, in construing these rules you could not refer to a general clause, like clause 2, when you have a specific clause, 4, bearing on this particular question. The only way under paragraph 4 to dispense with proceedings under the call is to wait until members come in and get a quorum, and then dispose of the matter at hand and adjourn.

Mr. HENDERSON. If my friend will allow me, this provision, which he says provides for dispensing with further proceedings under the call in this particular proceeding to obtain a quorum, does not interfere with any privilege of moving to adjourn when a quorum is not present.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not agree with the gentleman in his construction of the language.

Mr. WANGER. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to ask him a question in this connection? What would be the effect of this provision if the pending question were a motion to suspend the rules? It says the question, whatever it may be, "shall be decided as the majority of those voting shall appear." What effect will this have on the motion to suspend the rules, which require a two-thirds vote under the provisions of another rule?

Mr. HENDERSON. That comes under an entirely different rule. That condition is governed by the general rule affecting motions to suspend the rules.

Mr. PICKLER. There is another question I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa. How will this affect the matter when the Committee of the Whole rises for the want of a quorum?

Mr. DINGLEY. This does not apply to proceedings in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PICKLER. But the Committee of the Whole often has to rise for the want of a quorum. What would be the effect under this rule?

Mr. HENDERSON. But this is a proceeding in the House, not in committee.

Mr. PICKLER. But the rule provides that when a quorum fails to vote "on any question."

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, but that is in the House.

Mr. PICKLER. It does not say so.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. But that is what it means.

Mr. PICKLER. It does not confine it to the House at all.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays could not be ordered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PICKLER. But this provides arbitrarily that the call of the roll shall be had and the yeas and nays entered upon the Journal.

Mr. DINGLEY. But not in Committee of the Whole. That is in the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly; this is entirely a House proceeding.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, another question. I am not satisfied with the gentleman's answer as to the practical working. There is another question I should like to ask: You have a special order. For instance, an Election Committee is to have four hours' debate, and then a vote. At the end of two hours' debate it is found that the House is without a quorum. The question before the House is whether a certain member shall be seated. You have a special order for four hours' debate. At the end of two hours a quorum is found not to be present, and you go through this process. You bring that question on to a vote in two hours, necessarily, under this rule.

Mr. DALZELL. It does not apply except when a vote is being taken on a question. This does not apply at all to the case where the question of a quorum is raised in any other way than by a vote.

Mr. PICKLER. That does not say so. It may be the construction, but it is a long way from saying anything of that kind.

Mr. DALZELL. The first section says, "Whenever a quorum fails to vote" on any special question. It is made for that special purpose and applies in no other case.

Mr. HENDERSON. The gentleman is confusing it with the other part of this rule.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman, I hope, does not think that there should be a preamble to each rule that "this is a rule to apply to the House, and not to the Committee of the Whole."

Mr. PICKLER. But we have another provision that says that as far as practicable the rules of the House shall apply to proceedings in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DALZELL. This is not practicable, because we have no yeas and nays in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, upon an examination of the case—and it is the celebrated one which adjudged the constitutionality of the rule adopted to ascertain the presence of a quorum—I find the decision to be as I supposed. The court says:

> As appears from the Journal at the time this bill passed the House, there was a majority present, a quorum, and the House was authorized to transact any and all business. It was in a condition to act on the bill if it desired. The other branch of the question is whether, a quorum being present, the bill received a sufficient number of votes. And here the general rule of all parliamentary bodies is that when a quorum is present, the act of a majority of the quorum is the act of the body itself. This has been the rule for all time, except so far as in any given case the terms of the organic act under which the body is assembled have prescribed specific limitations; as, for instance, in those States where the constitution provides that a majority of all the members elected to either house shall be necessary for the passage of any bill. No such limitation is found in the Federal Constitution, and therefore the general law of such bodies obtains.

The court here says, as plainly as words would enable it, that it requires a majority of a quorum to pass a bill. I think it intended to go further even than this. I think it intended to make a distinction between "a quorum," which is a bare majority of this body, and "the quorum," which is any number in attendance greater than a majority. In other words, since the admission of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ALLEN], the membership of this House is 357, and 179 constitute "a quorum," but "the quorum" here on this occasion is not less than 250. Notwithstanding the presence of 250 members, "a quorum" is still 179, but "the quorum" is something like 250.

If the theory of the gentleman from Iowa is correct, 76 members may enact a bill into a law. For instance, if 180 members were to appear, but 30 of them, not being informed upon the question, or for any other reason, should decline to vote, and the vote should be taken as between the other 150, 76 might vote affirmatively and 74 might vote in the negative; and yet, under the proposed rule, the bill would pass, though it received neither a majority of those present nor a majority of a quorum. Or, to put a more extreme case, if 179 members were present and 164 should decline to vote, 8 were to vote aye and 7 nay, 8 votes would pass a bill upon a recorded vote. It seems to me perfectly clear that this conflicts with the doctrine of the Supreme Court in the case of The United States vs. Bullin.

Mr. Speaker, I do not exactly recall the facts of that case, but I think I am not mistaken when I say that the Journal of the House shows that upon the passage of the act, the constitutionality of which was questioned, not only did a quorum appear, but that a majority of all those present voted affirmatively. Perhaps there were only 15 or 20 members who were noted as present and not voting.

The court sums up its decision on this branch of the case in these words:

> Summing up this matter, this law is found in the Secretary of State's Office properly authenticated. If we appeal to the Journal of the House we find that a majority of its members were present when the bill passed, a majority creating, by the Constitution, a quorum, with authority to act upon any measure; that the presence of that quorum was determined in accordance with a valid rule theretofore adopted by the House; and that of that quorum a majority voted in favor of the bill. It therefore legally passed the House, and the law as found in the office of the Secretary of State is beyond challenge.

But "that quorum" was formed, as appears from the records of the House, by the gentlemen who voted for the passage of the bill, together with the gentlemen who sat in their seats and refused to vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think you will find out that the rule proposed here does not require a quorum.

Mr. BAILEY. It requires only a majority of those voting.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does that decision raise the point?

Mr. BAILEY. It does not. It could not have been raised, because of the state of facts.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then it has no bearing on this question.

Mr. BAILEY. I think it has. It analogizes with this case, and must have a bearing upon it. The court declares positively, in discussing the manner of the passage of the bill the validity of which had been called in question, that a majority of "the quorum" was necessary to pass it, and the majority of "the quorum" means the majority of those who were present, whether their presence was ascertained by their responses on a roll call or by their presence being noted under the direction of the Speaker. That the Supreme Court had the distinction in their minds between "a quorum" and "the quorum" I think the decision itself leaves no room to doubt.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas hold that it is necessary that 89 persons at least should vote for every proposition that passes the House?

Mr. BAILEY. If it is a recorded vote, I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit to the gentleman from Texas whether there was a recorded vote or not makes no difference, because the Constitution attaches as much importance to the passage of a bill where there is no recorded vote as it does where there is a record.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that. But where there is no record to show the contrary, the court conclusively presumes that the action of Congress was regular and legal.

The SPEAKER. Then there ought not to be any record of any bill passed without 89 votes.

Mr. BAILEY. If there is, it would not be a valid law.

The SPEAKER. Yet for twenty years, under all administrations, we have seen thousands of them.

Mr. BAILEY. I have seen it frequently during my brief service here, but that does not make it right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs the pardon of the gentleman from Texas for interrupting him to make the suggestion that, having examined the matter somewhat carefully at various times, he finds that the court in making that decision perhaps decided that it was within the most extreme contention of the opponents, some people having contended that it is necessary to have a majority of a quorum voting. The court pointed it out in this case; but it was not necessary to discuss that question. They might have decided, had they come to the plain question of the body being constituted of the persons who participated in the presence of the rest of the body they were controlled by their votes, because the rest of the body being present, could have intervened and overruled them if they had so chosen; but, not having chosen to do so, it allowed 88 or any less number to pass a measure practically by their assent, because declining to participate was consent.

Mr. BAILEY. In reply to that I would say that the only purpose in ascertaining the presence of men who did not participate in the proceedings is to constitute a quorum which will enable the House to proceed with its business; but the capacity of the House to proceed with its business is one thing, and the result which it may reach is quite another. The presence of men who do not vote may enable the House to vote on a bill, but it still requires a majority of those present to pass a bill.

The SPEAKER. If that were the rule the Chair would be obliged to declare not passed every bill that had not received 89 votes.

Mr. BAILEY. I have seen bills passed when nobody had voted either way, but there being no record of a vote, those bills could not be successfully assailed.

I desire to call the attention of the Speaker and of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that throughout the entire discussion of the question the court everywhere says that a "majority of the quorum" is required. It first asserts that the House may constitute a quorum by ascertaining the presence of gentlemen who do not participate in its vote; that after their presence has been ascertained under the rule established by the House, then, the House being competent to transact its business, the next question arising is: Did the House lawfully transact its business? Did the bill pass? Now, whether it passed or not depended in the case at bar upon the question whether it had received the votes of a majority. A majority of whom? A majority of those voting or a majority of those present? The Supreme Court distinctly answers, "A majority of the quorum," and I am confident that "the quorum" is the membership of the House then attending its session. I can not believe that the Supreme Court use "the quorum" instead of "a quorum" without a purpose, because that tribunal usually chooses its language with reference to the subject under consideration and with great care.

But, Mr. Speaker, even if I am mistaken in supposing that the court intended to distinguish between "a quorum" and "the quorum," and even if it did not intend to declare that "a majority of those present" must vote in favor of a bill before it can pass, the proposed rule would still be obnoxious; because it is certain that the court has declared that "a majority of a quorum" is required to pass a bill, and this rule permits a majority of those voting to decide the question whether that majority constitutes a majority of a quorum or not. On this point the court's language is neither obscure nor doubtful. It plainly asserts that a majority of the quorum must vote affirmatively before a bill can pass, and it cites with approval no less than four decisions to the same effect. To my mind it is clear that the court would hold a law invalid which did not receive a majority of the votes present; and I do not see how, in the face of the opinion in The United States vs. Bullin, any man can doubt that the court would hold a law invalid that did not receive at least a majority of a quorum.

I am willing to venture whatever reputation I may have as a lawyer upon the statement that the Supreme Court will hold any law void which the Journals of this House show was passed by the votes of less than a majority of those present; and I will surrender my law license if that court ever sustains a law which the Journals of this House show did not receive a majority of a quorum.

I submit to the gentleman from Iowa that, at best, the rule is one of doubtful power, and why encounter that doubt when it can be obviated by eliminating the three words "of those voting," or by substituting the word "present" for the word "voting"?

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, by the Constitution a quorum of this body to do business consists of a majority of the members chosen. I have been here when the whole House consisted of 179 members, and the records showed that that was the total number chosen to the House of Representatives, and the acts of that Congress were as constitutional as those of any Congress that ever assembled. The same old question comes up here: How do you ascertain when a quorum is present? In the Fifty-first Congress our Democratic friends insisted that there was no way to ascertain that fact but by a viva voce vote of the members themselves, and the question arose whether the sense of sight was not as good evidence of the presence of visible objects as the sense of hearing. The House held that it was, and the present Speaker of this House (who was also Speaker of that House) occupies the proud position of being the only Speaker of the American Congress whose official acts were ever passed upon judicially by the Supreme Court of the United States.

That august tribunal, in a unanimous opinion that the McKinley Act, so called, was constitutional (the only disagreement being as to the reciprocity treaties attached to the bill), decided incidentally that the evidence derived from sight as to visible objects is as good if not better than that from the sense of hearing. But, Mr. Speaker, the Democratic party stood upon the doctrine that you must depend altogether upon the sense of hearing in such cases, and they vociferated loudly about it upon this floor and throughout the country. Now, it is not strange that the Democratic party should be partial to the sense of hearing, because for more than half a century that party has lived on hearsay. [Laughter.] They are unable to refer to anything in the history of our country, any action of the Democratic party that is worthy of commendation, except what took place under Jefferson and Jackson, both of whom have been dead for more than half a century. [Laughter.] The proposition presented to the American people by the Democratic party in Congress in 1861 was that the Congress was paralyzed and powerless to do business unless a majority of all the members who might have been legally elected to that Congress chose to attend and to answer to their names on the roll call. In the Fifty-first Congress they took substantially the same ground—that a member who was actually present could not be counted as part of a quorum to do business unless he chose to answer when called.

The Speaker decided that a member who, sitting on this floor, closes his lips when the rule of the House requires him to open them can be counted as a part of the quorum provided for by the Constitution, which is a majority of the members chosen to the Congress, whether they vote or not. If there were only 5 men voting and 200 men in their seats, a law passed by those 5 votes would be constitutional. Upon that issue a record was made up; it went to the Supreme Court, the record showing that those who were present constituted a quorum. The court decided that in such a case the action of a majority of those present can make a law valid, no matter what the number may be. A minority can not stop the wheels of Government. That has been tried here, and has failed. A minority can not stop the onward march of the legislation of the American people in these their council chambers. It has been settled, and settled forever, that the fact as to whether there are present in their seats a majority of the members chosen is to be ascertained by the sight of the Speaker, and by the Clerk on the call of the roll; and that, the presence of a quorum having been so ascertained, the men who vote in the affirmative, if they are more numerous than those who vote in the negative, carry the measure and enact a valid law. To allow a constitutional quibble to be set up to defeat the will of the American people, and to invalidate the action of their representatives, would be a strange commentary indeed upon republican government.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me advert for a moment to the confusion in which some of our friends seem to have involved themselves in regard to an adjournment in certain cases. Why, sir, the first great principle of parliamentary law—one that lies at the foundation of the whole system—is that a motion to adjourn is in order at any time. And when you adopt such a motion you necessarily leave the business unfinished. That is the case always. You may leave a call of the House unfinished. You may adjourn while your Sergeant-at-Arms is out looking through the country for absentees. What an idea, that five men may be compelled to sit here for two weeks until the Sergeant-at-Arms shall bring in absent members, on the ground that after a call of the House has been ordered, there can be no adjournment until it is finished! A motion to adjourn is always in order. That principle is necessary in a parliamentary body as a principle of self-preservation. It is a law that overrides all other principles of parliamentary law. It can not be destroyed by any arrangement of rules that you may choose to adopt. If it could be, you might tie yourselves up to starvation in these seats until a sufficient number of absent members had been brought in to make a majority of those chosen to seats in this body.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, the proposed rule is, in my judgment, subject to but one criticism, and that is that it would make it possible for a measure to be passed by a vote which would not equal a majority of a quorum of the House. The Supreme Court in the case which has been cited decided that as a matter of fact there had been in the case presented a quorum of the House present and that a majority of that quorum had voted affirmatively upon the measure under consideration. No other facts were passed upon by the court. As a legal proposition the court held that that was all that was required for the validity of the law. But the court did not decide, and I do not believe it would ever decide, that any measure can become a law unless it receives the affirmative vote of a majority of a quorum. In the opinion of the court in that case there is nothing to intimate that the court entertained any different view from that which I now express.

I do not agree that the Supreme Court intended to hold that a majority of those who are present must vote for the bill. Although the gentleman from Texas contends that such was the meaning of that decision, I do not think the court intended to go further than to say that if a quorum of the House were present (and by that the court meant a majority), and if more than one-half of that quorum should vote in favor of the bill, that fact would suffice under the Constitution to enact it into law.

But it will be possible under this rule as it is drawn for a measure to become a law by receiving a much smaller vote than that of one-half of a quorum. I do not believe that such a rule is justified by the decision of the Supreme Court or by any fair and just construction of the Constitution. What the court meant to hold, in my opinion, was that when more than one-half of the members of this House are present it is organized for the transaction of business. That (having in mind the facts of the case before the court) this quorum being present for the transaction of business, a bill which receives a majority of the votes of that quorum is properly passed. The court, as I have said, did not go further than that, and I do not believe it ever will. The rule here proposed is subject, therefore, to the objection I have stated. But I do not think it is subject to any other.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, there are more serious objections than one to the amendment which has been proposed by the majority of the Committee on Rules. I realize the importance of this question, because under the rules which we now adopt the business we may be called upon to do is to be transacted. Hence the importance of the rule is second only to the importance of the questions to be decided under it. I realize, therefore, that to the utmost of our ability we should strive to adopt that code of rules which will most certainly conduce to the full reflection here of the sentiments of those we represent and most efficiently subserve the public good. In doing this we have a chart that has heretofore generally been sufficient to guide the American Congress in its deliberations—the Constitution.

There is one provision of the proposed rule that it strikes me does not observe sufficiently that chart; and then in another clause there is a question of expediency involved, sufficient, I think, to justify us in rejecting the amendment. This is not a new amendment. Substantially the same amendment was proposed in this body some seventeen years ago. The committee constituted to report to the House the new rules, after deliberating on the question during the recess, was composed of the late President of the United States, Mr. Garfield, the late Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, and Mr. BLACKBURN of Kentucky. There might have been other members on the committee, but these I happen to remember, and when they brought in their deliberations this proposition was offered as an amendment. The present Speaker of this House made a speech against it so clear, so pointed, and so conclusive that I think it had not a little to do with the determination of the House not to accept this proposition. I thought then that his argument was conclusive. I believe yet that it was and is. I do not think that this proposition ought to be adopted, and if the House will bear with me I will briefly give my reasons for that conviction.

The Constitution of the United States declares how the yeas and nays of this body shall be ordered. For more than one hundred years there has not been a rule adopted that attempted to abridge or in any manner to enlarge that provision of the Constitution. This rule, in its practical operation, will, in my judgment, necessarily make possible not only a different standard by which to gauge the rights of members of the House to have the yeas and nays recorded, but it changes the constitutional method. The Constitution is so familiar to every member here that it is hardly necessary for me to quote it, but inasmuch as the provision in question is a brief one, I will do so. It provides:

> And the yeas and nays of the members of either House, on any question, shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered upon the Journal.

"One-fifth of those present." This is not simply a proposition to defend a majority against the captious, petulant, or unreasonable demands for record votes, but it is the provision to defend the minority also, and give them the right to have the yeas and nays recorded in order that there may be a record to enable the people to judge of their faithfulness and action.

But let us see whether there is not an entirely different method provided in this rule from that which I have quoted. I read from the proposed rule itself. Bear in mind the provision of the Constitution.

> 4. Whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question, and a quorum is not present, and objection is made for that cause, there shall be a call of the House, and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall forthwith proceed to bring in absent members, and the yeas and nays on the pending question shall at the same time be considered as ordered.

"The yeas and nays shall at the same time be considered as ordered." How? By the rising of one-fifth of the members present and demanding it, as the Constitution requires? No, not at all. All that is necessary in order that the yeas and nays shall be ordered and taken under this rule is that there shall not be a quorum present, that the point of the absence of a quorum shall be suggested, and then by operation of the rule, not of the Constitution, without anyone rising except the man who makes the point of order, the yeas and nays shall be taken. Even the one man making the point of "no quorum" may neither have "desired" nor demanded the yeas and nays; still they are taken—taken when nobody demanded it. It will be seen that this is an entirely different rule and a distinct method of making a record from that provided by the Constitution. So much for the constitutional infraction.

Now, as to the question of the expediency of the rule. Let us see for a moment as to that. Let the House remember in the first place that this is not a proposition to do away with the stringent and harsh provisions of the rules of the Fifty-first Congress. I believed then that these rules were entirely unnecessary, and I still believe so. As vivid as is my memory of that Congress, I may candidly say that I have not seen a Congress assembled that could be more safely trusted with the interests of the people if left unhampered. I realize, Mr. Speaker, the fact that we must have rules. But I also realize that they must be founded, first, on the Constitution, second, on common sense, and third, that members of the House are able to be intrusted with the management of affairs, and keep out of the fire if left alone. [Laughter.]

Further, under all the systems of rules heretofore adopted, when there is the suggestion of the absence of a quorum, a member can only be arrested by a motion for that purpose being put to the House and carried. But under this proposed rule a member is dealt with as though he were a recusant witness or a criminal or a convict. Under this rule—and I challenge contradiction of the assertion—it is not only possible, but it is the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms, without waiting for an order, without members voting that it shall be done, when the absence of a quorum is ascertained—it is his duty to go out and, without further orders, to arrest and bring in the members. For my own part, while I am not often absent from the House, or try not to be, I do not want any officer of this Government, without any authority from somebody or some authority besides a rule of this House, to order my arrest, to take me into custody, and bring me before the bar of the House as a criminal.

I am loath to believe that when the House considers the seriousness of this question it will thus bind and tie itself. I am slow to believe that the members of this House are willing to admit that day by day they ought to be arrested and brought here without an order from the House made at the time and for the purpose. I do not say without authority, but I do say without considerate authority, and without sufficient authority. The rules control the officers of the House; and when the members read this rule carefully—I will not take the time to reread it—they will see that when a quorum fails to appear and there is a call of the House, not as the old rule provided, but under a new system, it is made the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to go out and arrest a member and bring him in.

The present rule, or the rule of the Fifty-first Congress, provided that the member should be "retained" when brought here; and there was an effort made to enforce that. But a little episode at that far door, set in motion by the not very small foot of a considerable-sized man, Mr. Kilgore, of Texas, broke down that rule, and there never was any attempt to enforce it any more. But you are to have the Sergeant-at-Arms diurnally and nightly on your track. If it happens that at a Friday night session, when there is not a quorum—and we all know that at those sessions there is seldom a quorum—any one man makes the point of "no quorum" and there is a call of the House, then, without an order made for that purpose any further than the rule, the officer is put upon your track and you are brought back here under arrest. Now, I do not believe that the House ought to adopt such a rule. I myself am sincere in the conviction that it is such a degradation of this House itself as the members ought not to inflict upon this body. Why, listen to the provision of the old rule. After describing the manner of the call, it adds:

> The doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested.

That is sensible and practical. This is harsh and impractical. But it had to be a direct order; while here, in the day of grace January 10, 1896, we propose to adopt a rule that shall make subject to arrest every member of this body from now until the 4th of March, 1897, when his term of office shall expire.

I for one have witnessed with regret that very perceptible decadence of the individual power of the members of the House of Representatives in the last ten or fifteen years and the accumulation of power into fewer hands. It is claimed by many that that is necessary from the increased number and the multiplicity of business. I know that it is very important to expedite business here. But we have only to look back and see the history of different things upon which this House has legislated under harsh rules to see the effect that it has had upon the legislation. By that means the McKinley bill was passed without due consideration. Under that method what was known as the "force bill" was passed, and many other obnoxious measures during the Fifty-first Congress. And even since this Congress assembled two important measures—one providing for the issuance of bonds and another for the imposition of forty-odd millions of dollars of taxes per annum—were put through this House under rules that were so framed and so adopted that it was impossible for any member to offer an amendment. The only remedy is to vote down the rule when it is presented, and then, in some instances, you do not know what the measure is. It has not been fully considered. The importance of voting it down is not known.

Members are slow, when they have the responsibility of the government of the House on their hands, to antagonize what seems to be the most expeditious method of disposing of business. They will not, therefore, vote down a special rule even if it is objectionable. I have felt called upon to say this much concerning the impropriety of the adoption of this rule. With calm, deliberate action on public measures the American people have nothing to fear. But when haste supplants care, and debate and amendment are not allowed, they may be justly apprehensive.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

The SPEAKER. Pending that motion, the Chair would like to entertain a request for the reprint of a bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY] has requested that the bill which he sends to the Clerk's desk (H. R. 2751) to provide for the construction of a bridge or tunnel across Niagara River be reprinted for the correction of errors simply. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 19) for filling vacancy on Board of Regents, Smithsonian Institution; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 60) concerning the completion of the United States court-house and post-office building at Mankato, Minn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WILBER, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ANDERSON, for to-day and to-morrow, on account of important business.

To Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. FOSS, for ten days, on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. HENDERSON (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. BOWERS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3018) to amend the act approved March 3, 1891, granting the right of way upon the public lands for reservoir and canal purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 26); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:
